Italian Renaissance will be followed as the interior architectural designs. Ivory, old rose and gold will be used for the colors. There will be impressive draperies designed to match the color scheme and the remainder of the house. The walls will be alternated in color effect, with tapestry panels that will afford a relief to the eye, but at the same time a glimpse effect that appeals to harmony.

The lighting system will be what is known as the concealed type. Those lights, by gradation, will be dimmed and brought out as a number being presented calls for. There will be no direct change from darkness to full light, but one will be unconscious of the raising or lowering of them. There will be four different colors of lights used, so that the house may be bathed in blue and then swathed in pink. It is the policy of all Allen theatres to give the closest attention to the comfort of their patrons and therefore an amount larger than is usually spent in the construction of most theatres will be devoted to the system of heating and ventilation. This system will be so arranged as to provide every patron with thirty cubic feet of fresh air per minute. In the summer time this air will be cooled, reducing the temperature some twenty degrees below the street; and in the winter will be distributed over the heated pipes assuring the same temperature in all parts of the house. The oil burning system of heating will be used, so that Montreal folk need never be worried about their comfort in Allen's Palace Theatre, by any shortage of coal.

The very greatest attention will be given to music. There will be installed the largest pipe organ ever built for a Canadian theatre. There will be an orchestra of about twenty-five pieces under the direction of an eminent musician, and this orchestra will accompany the pictures and special musical scores, and will afford the local and visiting artists who appear at the Allen's Palace appropriate settings.

Messrs. Juel and J. J. Allen are building their Palace theatre with the idea of affording Montreal people the same in entertainment of the silent drama and music. They have given direction to the architect, Mr. C. Howard Crane, who is one of the leading theatre architects of the entire world, to put into the house his best ideas. The Allen's recently opened their new theatre in Winnipeg, which has been hailed by theatre owners everywhere as the perfection in cinema construction. Mr. Crane is responsible for the statement that the Allen theatre in Montreal will even surpass the Winnipeg house in luxury and comfort. (Ed. note: The Winnipeg House was described in the March 6 issue. It will be possibly late summer or fall before the house is opened, because the contractors have been told that the essence of excellence is necessary.)

It was only thirteen years ago that Mr. B. Allen with his two sons, Juel and Jay J. started their first motion picture theatre in Brantford. Pictures were then being exhibited regularly only in Montreal and Toronto, also the larger cities of the Dominion. It was at a time that most people looked upon the motion picture as a pastime and the far greater portion of those who went into the business of showing them did so with the idea of getting the quick profits, before the fad died out. They had no idea of conducting their theatres on the lines of other sound business undertakings. But one of the chief elements in the success of the Alens has been their vision. They saw ahead that the motion picture had come to stay and so at the very start of their career they laid down two rules that have remained a part of their business creed, that none but the clearest pictures obtainable should be shown in their theatres, and that the patron must be pleased no matter what the trouble or expense.

Such policies were so successful that there came a second and a third theatre in Brantford and then these were extended into a chain of theatres through smaller cities in Western Ontario. However, at that time the distribution of motion picture film was entirely unorganized. They were compelled often to go in person to Buffalo or Detroit to get the film to show, often to make long trips through the snow at great personal discomfort. They were impressed with the idea of going into the business of motion picture film and they did this so successfully that they were attracted by the virgin field opened by the Prairie Province. So they sold out their Ontario theatres and moved to Calgary where they established the headquarters of their film service, This was an immediate success from the start, and rapidly broadened.

It was only during the summer that the announcement was made of their "invasion" of the States. The character of their theatres and the quality of their presentations had spread all over the country south of the border and invitations were sent them to bring their quality of amusement to the principal cities. They have already started work in theatres in Cleveland and Detroit that represent the investment of several millions of dollars, and have contracts for the erection of houses in a number of other principal cities. But they have by no means dropped their plans for Canada, which call for a theatre at every point of importance in the Province. (Continued on page 3527)
Some Beautiful Spots to be Found in the Salt Lake City Gem
The Gem Theatre Has Unique Loges

The Gem Theatre in Salt Lake City is a strictly family theatre. That was the idea the owners and builders had in mind when it was built and that is the result as turned out to them by the contractor and decorators. Nothing can show this so well as the illustrations in this issue. The staircase for example has been designed and decorated similar to those ordinarily found in the average home. There is nothing theatrical about it. It differs greatly from the grand staircase of the usual motion picture house.

One other illustration shows the Divan Floor from which the patron can see the picture while.

One other illustration shows the Divan Floor with its sumptuous easy chairs and davenports. Imagine if you can, a good picture from such a viewpoint as this and while reclining in comfortable chairs of this type. Could anything be added to make the patron more comfortable?

The woodwork in this theatre is finished in old ivory with some rose tints to give a pleasing contrast. One of the most pleasing effects is the "long distance phonograph," by means of which a single phonograph transmits its music through hidden tubes about the house. Six sound stations are located in the walls, each capable of being isolated, and the music is carried swinging across the auditorium without break or tone change. Special provision has been made for theatre parties and rocking chairs have been placed on the mezzanine floor supplanting the regulation theatre chairs.

Randolph Theatre Well Equipped with Lobby Frames

The new State Street Lobby of Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Randolph Theatre in Chicago is a work of art, its exquisite plausiveness being what makes it most attractive. The floor is a fine example of tilers' work and the walls are Italian marble extending fourteen feet in height, surmounted by panelled tapestry. Gorgeously hand-carved marble urns, settees and benches are found on either side of the lobby and in the center is a carved electric fountain of artistic design.

One of the most attractive features in the lobby is the solid mahogany Bilt-Rite easels, the product of the Consolidated Portrait & Frame Company of Chicago. Each easel contains exquisite art works and oil paintings of the current and coming productions and makes a beautiful appearance with the marble walls of the lobby as a background and adds the finishing touch to the artistic elegance of the Randolph's new entrance.

Incidentally, the Randolph is the only motion picture playhouse in Chicago and the middle west having two separate entrances, one being on Randolph Street and the other on State.

union. These being announced as rapidly as sites can be secured and the plans prepared.

The Allens now have in actual operation the Allen, Beach, Beaver Block, Dunforth, Royal, St. Clair and Christie in Toronto; the Allen and New Grand in Montreal; Auditorium and Allen in Quebec; Regent and Russell in Ottawa; the Temple in Hamilton; the Majestic in London; Allen in Cobourg; Allen in Peterboro; Allen in Brantford; Imperial and Allen in Kitchener; Lyric in Cobalt; Windsor in Windsor; Allen, Province Dominion, Gaiety, Bijou and Rex in Winnipeg; Allen and Bijou in Calgary, Allen, Rex and Rose in Regina; Allen, Monarch and Imperial in Edmonton; Allen in Moose Jaw; Allen in Brandon; Lyric in Swift Current; Royal Victoria in Victoria; Rex and Globe in Vancouver; Liberty in Trail; Stateland in Nelson; Allen in Stratford; Allen in Yorlton and Allen in Paris.

In addition there are under construction and to be opened within a period varying from one to six months, the Parkdale and College in Toronto; Allen in Halifax; the Allen in London, Allen in Windsor, Allen in St. Catharines; Allen in Vancouver and a number of others for which the locations have not been definitely announced. It may be safely stated that the building operations of the Allens for the current year run into ten millions of dollars.

Mr. B. Allen, president of the Allen Theatre Enterprises, has largely retired from active work and has left the management of the now vast business in the hands of his sons, John and J. J., two remarkable young men whose work is known to day wherever motion pictures exist. Their personal enterprise and the sound judgment which they have used has been fully recognized and the motion picture world knows them today as commanding figures in the entire field of exhibition.

To Make Aisles Safe for Patrons

From the workshop of the Lucas Theatre Supply Company comes a new light fixture for use on the sides of aisles. The illustration gives a good idea of the appearance of the device. It is arranged to be bolted on the under side of the chair arm at intervals of about 12 feet. The fixture is 5½" long and 2½" square. The entire device is enameled black with a baked finish but special finishes can be supplied on order. A 10 watt lamp supplies sufficient illumination for the ordinary installation. The trade name for the article is the SAFETITE.
T. F. Uhlemann Is One of the Pioneers of the Industry

He Was Turning Out Projection Machines Back in 1897

T. F. UHLEMMANN, works manager of the Nicholas Power Co., lives with his wife and his boys at Richmond Hill, L. I. He is proud of his family but running a close second in his affections is the Power's Projector. While making no claim that he is the father of motion picture machines Mr. Uhlemann has a right to call himself an uncle or some sort of relative.

In the prehistoric period of the motion picture industry Mr. Uhlemann was making projectors in Europe, turning out one out of the question. The about 1897 and the machine was usually made according to specifications for some professor, who, even at that early date, saw the possibilities of motion pictures in connection with lectures. The work, of course, was actually done in an experimental shop and nearly all by hand.

In spite of this they were practical and from these Mr. Uhlemann acquired much information which was of real assistance to him later on. In 1903 he joined the Power's forces and has been with them ever since.

In 1904 Power's 3 and 4 were being made and the whole plant was as large as Mr. Uhlemann's present office. The first Power's plant was in Nassau Street, New York City, but was soon moved to Jacob Street, where it is still retained as one of the smaller factories of the Nicholas Power Co. Within six months after Mr. Uhlemann secured his first position with Power's he was made foreman and has been in full charge of the manufacturing end of the business since 1915.

Mr. Uhlemann is responsible for many of the improvements that have been made in Power's Projectors and the method of manufacturing them. At one very early period the Power's and Edison mechanism was attached to a wooden table board and anyone at all acquainted with the Motion picture machines will know that wood in connection with projectors is now absolutely out of the question. In fact all parts are not merely of metal but all metals are carefully selected for the purpose for which they are intended. The mills supplying metals furnish a scientifically developed product which must be adapted to the particular part in which it is to be used. Nearly ten years ago Mr. Uhlemann saw the advantages of many-gauge bronze and tungsten chromium steel for the wearing and strain bearing parts of the Power's Projector and these have since been used in all machines.

He has also insisted upon the use of specially automatic machinery whenever these could be used efficiently. The plant of the Nicholas Power Co. is well equipped with the latest machinery for turning out the delicate and complicated mechanism used in projectors, and all this has been installed while Mr. Uhlemann has been connected with the Power's company. The inspection department of Power's was organized and developed by him and it has always been one of his hobbies. Every part of every machine is carefully inspected at every stage of manufacture and the liquid gauge which registers within one-tenthousandth of an inch is used almost exclusively for inspection. The pin cross, which requires twenty operations in the manufacture, also receives twenty inspections. Every stage of manufacture of every part is inspected in just this way. This system is extremely characteristic of Mr. Uhlemann's methods and explains why he has held his present important position so many years.

Some of the incidents related by Mr. Uhlemann referred to the early days of the film industry when almost every vacant store in the United States was being turned into a movie house. It was not unusual at that time to have unlined orders on hand for a thousand machines, and exhibitors were pleading for them. C. B. Kleine, brother of Geo. Kleine, came down one day with two boys and carried a machine away on their backs. Projectors were lighter then than they are now, but this was some job for one man and two boys. The machine was urgently needed and this was the only way apparently it could be got in a hurry. We are reminded of an incident which came under our notice some years ago during the boom days of Goldfield, when fortunes were being made on mining leases and machinery was none too plentiful. One mining company with a very short lease on a very valuable claim had a complete equipment for mining sent by express from Chicago. But it was worth the expense.

Every industry has its boom days and there was just such a period when the movies looked like a sure road to wealth for the exhibitor with small capital. Many of these pioneers have passed on to other fields but some of them are still with us. Mr. Uhlemann is still a young man and has many years of usefulness before him. He has been a pioneer and important pathfinder in a great industry. The part he has played in developing the Power's Projector should not be overlooked, for the present splendid reputation, nationally and internationally, of this machine is in no small degree due to his great experience, energy, ability and enterprise. We think T. F. Uhlemann may be saluted as one of the real pioneers of the motion picture industry.

Chamberlain Amusement Enterprises Buy Opera House

L. J. Chamberlain, president of the Chamberlain Amusement Enterprises, announces the purchase of the Shamokin, (Pa.) Opera House for the sum of $100,000. With the addition of this theatre the number of houses under the control of the corporation is increased to 9, with options on a number of others.

Ventilation of Theatres Discussed

Another paper having to do with the construction and equipment of new motion picture theatres has been announced for the forthcoming meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. This paper will be by Mr. O. K. Dyer, on the subject of "Heating and Ventilation of Theatres."

The author will cover the importance of an ample fresh air supply and the physical effects of humidity and temperatures. He will take up the various methods of introducing the air supply, the apparatus necessary and the cost of installing an apparatus.

There will also be some space given to the benefits to be derived from mechanical ventilation and also to the cooling effect obtainable without refrigeration.
Presently Every Seat Will Be Taken

This is known as a comfortable, airy, and attractive theatre. It succeeds because it pleases.

Its air is ever pure; yet no draft, no sudden variation, no noise ever occurs to make the individual wish he had gone somewhere else.

Sturtevant

withdraws all used and impure air, at the same time gently circulates fresh, purified air in every part of the theatre—the auditorium, corridors, offices, retiring rooms, and lobbies.

Its flow of air is positive because there is an active, induced in-flow and out-flow. Positive circulation means efficiency in double proportion. Nothing is left to chance or roundabout circulation theories.

Sturtevant Positive Ventilation Systems are proved by those who make them and approved by those who use them.

Our Weekly List of New Theatres Shows an Increase in Construction

Nineteen States Are Represented in the Report

ALABAMA
Lufkin—The Lee Amusement Company has purchased the Berringer building on the corner of Broad and Emiha Streets, which will be fitted up for an up-to-date moving picture house.

CALIFORNIA
Apa, (Apa Co.) Knox, Ehrincfield & Gordon, proprietors of the Empire Theatre, announce the proposed theatre, the Orpheum, to be built at the corner of First and Randolph Street. This building will cost approximately $150,000.

CONNECTICUT
Middleton—Extensive alterations and repairs are being made on the Princess Theatre by Salvatore Abaron and Charles A. Anderson, Managers. New Haven—Plans are being prepared for a modern moving picture theatre at Washington Avenue and Lunes Street. Edward Bassett is the local contractor and plans are being prepared by Cella Valle & Veve, contractors. The theatre will seat 1500 people and will cost about $50,000.

KENTUCKY
Owensboro—The buildings on Frederick Street, formerly occupied as a whiskey house, are being converted into a moving picture and vaudeville theatre under the management of George A. Biech.

Princeton—R. J. Wells of the Savoy Theatre is enlarging his seating capacity by the addition of a large balcony.

KANSAS
Wichita—Arthur Ford, Manager and owner of the Maple Theatre, has obtained an option on the site at the Southwest corner of Emporia and William Streets, on which it is his intention to construct a theatre. This theatre is to have a seating capacity of 2200 persons, and will be designed by Lamb and Lamb, New York architects. The entire project on this site will involve an expenditure of about a million dollars.

MAINE
Cornish—A community theatre is planned for Cornish by officers of the Cornish Board of Trade. Austin W. Pease has been employed as architect. The seating capacity is to be about 500 persons.

MASSACHUSETTS
Boston—Plans for a million dollar development of the property on Washington Street, opposite the South South Meeting House, were made known recently by George F. Crocker. These plans include a project for a large moving picture house to be erected by the Olympia Theatre interests.

Chicopee—Plans are being prepared for a new motion picture house at 22 Exchange Street by George P. Dout, architect. The house will have a seating capacity of 1000 persons and will cost about $25,000. The owner is Zigmund Satrozowski of Exchange Street.

Gloucester—The new Strand Theatre on Main Street opened Wednesday, March 3rd.

MICHIGAN
Muskegon—The Paul J. Schlossman Amusement Company announced the proposed construction of two big theatres. One at Muskegon Heights at an estimated cost of $100,000, and the other at Clay Avenue and Second Street, and will cost around $80,000. The theatre at Muskegon Heights is for motion pictures only and is to be erected at McKinney Avenue and Maffet Street. This theatre will be 125 feet by 100 feet, and will accommodate 1000 persons.

MISSOURI
Jefferson City—Plans have been completed for the construction of a new theatre on High Street. The building is to be constructed by the company which is headed by Howard Cook and Rube Armstrong.

MONTANA
Butte—Plans have been received for a new theatre in Mitchell Block for the erection of a $100,000 moving picture theatre. The building will be 75x100 feet, and will have a seating capacity of 900 persons. Jens Hansen, Manager of the Orpheum Theatre, is pushing this project and Bridgel & Van House of Butte are the architects.

NORTH CAROLINA
Statesville—The Morrison Building on Broad Street is being remodeled for a modern motion picture theatre. The building has been leased by A. D. Van Deburg of Baltimore and Atlanta. It is expected that the new theatre will be open about April 1st.

OHIO
Akron—Incorporation papers were issued to the Akron Enterprises Company with a capital stock of $275,000. This company intends to erect a six story building on Main Street to be used for theatre and office building. It is intended to arrange a theatre auditorium to seat 1000 persons. C. A. Barbian is President of the company.

OREGON
Portland—Julius Sax has leased the new Grand Theatre property in Sixth Street, and after renovation and improvements, will conduct a moving picture theatre.

SOUTH DAKOTA
Emery—A new theatre is being constructed here to have a seating capacity of about 400 persons.

WISCONSIN
Fennimore—John W. Bledding is having plans prepared for a new theatre which will have a seating capacity of about 650 persons.

WASHINGTON
Stanwood—Alterations have been completed on the Folly Theatre and the house was open to the public on February 15th. 1920.

Stanwood—Construction work on a new theatre building, The Ideal, for Oscar Ruth, is well under way.

It Didn’t Happen in the “Movies”

This is a real live hornets’ nest, fully occupied only a short time before the picture was taken, the man with the real is in dead earnest and the machine, as shown in the illustration, is a real Sturtevant Vacuum Cleaner of that type close to the school window for comfort. There were a number of methods of handling the situation but none seemed to be perfect; there was always a chance that some of the fiery inmates might escape, which would offer a stunging rebuke to the procedure.

The always efficient Sturtevant however solved the problem. It was called into service and quickly drew all the winged visitors into the dust receptacle.

The Fabrikoid Process adds beauty and long life to fabrics; some heavy and rugged, others dainty as linen—all pliable, scuff-proof, stain-proof and water-proof.

—just soap and water keep it sanitary and beautiful

No fear of germs, dust or grime if your seats are upholstered in Fabrikoid; just wash it—it's waterproof; it never absorbs moisture.

And there are other marked advantages. Fabrikoid is made in colors to match any decorative motif; it may be stretched tight or pleated; it is stain-proof and scuff-proof, and it always retains its original beauty.

Persist on Fabrikoid in your new theatre, or, if it's time to re-upholster, have it done in Fabrikoid, by all means.

Decorations of Picker's New Rio Theatre Have Caused Considerable Comment

But Skill Was Required to Carry Out the Scheme Without Overdoing the Effects Strived For

There is a constant attempt on the part of motion picture theatre owners to strive to create most elaborate and expensive interiors. Since there is always grave danger of overdoing these effects, an artist of rare ability must always be selected. In the case of the interior decorations of the new Rio theatre on upper Broadway, New York, Mr. William Eckart, father of theatre decorations in this country, was in charge of the work.

The decorations at the Rio theatre consist of brilliant gold and metal effects, intermingling a small series of black ornaments, surrounded by blue, green and golden glazes. In creating this color scheme the artist strove to put the audience in a mystified atmosphere and still, leaning towards a restful feeling.

As one enters the auditorium of this theatre, one is amazed at the richness of the interior. The feet hit soft, velvety, blue carpets; the eyes strike the color spectrum on walls and ceiling everywhere, and still all is refined and cozy. Vouches for its practical use and says its efficiency and economy of operation has been demonstrated beyond doubt.

The Vallen machine is electrically operated and can be controlled from two points, either in the operator's booth or from the stage. Only one button is used in switching the electric current on and off. The machine not only automatically controls the current which serves as a protection for the screen or for dividing photoplay offerings into various periods, but can be used to control such lights as are necessary during intermissions. The fact that the machine can be controlled from the projection booth means the saving of labor time and adds efficiency to the showing of pictures as the curtain, screen and lights can thereby be controlled at the will of the operator. The advantages of such co-ordination can readily be seen. The machine can be manufactured for about $300 and the installation cost is said to range from $25 to $50. The Company manufacturing the machine is prepared to back the offering with a guarantee of service. It occupies a space three feet long, one foot wide and one foot high when installed.

A Theatre Organ "Wonder" in Complemnet

Some idea of the amount of material and the work involved in installing and erecting a modern motion picture theatre organ can be gained from a report received from the new Colonial recently opened in Tacoma, Wash.

More than 50,000 feet of wiring was necessary to connect up the various pieces of apparatus on the Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Organ at this theatre. Everything is worked by electricity which accounts for this tremendous length of cable.

There are 3200 pipes arranged in several swell boxes ranging from 10 x 19 to 16 x 11 feet. There is also a Tibra, which is a special set of pipes developed by the Wurlitzer Co., especially for motion picture theatres. Included in the array of instruments at the back and call of the organist are drums, cymbals, bird whistles, cathedral chimes, oboe, violin, xylophone, glockenspiel, vox humana, flute and piano.

Over $90.00 a Week His Average

Another Theatre Owner Tells How This Machine Pays

"I have operated two of your Butter-Kist Machines for two years and will say that they are the best money-makers I have. Have averaged over $90.00 a week. I recommend the Butter-Kist machine to any one operating a picture house or vaudeville show," (Written to us by theatre manager in West Virginia. Name gladly given on request.)

"We were very much surprised at the amount of business our Butter-Kist Machine did from the very outset.... And business has steadily increased. In one month we did a business of $597.00," (Written to us by drug store located in Cleveland, Ohio. Name gladly given on request.)

The famous machine that manufactures Butter-Kist Pop Corn and sells Roasted and Salted Peanuts.

$600.00 to $3,120 From a Little Waste Space

Pays Four Ways

1. Motion makes people stop and look.
2. Coating fragrance makes them buy.
3. Toasty flavor brings trade for blocks.
4. Stimulates all store sales or theatre attendance.

The Butter-Kist Pop Corn and Peanut Machine brings new profits and new trade to stores and theatres.

We have the actual figures to prove that the Butter-Kist Machine pays from $600 to $3,120 a year net profit. This means an extra $600 to $3,120 in cash profits from the use of a little waste space, 20 lb. by 32 in.

But that is not all you can count on making with the Butter-Kist Machine. It draws trade. It multiples all your other lines. It will amaze you to see the full possibilities. Let us tell you all that this wonderful machine means to you. We'll send you proof of profits, photos of stores with the machine, etc.—all free and post paid.
Practical Electricity—VI
Study Lessons for the Projectionist

A n electric circuit is the path in which the current flows and is distinguished according to whether it is a series circuit, a parallel or multiple circuit, or a complex circuit which is a combination of series and parallel connections.

When several pieces of apparatus are connected so that the current has a single path then they are said to be connected in series and the circuit is known as a series circuit. In a series circuit the current flowing in any part of the circuit flows through each piece of apparatus connected in succession so that the same current is connected in any part of the circuit would register the same.

A typical series circuit is shown in Fig. 10 in which three resistances are connected together along the terminals of a battery. When resistances are connected in series the total resistance of the circuit is equal to the sum of the separate resistances.

As illustrated in Figure 10 the potential of the series of batteries is 6 volts and the values of the resistances are 1, 2, and 3 ohms and we wish to find the current which will flow in the circuit.

If we neglect the internal resistance of the batteries and the resistance of the conductor, the combined resistance is 1 + 2 + 3 or 6 ohms.

Then from Ohm's Law 1 equals the current

which will flow in the circuit is 1 ampere.

Now since we know the current flowing in the circuit to be 1 ampere we can find the drop around the separate parts of the circuit. From Ohm's Law E equals 1 times R. Then the difference in potential or drop around R₁ is the current times the resistance of that section or 1 ampere times 1 ohm which gives 1 volt. Similarly the drop around R₂ is 1 ampere times 2 ohms or 2 volts and around R₃ 1 ampere times 3 ohms or 3 volts.

Also in a series circuit the sum of the drops in potential around the separate parts of the circuit is equal to the applied voltage to the whole circuit of 1 volt + 2 volts + 3 volts equals 6 volts or the applied voltage exerted by the series of batteries.

An arc circuit shown by Fig. 11 for a projection lamp is a series circuit. Thus if we have a 110 volt D. C. supply voltage and wish to obtain 40 amperes at a 50 volt drop across the arc then we would find the required series resistance necessary for the circuit as follows:

The drop in voltage necessary that an ammeter in order to keep drop across the arc at 50 volts is 110 - 50 or 60 volts. Then the value of the resistance should be from Ohm's Law

\[ R = \frac{E}{I} \]

R equals or equals 1.5 ohms which is the necessary grid resistance for the circuit. In order to change this resistance depending on the variation of the carbons and the setting or length of arc the resistance is usually connected with several leads so that the amount of resistance used in the circuit can be varied and thus vary the drop across the arc and therefore the current flowing through it.

Another reason for a rheostat in circuit is to cut down the flow of current when arc is struck or in other words when a short circuit is placed across the line. Thus when arc is struck 110/1.5 or 73.3 amperes would flow and unless this resistance was inserted in the circuit a complete short circuit would be placed on the line and an excessive current would flow and blow all the fuses protecting the line. This increased amount of current flows only for a short interval when the arc is being struck for as soon as the carbons are separated the resistance of the arc is added to the circuit, and the current is cut down to normal.

Resistance current is very wasteful having only about 50 per cent efficiency, but they are the easiest method available when direct current is used and the initial expense of a motor generator is too great to be considered. Yet much expense would be saved in the long run by the installation of a motor generator set which would have an efficiency of about 70 per cent and would do away with the objectionable heat developed by rheostats, also the motor generator set gives a much better control of the arc.

Care should be taken in placing carbons in a lamp to see that the clamps are clean and securely fastened in order that a good contact may be obtained with the carbon.

The greater percentage of light used in projecting a picture comes from the crater of the positive carbon. The positive carbon should be the upper one and may be distinguished as the one which remains red the longer when the current is cut off. Should the lower carbon remain red the longer time the arc is then said to be "burning upside down" and the connecting leads should be changed.

The positive carbon burns about twice as fast as the negative and therefore is usually made twice the height, also a positive carbon is about 1/3 inch larger in diameter than the negative.

A parallel circuit is one in which several paths are provided for the flow of current. If these paths are all of equal resistance as would be the case when using lamps of similar lamps as shown by Fig. 12 were connected across the line then the total current flowing in the circuit would be the product of the number of lamps times the current flow of each lamp. Or if 110 volts causes a current of 1 ampere to flow in each lamp the total current supplied would be 6 times 1 or 6 amperes.

When several paths of unequal resistance are connected across the line the amount of the current in each section is inversely proportioned to the values of the resistances. The total amount of current to be supplied is the sum of the current flowing in the different branches.

Thus if we have resistance of 1 ohm, 2 ohms and 3 ohms respectively connected across a 6 volt potential, since the drop across all the resistances is the same the current flowing in the 1 ohm branch will be 2 ohms branch 3 amperes, and the current 1 2 6 in the 3 ohms branch -- or 2 amperes. The total current flowing from the source of supply would be 6+3+2 or 11 amperes.

In order to find the equivalent single resistance which when connected across the supply voltage would allow the same current to flow we would use the formula where R is the single equivalent resistance and \( R_1, R_2, R_3 \) are the given values of the resistances.

reducing the right hand side of the equation to a common denominator, we have or R equals 6 ohms.

Gentlemen:

Replying to your inquiry of recent date, please be advised that our entire battery of 14 projecting machines is comprised of Power’s Cameragraphs, both #6A and #6B models.

After rather exhaustive tests, we have concluded that the Power Cameragraph is the most satisfactory machine for the projection of unwaxed film and best suited to all-around studio requirements including laboratory inspection.

Very truly yours,

Questions Referring to the Text To Be Answered and Returned

14. The line voltage to which an arc is connected is 220. If the arc is direct current, what is the proper reducing and standing resistance to be inserted in the circuit? The arc is good, give the proper condition should be 50 volts.

16. If two resistances of 50 and 60 ohms, respectively, are connected in series, find the total resistance of the circuit.

17. If the above circuit is connected to a 220-volt supply, find the current which will flow through the circuit.

18. Three resistances of 6, 3, and 2 ohms, respectively, are connected across a 110-volt supply. Find the equivalent resistance of the above and the current which will flow through the circuit.

19. Find the current flowing and the resistance of the circuit if half the lamps of Fig. 12 were turned out or cut out of the circuit.

Answers to Study Lessons

A. B. Lod, Calif., writes:

I take pleasure in answering your question: "What is a Dynamo?"

The principal parts of a dynamo are: the bearings, shaft, armature, armature windings, commutator, brushes, field magnets, field windings, leads and terminal block.

The current generated as follows: When the Generator is not running the field magnet still retains a very little of its magnetism, and the armature will revolve, due to the magnetic lines of force through the armature. When the armature starts revolving, the armature windings cut these lines of force, and a very weak current is generated but weak as it is, it is strong enough to travel around the field windings and as it travels around the field it makes the field a little stronger and the field magnet sends more and more magnetic lines of force through on armature and magnetic field is thus increased so is the current generated in the armature, increased. This makes the field still stronger and this action keeps up until the capacity of the field rheostat is reached and revolving stops.

If there were no field rheostat in series with the field then this rise would continue until the field became saturated with magnetism and the current would stop. Reply: Your answer is correct in so far as it goes, also you have limited your description to one type of generator, namely a self-excited shunt type. This type is, however, the one which is most generally used.

The fundamental meaning of the term dynamo is a machine for converting mechanical energy into electrical energy by means of electromagnetic induction. No electricity is created by a dynamo. Dynamo converts electromagnetic force is generated or produced which causes a current to flow in the circuit connected to the dynamo.

The principal of operation of the dynamo depends on the fact that if a conductor is placed in a magnetic field and a change in position or a change in the magnetic field strength be made so that the conductor is made to cut lines of force then an E.M.F. is set up which is proportional to the rate of cutting.

The operation of a dynamo depends upon the following factors: a magnetic field, produced by electromagnets, and a number of loops or turns of wire wound for carrying the armature, so arranged that the lines of force set up by the field magnets may be cut by the armature conductors, and an E.M.F. generated.

The operation of a shunt generator depends upon the residual magnetism retained by the field magnets so that when the armature is revolved the conductor cut a very weak field and an E.M.F. will be set up at the brushes. This E.M.F. will aid the induced current to flow in the field windings and tend to increase the magnetic field, and consequently the generated E.M.F. This action continues until the iron of the magnetic field becomes saturated with the maximum number of magnetic lines of force depending on the design of the special machine. The dynamo will then produce a constant voltage which is slightly reduced by the cross-magnetizing effect of the armature when the load is applied.

The field rheostat has the effect of added field resistance so that a smaller current will pass thru the field winding, a more effective amperes turns and resulting flux will be produced. This by means the field strength can be varied so that any desired value of brush or terminal voltage may be obtained.

Reading over some more of the News which I found laying in the office it got a grip on me. I think it very interesting especially for projectors, therefore I would be delighted to write a few notes for the section.

I promised to give out some good dope on the Shupelke Machine in a short time, but I thought some projector might need this little stunt so AT are leaving a 34 inch carbon news section if you think it worth printing.

For the spot light I needed some gelatine for different colors but I could not get them so I bought three pieces of common glass 3/4 thick and used some globe coloring. Its the cheapest way of running a spot light and you can make any fancy colors or shapes you need with no danger of breaking for I have run it at high amperage.

You can always clean this off and make anything new you want. Just use a flat pan and hold glass edgewise, then pour the color on one side. It is best to get a soft cloth and keep a piece for each color.

Next an idea for a stereo lens in place of having the lens attached to machine. Get a piece of conduit pipe and fix it to wall in front of booth. People used to say they could not read the slides because they shake so much, but this stopped it.

A Discussion of the Speer Directo Carbon

By Eugene H. Kaufman

During the earliest days of motion pictures, projection was very largely effected by the combination of a cored upper carbon together with a solid lower. In the past two years wonderful strides have been made in the improvement of the lower carbon—the metal coating and hard core now being universally demanded by the projectionists.

The Speer Hold-Ark Negative Carbons relate to the scrap heap, the antiquated solid lowers; and the Speer Directo Positives will have even greater effect on the so-called "cored" lowers.

In the Speer Directo Carbon, let us first draw attention to the construction—a carbon with a compound core. The core is composed of a hard, specially constructed electrically conductive material, surrounded by the proper proportions of a heat insulating compound, imbedded within a star center, all of which are of the utmost importance in light producing qualities and in securing stability of the arc.

You can enable, if you so desire, the old system of burning the carbons for five or ten minutes in order to get the proper crater, exists only as a recollection of former days.

I understand they get their light from about a 100 to 400 watt bulb. I had in mind a Fairbanks Morse outfit, of about 750 watts capacity. What do you generally use for light where electricity is not available? I mean from a central station. Would a gas outfit serve me just as well or better than what I have mentioned for light? I would like to hear from you and tell me about a portable or traveling outfit.

Reply.

Peerless, Acme, and the Graphoscope will take the standard film and will produce approximately the same results as the arc. Where electricity is not available from a central station, small isolated gasoline motor generating sets have been found most serviceable.

The following manufacturers put out such sets:

- Fairbanks Morse, 30 Church Street, New York City.
- Peerless Independent Movie Supply Co., 729 7th Avenue, New York City.
- Deleo Light Co., Dayton, Ohio; Universal Motor Co, Oshkosh, Wis.
- Fairbanks Morse, 39 Church Street, New York City.

Power Rates Raised on Him

L. W. Mc., Tenn.: The City Fathers (?) here have just advised me of an increase in my power rates to 15 cents per K. W., refusing to allow me a power rate of 9 cents as heretofore, and am writing you for any information relative to putting in my own power.

I use two machines, one a Peerless carbon arc, and the other a Simplex Mazda, prefer the Simplex. I have only a short throw 71" and a picture 9 x 12.

I have quotations from the Cushman power plant and also Deleo, and would like your confidential opinion as to the merits of both; Cushman is a good man, but I am told by some one, but didn't know about fuel cost and upkeep.

If I should put in my own plant, would it be better to put the Mazda equipment on my Power's using D C instead of the A C Compressor (1 now have on the Simplex)?

As to the two machines: I think the carbon arc is better. I am in a small town and only run four and five days in a week, and my operating room has already cost me around $1,000, but don't mind the expense if I can get results, and that's all I am selling.

Correct Rewinding Speed

R. N., Massachusetts: To settle a wager we would like to have you answer these questions for us. A short time ago several of us were discussing the effect of high-speed rewinding on the pictures. We tried to figure from the speed of the film when wound around a 4" hub at the rate of a thousand feet in 4 minutes but we decided that we didn't know our mathematics, well enough. Can this problem be solved in ordinary figures or does it require something more difficult? What is the speed of the film at the start and what at the finish. What speed do laboratories and exchanges use when rewinding films.

Reply: If too high a rewind speed is used it is impossible to detect any film imperfections such as torn sprocket holes or stripped emulsion, also there is danger of the edges of the film catching on the reel and being bent over, thus ruining that section of the film.

To determine exactly the speed of the film at all times in the above instance would require the use of higher mathematics, but since the rate of rewind of 1000 feet in 4 minutes is more or less approximate we may use a simplified solution as follows:

If 1000 feet in 4 minutes is 250 feet or 3,000 inches per minute. A reel with a 5 inch hub has an over all diameter of film of about 10 inches when 1,000 feet of film has been wound on the reel. An average first and last turn would be 7 1/2 inches or the length of an average turn would be 7 1/2 times or 23 1/2 inches. Figuring from this average length of turn to rewind, 3,000 inches per minute would result in a speed of 300/23.6 or 127 revolutions per minute.

If this speed is taken as the revolutions of reel on rewind then the speed of the film at the beginning would be 5 x 127 or 317 ft. per minute, if at the finish 10 x 127 or 417 ft. per minute.

In ordinary practice laboratories and exchanges rewind film at a rate of from 5 to 8 minutes per thousand feet.

Traveling Motion Picture Outfits

A M., Friday Harbor, Wash: I am trying to figure out a traveling picture show outfit and I wish to know something about these outfits. If you have any on the market. Take the Peerless, Pathoscope and the Graphoscope, Jr. and several others, are these suited to run the ordinary film and make a 9 by 12 picture at 80 ft, and make it bright enough for an audience to look at without eye strain?

3-D—Amount of Light in Relation to Current.

The flame arc shows a rapid increase in actinic light with increased current. In fact, the flame arc with doubling of the current at the same arc voltage increases its photographic effect not twice but three or four times. This makes it profitable to use the flame arcs at high amperages of 15, 25 to 35 amperes. In some cases much higher amperages have been used. The effect of amperage on amount of actinic light is shown in Fig. 6 which also shows the advantage in effect that the flame arc has over the enclosed ordinary arc. These sets of curves in Fig 6 were obtained with single arcs on 110 volt circuit, but with the new type of flame arc having two arcs in series on 100 volts the efficiency of the flame lamps is often increased from 40 to 60 per cent over that of a converted lamp with a single flame arc on 110 volts. The enclosed arc lamp soon reaches a limit of current because of the danger to globe melting down, or if a very large globe is used then the amount of air at the start decreases the initial efficiency, which is very important in motion picture work because the actual scenes are short and usually last from ten seconds to a minute or two. On a 220 volt circuit, it is now customary to use 2 or 4 flame arcs in series, and this compares favorably with the 220 volt enclosed arc lamps under average conditions.

From a series of tests of a direct current flame arc lamp, I have deduced the following approximate equation for photographic efficiency as regards effect on photographic efficiency as regards effect on solio paper for a single direct current flame arc. C is current and V is arc voltage within moderate limits (40 to 80) .

On alternating current efficiency increases as C * 6.

The flame arcs are also increased in candlepower more rapidly than the current, but this phase of the matter does not need to be enlarged upon here. The color of light increases toward the short wave lengths faster than the long wave lengths with increase in current. With increase in current the blue light increases more than the red.

There are two flame arcs in series on 110 volts, steady operation can be secured with 45 volts at each arc or with 90 volts of the 110 line volts in the light producing arcs. With a single flame arc on 110 volts about 50 volts are used in the arc, so that the twin arcs have about 50 per cent. better power utilization over the single arc. Also the power factor and arc stability are improved by operating two or three flame arcs in series on 110 volts.

Here's a New Angle on the Government Tax

"Strange, as it may seem," says Mr. E. S. Bowman of the Automatic Ticket System, 1780 Broadway, New York, "there is something in connection with the Government tax, which appears to have been entirely overlooked by everyone connected with the Amusement business.

The Automatic Ticket Selling & Cash Register Company print billions of tickets yearly, yet it was only a few days ago that they learned there can be no such thing as a one dollar admission ticket, including the tax.

It appears that one of their customers ordered tickets printed, Admission 90c, Tax 10c, Total $1.00, and he was very promptly advised by a Government Inspector that the public was being overcharged one cent, as the tax should be 9c, on a 90c ticket.

This Inspector said the Government would not accept the extra cent which was shown as part of the tax. The proprietor could not keep his price at $1.00 by charging 90c, as the tax would then be 10c, and the total admission $1.01.

The final result was that he charged $1.00 and added the tax, so the Government has no kick coming, and neither has he.

Turning Passers-by to Walkers-in
This is your problem in hot weather, isn't it?
And it's a real problem, too—a problem that nearly every exhibitor is up against during the summer months.
But the Monsoon Cooling System will solve it for you.
It will make your house refreshingly cool and breezy in the hottest summer weather—make it delightfully comfortable—a big attraction to the public.
It will pull the business; turn passers-by to walkers-in. And all the time it will make your theatre—your shows—stand out distinctly from all the others in your neighborhood.
The Monsoon Cooling System is easily handled—and costs less than the money it makes for you the first summer.

What the Society of Motion Picture Engineers Is and What It Has Done

A. F. Victor, Secretary, Outlines the Aims and Work of the Society and Gives Summary of All Papers

STANDARDIZATION is the keystone of every large industry—the factor which knits the arches together and stands splendidly balanced. In July, 1916, a group of earnest pioneers and creative workers in the motion picture industry, met in Washington and formed the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. These men were close to the heart of the industry and they realized the many separate factions which were struggling to work successfully together. Intelligently standardization was the magic key needed to perfect co-operation, and these men, accustomed as they were to give the best of themselves for the development of their industry, set modestly to work on their self-appointed task. Twice each year they have foregathered in some appointed city, giving generously of their time and money to the general advancement of the working conditions of the motion picture industry.

This group of men is made up of specialists in various branches of the industry and at each meeting some problem has been presented by the man whose knowledge of its requirements was needed.

An instance of the Society's work in standardization will serve to illustrate.

At the meeting in Chicago, July 10, 1917, a standard camera frame line was adopted. Prior to this there were as many varying frame lines as there were types of cameras. The confusion caused by variance was considerable. In productions where the work was done by several cameras, projected scenes shifted up and down in the most disconcerting manner. Today every person actively connected with the industry knows that the standardization frame line lies midway between two perforations.

At each meeting of the Society a number of papers have been read on various problems and unusual achievements in the industry. These papers represent an invaluable wealth of detailed technical information of vital import to everyone connected with the motion picture field. Each paper represents the careful experience and research work of a master in his line. The Society has had printed duplicate copies of each of these papers and has already supplied hundreds of copies to interested viewers.

Undoubtedly there are hundreds more interested persons in the industry, who would eagerly avail themselves of this splendid information if they knew of its existence. For their benefit the following list of subject material is submitted:

New Motiograph Booklet Out

The Enterprise Optical Company has recently sent us one of the first copies of its new folder on the Motiograph De Luxe. The booklet is somewhat out of the ordinary in that the selling arguments are given in the form of letters from satisfied users throughout the country. A cover design of high quality makes the pamphlet especially attractive.
The Organ in Motion Picture Theatres

There is no necessity to dwell upon the fact that the organ has attained a position of such importance in the motion picture theatre that it can justly be considered the nearest competitor in replacing orchestra organizations.

The above statement can be applied only to the instrument itself. Through legitimate competition organ manufacturers have been able to complete an instrument which can fully cover all the requirements necessary for appropriate musical works. For the benefit of organ players, it is useless to say that an organ player is necessary to utilize this wonderful instrument, the organ. We have in the past few years repeatedly stated that playing the organ and playing the pictures are two entirely different things. By this, we mean that the best church organ players can prove failures in handling the best instrument when playing for pictures. The editors of this edition do not consider themselves competent to write on this subject, prepared and edited by Mr. Lacey Baker, Mus. B., who consider the most perfect definition explaining the difference between church organ work and theatre work. For the benefit of organ players, and in the interest of "Better Music For The Film," we have taken the liberty of reproducing a few paragraphs from Mr. Baker's booklet which was issued in connection with a collection of music, published by the H. W. Gray Co., New York. Following is an extract from the above pamphlet:

"The accompaniment of a Film should be a musically sustaining undercurrent, always subsidiary, adding to the atmosphere, color, emotional color, but, under no circumstances, dominate. Cinema playing is not an organ recital, neither is it an occasion for the display of digital dexterity and pedal pyrotechnics. Opportunities are rare in the Motion Scenic Pictures, but, even then, the modest player will not eclectically shut off the view."

Just how much organ may be artistically used, must be left to the good taste of the executant, who, if he has a natural intuition, will realize that the film's the thing, not the organ. A midway course must be steered between the Sycula of too much organ, which is an imperfection on the part of the player, and which is worse) an annoyance to the audience, and the Charybdis of too little, which is apt to be dull and depressing. As music is the handmaid of the Picture, and not the mistress, the thoughtful player will be very conservative in his use of the instrument, relying on a liberal use of its tonal varieties to avoid drabness. By frequent changes of touch, he will hold the interest of his audience, and not be guilty of the bete a morte of endlessly holding the pedal in force of habit.

If it be thought that I am too insistent in suggesting a conservative accompaniment, I ask each of my colleagues who disagree with me, to visit a neighboring Playhouse and get the audience's viewpoint. After registering themselves the effect of an aggressively booming organ and mentally noting its irritation, I think they will agree with me that my note of warning is neither superfluous nor ill-timed.

It must not be forgotten that broad effects are called for in the theatre, and much latitude is allowed the performer. Melodies should stand out, frequently doubled (orchestra fashion) and the Pedal treated generally as the Double Bass, and not glued to the heel of the player. Also it must be remembered that the ecclesiastical, ultra-egalitarian school of playing is ineffective for Motion Pictures.

Practically the "theatre touch" is as far removed from the churchly style as is the rectangle from the arabesque. The reasons for this are obvious, but the unbalanced (orchestra fashion) and the Pedal treated generally as the Double Bass, and not glued to the heel of the player. Also it must be remembered that the ecclesiastical, ultra-egalitarian school of playing is ineffective for Motion Pictures.

The inherited traditions, and the "teed of linked sweetness, long drawn out," are not valuable assets, but, on the contrary, handicaps which must be ruthlessly eliminated if the church organist expects to make good in the elastic conditions necessarily prevailing in the theatre.

The above reveals facts which, if taken into consideration by organ players will undoubtedly further and advance the art of organ playing in the motion picture theatre, and will convert many organists into indispensible factors. The editors respectfully suggest that readers write to the H. W. Gray Co. of New York, for a copy of the complete Bulletin, edited by Mr. Lacey Baker, Mus. B. We are of the opinion that this booklet should be in the hands of every organ player who is striving to not only appropriately accompany pictures, but also build a reputation for himself which is bound to result in a better financial remuneration.

The Test of a Pipe Organ

The true test of an Organ is not the opening night or the first week or the first month. It is at the end of a year.

Do your steady patrons—the man and his wife and kiddies—who have seen every feature you have shown, like the organ as well as they did the opening night? Has the music grown monotonous—is there a "sameness" to the tonal production? Does the music fit all the situations in pictures?

Have you had trouble finding an organist who knew the playing methods of the instrument?

The Barton Organ stands the Acid Test. The Divided Manual, an exclusive feature, multiplies the musical possibilities of the Organista a hundred fold and provides thousands of new and wondrously beautiful combinations of distinct tonal varieties. Beautiful tone quality, no blare. A great variety of soft melodious solo stops, combined with the grandeur of a Cathedral Organ and a Symphony Orchestra. Standard Playing methods familiar to every organ scholar; no special training necessary—thousands of organists to choose from.

The Barton Organ cannot grow tiresome or monotonous.

J. A. Kent

The new manager of the New York branch has had many years of experience in various branches of the industry. After spending a number of years with New York concerns Mr. Kent left to accept a managerial position with the Exhibitor Mutual in the Middle West. He remained there for three years until his recent appointment by Mr. Leo Dwyer.

Mr. Kent has made an excellent reputation over the country in the distribution and state-right branches of the industry, and it is only reasonable to expect that his success in his new position will be even greater.
UNEASY FEET
(Special Pictures Corporation—1400 Feet)

A GENUINE novelty in short subjects is released by Special Pictures Corporation under the Comedyart brand. Bearing the title of "Uneasy Feet," it comes to the screen sans titles, sans any part of the players' anatomy except their member limbs. And being such a novelty it behooves every exhibitor to book it if for no other reason than it brings something brand new in comedy lines. The piece is such a little surprise party that it takes the observer some time to react to the comic points. But once he does wake up—he becomes genuinely amused. The feet of the principals have "movements all their own" and so easily told is the merry plot that truly a caption is needed. One doesn't realize how emotional a leg can be until one sees "Uneasy Feet." It shows it has other purposes than to fill a sock or stocking (Don't forget the well filled stocking.

Whether is propelling her toesies down the street sees a chance to start a flirtation. We would call her a teaser because she walks to make him catch up with her then speeds it up when she is in danger of being overtaken. A street car comes him to lose her temporarily and the play of his feet here is surely laughable. The wily flapper waits for him on the opposite side and when they are together a park bench is sought. And here is occasion for more fun. All kinds of people sit down between them judging from their feet. Then . . . comes the emotional work. Closer and closer they draw (well they can't get any closer).

Judging from what is seen, the boy belongs to the "chicken" variety. What she displays would restore the sight of a blind man. Shivering hose, a pretty pose and the beaux would be shouting "Ali and Ollie!" The simplicity of the thing makes one wonder why it has never been thought of before. But because it is a clever novelty it should not be attempted too often. Here is something entirely different and by reason of this fact it will probably be copied to death. Charlie Chaplin doesn't need the idea because his feet attract the gaze anyway. Hats off to the Special people in supplying a brand new kind of slapstick comedy. Carrying no captions it presents direct action with a vengeance. The picture brings out a point not generally realized—that feet are really funny when viewed by themselves.

JIGGS IN SOCIETY

T HE first of the "Bringing Up Father" series of cartoons as visualized from George McManus' famous cartoons is presented in "Jiggs in Society" starring Johnny Ray. Judging it from the reception given it by the Strand audience in New York, on a Sunday afternoon, the piece is neither a knockout nor a failure. It may be that the spectators are so familiar with Mr. McManus' work that it occasioned no surprise for them—and surprise is half the success of a comedy because it brings the unexpected. It is the children who cry for the funny pages on a Sunday morning and the audience consisting mostly of grown-ups was unable to show juvenile joy.

Perhaps greater enthusiasm might have been shown had the comedy started off on a strictly slapstick basis instead of presenting it with a prologue and showing some kiddies asking their father for the funny sheet and turning to the McManus cartoon. This treatment naturally discounted the intermediate high links to some extent. The comedy proper is slapstick of the knockabout class, the kind that is seen in "bar-ley-que." Jiggs will smoke his clay pipe and blow the fumes all over the place.

The Strand remained in an attitude of watchful waiting until he started to show who is boss. While his family holds a reception in the drawing room, father is up stairs playing cards with his automobile. The police seize a raid and the roughhouse starts. One sees fist battles, fights with clubs, trousers pulled off, ceilings coming down and a slap-bang everywhere. Most of which misses are because the artist is laboring and the antics uninspired. Johnny Ray certainly looks like Father and is a capable low comedian, but his incidents should come to him—he shouldn't go after them. Such results don't make for spontaneity.-LAURENCE REID.

HULA HULA TOWN
(Mutt and Jeff Comedy—One Reel—Fox)

O UR two young friends are met in darkest Africa in this latest comedy, which is not as humorous as many of their previous adventures. A black African king desires two white men to marry his two daughters and as Mutt and Jeff are touring in the neighboring vicinity, they are elected to be the victims. They finally escape the oscillations of the dusky maidens as well as the centralistic cooking stove, through the valor of little Mutt, who disguises himself and punishes the entire tribe.

A great part of the reel is taken up with an exaggerated shimmy dance, perpetrated by a great many black figures to celebrate the marriage a la Jeff, which they are soon to enjoy. This continues too long and causes the audience to anticipate the first minute. Also the love making indicated on Mutt has little comedy in it. It is not suggestive—it is merely vulgar, and there won't be a ripple of laughter when it is shown. The best thing in it is the diee rolling contortions of the blacks. This will get some real, genuine laughs.-MATTHEW TAYLOR.

SQUEAKS AND SQUAWKS
(Vitagraph—Slap Stick Comedy)

T HIS film is much like a rewrite of "The Grocery Clerk" and "The Garage" with much business from both these comedies changed just enough to say it is different and with little that is new in evidence.

We saw it at the Rivoli and didn't notice any great amount of hilarity during it's projection. It rates as an average production of it's kind and will go over where slap stick is popular.—F. S. DICKERSON.
THE WOMAN IN ROOM 13

Pauline Frederick Has Worthy Subject in Mystery

Melodrama

It is unfortunate that such a talented actress as Pauline Frederick has been allowed to bury her talents so deep in material, unworthy entertainment value. It has taken one of those "straight-from-the-shoulder" mystery melodramas to reveal the star at her best, and so inspired is her performance that Goldwyn should continue to place her in subjects of the calibre of "The Woman in Room 13." Here is one case where a successful play makes a successful picture, because it is dependent upon physical action instead of dialogue. But it carries other elements that are adaptable for the screen.

Unfolding a murder mystery, it presents a deal of suspense interest which accumulates from the opening flash and culminates in an undeniable dramatic strength. While much of the action is arbitrary and certain coincidences of a theatrical nature occur, nevertheless one can put it down as a story which moves swiftly amid a panorama of highly-colored and well-composed scenes and provides all the thrills that are expected in a work of this kind. The picture is based upon the story and the fact that it unovers some new twists will overcome its weakness.

The action in the courtroom scene is rather faulty, since a genuine jury would realize that the evidence doesn't hold water. They could ask for the diagram and discount for the woman's voice isn't that of the heroine in the picture. The logic here the fact that the picture is thoroughly absorbing. Mr. Barker's direction is entirely praiseworthy, allowing for two "dis-co"—the theatrical courtroom scene and the heroine pose of the husband. John Bowes doesn't exactly match Mr. Barker's. Charles Clary gives his usual finished performance as the detective, while Robert McKean as the false friend again reveals why he is called the best villain on the screen.

Press Notice — Story

A pictorial version of the successful melodrama, "The Woman in Room 13," by Malvina Moorhead, is presented in a wonderful photoplay. The offering will come to the — before the week is out — with Miss Frederick in a role that has her fullest development.

In "The Woman in Room 13" Miss Frederick portrays a disillusioned woman whose honor means everything and whose husband means more to her than her own. She is confronted with powerful dramatic situations and only an actress of Miss Frederick's ability could cope with the picture. The question concerns every screen fan who sees the picture. Who was the woman in room 13? The actress grips it as it builds to an electrifying climax. Miss Frederick is supported by a cast of excellent talent — a cast that includes stars of the quality of Robert McKean, Charles Clary and Margaret Snow. Frank Lloyd has directed the picture with painstaking care, bringing out the incidents in a manner which is thoroughly absorbing.

Program Reader

A muffled shot rang out from Dick Turner's apartment. The report was heard by men at the dictaphone on the floor below. A rush was made to the rear where Paul Raymond was found, smoking gun in hand. There by the body of Turner, but where was the woman? The husband thought he knew and had taken his revenge. The former husband thought he knew—and entered his gun. All were wrong. The question is who was the woman in room 13 when Turner was shot? This you must find for yourself when you visit the next show — and see Pauline Frederick in one of the most baffling mystery scenes ever played over the screen. "The Woman in Room 13." It is deceptively simple. "The Heart of a Child."""

"THE WOMAN AND THE PUPPET"

Synopsis

Here is a single-track story which does not hit the half's eye, because it is dominated by one line of action expressed by one outstanding character. The situation is such that Miss Farrar's temperamental methods are entirely suitable here because she is cast as one of those fiery cigarette girls of Spain. The weak action revolves around her efforts to ensnare the male of the species by teaching him.

Second, the Captain, is a conceited fellow, made so by the adulation of less desirous senoritas, and when he finds one who leads him a chase he becomes enraptured. So she toys with him—vamps him to speak plain English, but it takes her five reels to reveal the casus belli. When he gives her three hundred and eighty seven face (one can almost hear them), they carry so much force he stops her teasing game and gives up his unluckled lips. Reginald Barker has eliminated the plot shortcomings to some extent by supplying exceptionally good details and atmosphere and has attempted to make the story live. His efforts are fruitless here because they add a degree of unimportant action.

The "Puppet" of the title might just as well be phrased because heroine keeps quite a number dashing at the end of her string. The main conflict, however, is between the aristocratic sweethearts and the cigarette girl and it is presented with considerable convergence. It isn't a healthy sight to see women fight for a man's affection. Lou Tellegen, as the masculine prize, is considerably heroic. A romantic act, he seemed to think that a uniform must cover up his charm and naturalness. And why does he make love with his best friend even though he is doing it to keep his friend's uniform and artistry every way. The star and the atmosphere would doubtless carry it by—length, 5 reels—Laurence Reit."

(Universal)

Stroheim Has Another Big Photoplay Here

ERICH VON STROHEIM has a reputation to uphold after his fine achievement, “Blind Husbands,” and he has certainly maintained it with “The Devil’s Pass Key.” This picture which he adapted and directed from a story in which he collaborated with Saroyan bore much similarity to it, and shows that his art is no more flash in the pan. One might say that is “Blind Husbands” transferred to a Parisian setting because it carries the same idea, although worked out differently. While it doesn’t present the same simplicity, the lofty spirit, still this version of the external triangle has a true fulness which establishes it as one of the finest contributions to the screen.

The picture is complicated because of its array of characters and the situations in which they move, yet the fundamental idea is clearly established. Once the introductory details are over, the play swings ahead with a spontaneity and power that will not be denied. The climax is a revelation in dramatic strength and is presented in a scene of intense action, Mr. Stroheim believes in novelty and he has given several surprising twists to the theme. But his direction is also a novelty because it is so unmasking from every angle. He believes that no story can be properly presented unless it is given the correct atmosphere. And this ingredient is also a revelation.

The most insignificant detail is brought out in a realistic manner. Nothing is forgotten. And he has seen to it that the story is perfectly interpreted so that the characters are adaptable to their roles. Even the extras are genuine types and they are guided in natural movements. Outstanding performances are presented by Maude George, Clyde Fillmore, who reflects Stroheim’s conception so identical that his mannerisms, Grasse and Uni Tevily. The picture is sumptuously mounted and not one bit overdone. If shortened a reel it would make for a more compact continuity—length, 8 reels. —Laurence Reid

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Erich von Stroheim, who will be remembered for his fine achievement, “Blind Husbands,” is responsible for a work of similar calibre in “The Devil’s Pass Key.” Erich von Stroheim’s “The Devil’s Pass Key” will remember his tremendous drama. “The Devil’s Pass Key” has a photoplay that carries the same sweep and intensity. The story portrays a dramatic situation and the plot is not too complex to be followed by the average audience. Mr. Stroheim in collaboration with Baroness de Mayer, has conceived a story that builds steadily and with its tremendous elements. The scenario and direction have been directed to the screen. His art is displayed in his ability to arrange his story competently, and his atmosphere attains a detail that is apparent in every scene. The players are ideal selections for their various roles and all give outstanding performances.

PROGRAM READER

Erich von Stroheim’s wonderful picture, “The Devil’s Pass Key,” will appear at the Imperial, and is one of the finest achievements of the screen. All those who saw “Blind Husbands” will remember its tremendous drama. “The Devil’s Pass Key” is a photoplay that carries the same sweep and intensity. The story portrays a dramatic situation and the plot is not too complex to be followed by the average audience. SUGGESTIONS

A Stroheim picture should be expected with full value placed upon this director’s name. One can count on the “Blind Husbands” and believe in the “The Devil’s Pass Key,” which is a continuation of the same vein.

CATCH LINES

“ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE”
(Metro)

Old Time Crook Play as Thrilling as Ever

METRO has lost little of the gripping suspense or thrilling action of this deus ex machina plays. The picture is carefully produced and good in detail. While Bert Lytell is the star, it is not an one-man production. His support is well cast, and keep the acting up to the mark. If a crook is the hero, who does not work harmoniously with the other players. Bert Lytell is the star of the story in the opening scenes.

It was the original and tense climactic situation that helped to give this play’s year’s run on Broadway some years ago. A little girl is locked in a box at the beginning of the picture, and as the little crook, and to open it with his sandpaper fingers, Lee Randall must reveal his identity as the long-sought-for criminal, Jimmy Valentine. While this scene in the picture is strong enough to make my audience lean forward in their seats, it seems as if the producer could have made more even of his high spot. The sudden change of character of the unhappiness detective, which is about the only thing in the picture that doesn’t quite satisfy, is skipped over very quickly in the picture.

The feature opens with some splendid examples of photography. Details of production are so perfect that force themselves upon our attention. But in the prison scenes of eight or ten years ago, in the days of striped-dress convicts and brutal wardens, the ladies wear rather modern fashions. But for the ladies’ sake we forgive this little anachronism.

The picture has been produced and acted in such an excellent fashion that you can be proud to bring hard “Jimmy” one more to your patrons. It ought to bring a better-than-average return anywhere. —Length 6 reels.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the best known and most gripping "crook" plays, "Alias Jimmy Valentine," has been cruetlly butterflies by Maxwell Karger and will be seen at the theatre on Tuesday night. It is the story of this well remembered stage play, which scored a great hit on Broadway when first presented. Bert Lytell is the star of the picture and Jimmy Valentine is a prisoner at Sing Sing, convicted of safe-breaking. Although he is a safe-breaker in chimerical terms, he is a safe-breaker, actually does it "go straight," influenced by the beautiful girl who has helped him to see the light. His oaths are stilted and he works diligently and is promoted. Then, when he is engaged to be married, Doyle, the detective, tells him, having one clue that will convict Valentine. But Jimmy has changed his name, and has managed to establish a complete split. Doyle is about to leave, almost convinced that he is wrong, when word comes that the little girl has been locked in the bank safe. No one knows the combination. Then, although Doyle is standing near, and Jimmy knows that he is convicting himself, he sandpapers his fingers, and with his old time skill that made him the master safe-cracker of America, he opens the vault.

It ends happily, of course, but only after the same thrilling climax that made the stage play long remembered by all who saw it.

PROGRAM READER

One great effort of the movies is the picturization of good plays. The screen a thrilling drama can never die. There are occasional stage revivals. "Alias Jimmy Valentine," the original "Crook" play, has found its way to the silver sheet as a Metro production, and will be presented at this theatre on Tuesday night. Bert Lytell is the star and plays the title role of Jimmy Valentine, a name which was on everyone’s tongue when the play was running on Broadway. This picture will be seen at the theatre that will make the audience wonder when he has ever seen anything to equal it. It will have a run on Tuesday night at this theatre.

SUGGESTIONS

A play like this is a better thing to boast than the star, even one as popular as Bert Lytell. Don’t neglect him of course, and together with skills from the high spots in the play, show a photograph of the star in your lobby. Mention also that Paul Armstrong built up this play from a short story Bert Lytell was the star of its run on Broadway. See what you can do to re-create the interest in the popular stage play, "Alias Jimmy Valentine," a thrilling and a darkened stage, with a soloist dressed as a burglar, singing the song before you run the picture, would be very effective. If you are in a safe manufacturing company, you can arrange a tie-up. They might offer for a price for anyone who can open their safe. Try to awaken interest in the old question, "does birth or environment make criminals?" Try to get some prominent citizen to write to the local paper on point or prospective prison reform. In your copy boost the story as the first and best "crook" play ever written.

Prove to your own satisfaction that

The News Covers The Field
QUALITY is the uppermost thought in the mind of every producer when making a production.

QUALITY is the platform upon which have been built all those productions that have attained the stamp of perfection. When an ideal or principle is not founded upon this basis of quality, it fails to find a position amongst the successes.

AND so it is with the Laboratory. Every workman in the Nicholas Kessel Developing and Printing Plant is instilled with enthusiasm to turn out for his employer the highest quality of work his long experience permits.

THE Kessel Plant is proud of its organization. It is proud of the fact that every employee works in harmony for the betterment of photography—his life's study.

IDEAL working conditions and contentment plus the human understanding between employer and employee encourage enthusiasm, integrity and thoroughness.

THE realization of these conditions has made this organization a happy working family, turning out quality prints—the "Kwality Prints" that have made the plant modestly famous.

JOHN BARRYMORE in
"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"

BY ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON
Directed by John S. Robertson
Scenario by Clara S. Beranger,

A Paramount Artcraft Picture

The Most Tremendous Money-Maker Ever Offered to Exhibitors

The success of John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, during Holy Week, the worst theatrical week in the year, proves that this is the biggest box-office attraction ever made!

60,496 paid admissions were taken in. The largest previous record — made in Holiday Week — was 57,430.

And then, when the picture was transferred to the Rialto, it broke all records for both houses on its first day, drawing 10,513 paid admissions despite rain all day. On Monday it broke its own record with 8,273.

And More Big Days to Come!
JACk LONDON'S mighty story crashes against the emotions like the raging surf.

It is a moving panorama of life, with scene upon scene of primitive emotion and the clash of fighting forces; and around it all the clamor and might of the sea.

The Wolf, the coward and the girl come to life before you, and their vital drama will live long in your memory.
They thought his brains were in his feet!

But he showed them his head was just as speedy.

It's a knockout comedy with Wallie in a new kind of role.

A great supporting cast, including

Bebe Daniels
HOUDINI has for years been the biggest drawing card in vaudeville. His name over the box-office means a smashing of box-office records.

Now in a marvelous six-reel melodrama, he not only duplicates all the feats that have made him famous, but accomplishes dozens of others, far more thrilling.

It is a picture of a thousand thrills. The underwater scenes are positively the most thrilling episodes ever filmed.

There's a sensation a minute. "Terror Island" is the most exciting and amazing melodrama ever made.
Said Bill Hart:

"The Toll Gate" is the greatest picture I've ever made. I'll stake my reputation on it. It's a story I've wanted to do for years. And I haven't spared time or money in making it a masterpiece.

Says Sid Grauman:

"I consider 'The Toll Gate' by far the greatest picture Hart has ever made. Scenically and dramatically it is a masterpiece. It opened strong here and has played to capacity houses all week."

And the critics said:

"It is the best picture Hart has ever made." "It is one of the most absorbing pictures of the year." "Bubbles and seethes with thrills and suspense."

So Hart was right. It is his best picture.

You'll Say So Too!
An exquisite picture, tender, memory-haunting and deeply appealing to hearts that hold the faintest spark of love's passion.

YOUR CALL TO BATTLE

A National Mass Meeting of Independent Exhibitors, Hotel Congress, Chicago, April 26

As an Independent Exhibitor you have got to add your voice to the demand we will make from the floor of our national mass meeting of Independent Theatre Owners to learn the truth about the practices, intentions and tactics behind the competition we are getting from the producers who are buying, building or leasing theatres next door or across the street from our houses.

My desk is covered with telegrams from Independent Exhibitors who will be in Chicago on Monday, April 26, to mix in this straight-hitting, all-cards-on-the-table show-down with the Producer-Exhibitors. We’re going there for action, and we’re going to get it.

Producers are stampeding their way into the theatre field by organized activity. Their agents stick together and work together. And you’re the victim.

Now—we’ll fight fire with fire. We’re going to take organized Independent Exhibitor action and find out just how hard they are going to bite the hands that are feeding them with advance deposits and rental money.

An organization of fifty or one hundred Independent Exhibitors doesn’t mean anything to them. We’ve got to be there by the thousands.

Don’t depend on us to do your fighting for you. Be there yourself, bare-knuckled and ready to do your part. Come to Chicago! You’re an almighty important part in this show-down.

You’ve Got To Be There--Hotel Congress, Chicago, Early Monday Morning, Apr. 26

EMINENT screen artists, known to lovers of the silent drama everywhere as a result of their excellent work in some of the biggest productions of the past two years, support Lew Cody in the greatest triumph of his career, “The Butterfly Man.”

This supreme dramatic achievement, presented by Gasnier, will set a standard for superlative production which will be imitated by producers for years to come. The superb portrayal of George Barr McCutcheon’s famous story gives it a place by itself as a production of the highest standard.

Louise Glaum in "Sex" is J. Parker Read Jr.'s wonder-picture. This production has been sought more eagerly and given play dates on national release date more swiftly than any production we have ever known in the industry. Louise Glaum on April 11 achieves the unprecedented feat of playing fifty-five full week first runs simultaneously in the United States. In at least a dozen of these first run cities "Sex" will have two, three or four week runs.

When we tell you that we would be pleased to discover ten pictures made by independent producers with the power and quality of "King Spruce" you have a much better estimate of its strength than if we merely told you how big a picture we considered it to be. First run exhibitors have sensed this, too, and "King Spruce" is booking the big theatres.

Holman F. Day's biggest and best known novel is a story of real people—it throbs with life and vitality. It has the healthy, fresh scents of the great forests in its photography and it stars in Mitchell Lewis a mighty fine, sincere actor that many of you exhibitors have accidentally under-rated. Prints of "King Spruce" are in all branches for pre-release now.
There are some things that we can see here before they are seen or recognized by the nation’s exhibitors.

Exhibitors unquestionably know that in the past twelve months J. Warren Kerrigan has grown and increased greatly in favor with showmen and with the public.

We know through increased demand for his pictures; through the better prices paid; through the bigger first runs that are offering him to their patrons. "The Dream Cheater" is the kind of picture that has increased the Kerrigan popularity.

A THRILLING MELODRAMA
"Norma Talmadge is the bright particular star of the week's programme at the Strand, in the thrilling melodrama, 'The Woman Gives,' and capacity crowds from the moment of the opening of this popular motion picture house until the final curtain last night attested the star's popularity in no unmistakable manner. The story takes the heroine to all sorts of mystifying and creepy places, including a very realistic opium den where she and the man she went to save have a thrilling encounter with several Chinese. The many scenes and incidents of the story give the brilliant young star one of the best roles of her career."—New York Telegram.

CALLS HER ADORABLE

REALISTIC AND INTERESTING
"Interesting to watch. Opium den realistic."—New York Sun and Herald.

CHARMING PERSONALITY
"Norma Talmadge is seen in a vehicle which any screen star would wish for, one that gives her many opportunities to display her charming personality and talents. Not only does Norma Talmadge give an admirable performance throughout but the producers have surrounded her with a supporting cast they can well boast of. Ably produced."—New York Evening Mail.

A HUMAN STORY
"Norma Talmadge appears in an appealing role, the type of character we like to see reproduced on the screen, A human story. Norma Talmadge gives it a sympathetic portrayal."—New York Morning Telegraph.

"Norma Talmadge is at her charming best in 'The Woman Gives.' Well suited to her. A good society picture. If she is one of your favorites you will like the picture."—New York News.

“Compelling—Natural—Human!”
Unanimous Verdict of Critics

THRILLS OF MELODRAMA
“Manifesting again his peculiar talent for garlanding a theme with the rosemary of sentiment, King Vidor, in ‘The Family Honor,’ deals with a plot that has a greater plentitude of action than has hitherto been in evidence in his pictures. The main climax has all the ruddy thrills of melodrama. There is ample vigor. It is rich in atmosphere. You feel the life of the old South at every moment. Florence Vidor is a being of intense charm in this picture.”—Los Angeles Times.

A HUMAN picture
“‘The Family Honor’ is a fine play. There is a human element throughout the piece that is always pleasing. King Vidor is to be congratulated for his first effort for First National. Florence Vidor gives an excellent performance. The photographic qualities are excellent and the picture is artistic from every point of view. You will enjoy the play for it is HUMAN.”—Los Angeles Evening Express.

CLEAN, WHOLESOME, APPEALING
“The public has come to expect new and daring things from this brilliant young director, King W. Vidor, and the crowds that packed the theatre to see ‘The Family Honor’ were not disappointed. A beautiful picture, that flows as smoothly, as charmingly, as deliciously as the river pictures, which lend it a Southern atmosphere that has not been surpassed on the screen. And it contains a message. The story is a simple one—as all good stories must be. It is clean, wholesome, appealing. The cast is one of uniform merit.”—Los Angeles Examiner.

REFRESHING—VITALIZING
“In this latest King Vidor film there is that something which made his “Turn of the Road” a compelling drama—wholesomeness and the sunshine of life. The human touches give the impression of the real—so natural, so simple that one is refreshed, revitalized.”—Los Angeles Evening Herald.

Press Comments on James Oliver Curwood’s Famous Story, “The Courage of Marge O’Doone”

The New York Tribune—
"The Courage of Marge O’Doone" is a northwest classic. Mr. Curwood has given us a great treat and a great book in this latest volume of his. . . . This is a triumph in fiction of the Canadian Northwest."

The Philadelphia Press—
"The Courage of Marge O’Doone" is a story that never flaggs, that abounds in unexpected incidents, that is rich in the deep colors of the glorious country in which its scenes are laid. If you want to read a story that travels straight on like a bird on the wing, with a swift series of unforeseen and thrilling episodes and all of it painted against the splendid hues of the wide, generous westland, read "The Courage of Marge O’Doone.""

Philadelphia Evening Telegraph—
"Those who like a story brimful of red-blooded adventure, who revel in the life of camp and trail, will enjoy "The Courage of Marge O’Doone.""

New York Times—
"There is plenty of incident, plenty of fighting, and some lovemaking in the book, with a heroine of that extraordinarily beautiful, courageous, innocent and trusting type."

Detroit Sunday News—
"The Courage of Marge O’Doone" is a complicated thriller of North Canada. Breathlessness seems to be the order of the hour. We crave it in all lines of activity, and markedly so in our reading. . . . Adventure toppling on adventure may be found in "The Courage of Marge O’Doone."

Oakland (Cal.) Tribune—
"A fighting tale. If you like strong, vigorous, red-blooded fighting stories, where blood and blood, hatred and murder show themselves together with the great wild wastes of the frozen north, grizzly bears, fierce halfmen, primitive men, and tender and beautiful women, you will like "The Courage of Marge O’Doone." It is a graphic tale, stirring, thrilling and unusual."

Minneapolis Herald—
"Mr. Curwood has caught the very spirit of the vigorous life of the north woods, and never has he made that fact clearer than in this romance. . . . It is on the whole a ‘rattling good story.’"

Cincinnati Enquirer—
"The Courage of Marge O’Doone" is a stirring novel of the far Northwest. . . . It is a tale of mystery and of love, with a heroine unusual in fiction—young, brave, and very naive, as she has lived all her life away from civilization."

New York World—
"The romance is written with great spirit. Mr. Curwood obviously knows the forest, and his descriptions of it are very vivid. He is a dauntless fighter, too, and never fails to give some stirring scenes. . . . It is Mr. Curwood’s best story . . . . and hard to beat."

Daily Fresno Republican—
(California)
"The Courage of Marge O’Doone" fully justifies its name, for it would be hard to find a novel with more thrilling moments, heroic sacrifices and intensities."

The Times-Picayune—
(New Orleans)
"The Courage of Marge O’Doone" is a man’s story full of fierce excitement and thrilling adventure."

Indianapolis Star—
"In ‘The Courage of Marge O’Doone,’ the author, James Oliver Curwood, presents to his readers a tale of romance and adventure depicting life on the Canadian frontier."

Salt Lake Telegram—
"This is a book in which James Oliver Curwood proves himself a born story teller."

Express Advertiser—
(Philadelphia)
"The Courage of Marge O’Doone," by James Oliver Curwood, is a masterly story which takes the reader into the fascinating life of the northern forests. . . . Swift, exhilarating, the story sweeps along in a climax which is a masterpiece of dramatic skill."

The Post Express—
(Rochester, N. Y.)
"The Courage of Marge O’Doone is the story of the life near Hudson’s bay, far from what we call civilization. . . . The book is braving and charmingly written, and as for stye gives, Mr. Curwood is far superior to Dick Lomond, a writer who loved to deal with the Inner primitive types of humanity."

The Bridgeport Post—
(Connecticut)
"The Courage of Marge O’Doone" opens in a snowbound train on an Arctic night, and ends with a night encampment and a strange meeting far from civilization. It is one of those gripping stories that holds one’s attention from start to finish."

Los Angeles Tribune—
"Curwood has many stories of the north woods to his credit, but if he had never written anything except this latest of his novels, "The Courage of Marge O’Doone" his reputation would be assured."

Boston Herald and Journal—
"When James Oliver Curwood risked faithfully northward a life story result, "The Courage of Marge O’Doone" is one of his characteristic narratives, rapid in action and of vigorous pulse."

The San Francisco Chronicle—
"In ‘The Courage of Marge O’Doone there is a stirring love story and plenty of excitement and heroism and adventure.”

The Boston Post—
"Lovers of novelsavid with adventure in the wilds will turn naturally to ‘The Courage of Marge O’Doone.’"

Mr. Fox Announces

A very definite and distinct novelty in the way of a really great picture is provided by Mr. Fox in the newest William Farnum production, "THE ORPHAN."

The success and popularity of this extraordinary star need not be dwelt upon because they are already well recognized, but this drama by Clarence E. Mulford has been added to in the making. J. Gordon Edwards has staged it wonderfully.
Mr. Farnum in a New Role

The charm of the character portrayed by Mr. Farnum is certain.

"THE ORPHAN" is, in fact, a contribution to the classic roles of the screen. It has a heart quality, a verve, a brilliance that captures and holds all who see it.

No finer production has been presented in many a long day.

STAR: Winsome Madge Kennedy, who has a large and devoted following wherever motion pictures are shown and genuine comedy is appreciated.

AUTHOR: Octavus Roy Cohen, whose delightful stories in the Saturday Evening Post are marked by a unique and highly fascinating tang of originality.

DIRECTOR:—Harry Beaumont.

STORY:—Madge Kennedy is seen as Hazel Farron, a chorus girl whose experience back stage has not yet served to rub the silver off her dreams.

Out of a job and desperately hungry, Hazel sees a sign outside a bakery—"Stale Buns, Two for a Cent."

She has just two cents left, and buys some buns—"for her pet poni."

The baker, young and warm-hearted, sees through her subterfuge, and slips a silver dollar into each bun. Then begins a business partnership. Hazel works in the bakery and learns at last why holes are put in doughnuts. After a series of deliciously funny adventures in the bakery, Hazel suddenly realizes that the young baker has stolen her heart.

She has to choose between poverty in the humble bakeshop and luxury under the protection of the wealthy Stanhope, a persistent admirer. The story works up to an indescribably tender climax, in which the young pair of lovers discover that honesty and a kind heart are still the most valuable assets in life.

The best of all Madge Kennedy pictures and a splendid attraction for any house.

To The Exhibitors
Of America:

At the start of the present season, six months ago, I announced that the American Film Company was through making program pictures and that in the future nothing but big special productions based on big novels or plays by big authors, with big casts of competent players, capably directed, would be made in the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., and that these productions would be made individually—as SPECIALS.

That was my promise to the exhibitors of America. Today we can look back upon our achievements and say that that promise has been truly fulfilled. Under this new policy the first of the big specials to issue from the American studios was "Six Feet Four," from the novel by Jackson Gregory, featuring William Russell. This production went forth to exhibitors as a new type of picture—a big special production, specially made, specially directed, specially produced in every sense of the word. It is today one of the most popular productions being played. It is being run in the largest houses throughout the land and is making good in a big way for exhibitors.

All of these productions are now in the hands of exhibitors. They can best attest their value. Ask any exhibitor who has played these big specials what they have brought him in PROFITS!

Unquestionably my promise to the exhibitors of America to provide nothing but big special productions has been fulfilled in the truest sense of the word.
NOW for the future: I again state to the exhibitors of America that the American Film Company will produce nothing but big special features—each produced as a separate entity without regard to cost, length of time, etc. Each production made by the American Film Company in the future will be a special, based on the biggest books, stories, novels and plays we can purchase.

WITHIN the next few months we shall offer special feature productions from the pens of such novelists as Albert Payson Terhune, Henry Russell Miller, Cosmo Hamilton, P. G. Wodehouse, David Anderson, Lois Zellner, and other prominent writers.

We shall in the coming months produce such pictures as: "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver," "The House of Toys," "The Weekend," "The Gamesters," "Their Mutual Child" "Payment Guaranteed," "The Blue Moon" and "Peggy Rebels." Each of these productions will be SPECIALY made, SPECIALY directed, SPECIALY cast with stars of the greatest competency. They will be BIG specials in every sense. We shall devote to their making every facility of our ten year old organization.

THE exhibitors of America have a right to demand SPECIAL productions. The discriminating public is insistent upon having THE BEST—and the best cannot be produced in grist-mill fashion. The best result can only be obtained by devoting to each subject INDIVIDUALLY that special ATTENTION, that special TIME, that special THOUGHT, which makes for perfection in special big productions.

THIS is my promise to the exhibitors of America for the months to come. I know that it will be welcomed by every enterprising, aggressive show man, who appreciates the box office possibilities of big things well done.

STATEMENT OF POLICY AND PLAN

BY

CAPITAL FILM COMPANY
(Incorporated)

Never in the history of the screen has the demand for good motion pictures been so great.

CAPITAL'S work stretches into the vista of the years.

We are straining every effort to make and distribute feature pictures of such exceptional character that they will be welcomed—not demanded—by every exhibitor.

Three new stars have been engaged by CAPITAL for this new departure. The stellar vehicles being phenomenally strong human interest five-reel dramas enriched by unusual production values.

The kind of plays the people of this land are hungering for—CAPITAL HAS THEM.

CAPITAL'S present highly successful super short feature subjects will be given even greater prominence under the new plan of production.

An efficient organization has been created and is now putting into actuality CAPITAL'S new policy.

Watch for announcement of important releases to be made by CAPITAL in May.

Facts and Factors

UNQUESTIONED facts are not open to dispute. The value of a film to an exhibitor depends upon the number of people who buy tickets to see it. That is a very positive fact. The number of paid admissions depends almost altogether upon the value of the posters which advertise it. That is also a positive fact.

The most attractive, appealing and convincing, and hence the most valuable poster produced is the RITCHEY poster. That is the most positive fact of all!

The factors that give this great advertising power to the RITCHEY poster are innumerable. One of them is a perfect organization. One of them is a splendid leadership. One of them is a long experience. Another is the painstaking study devoted to the real needs of the exhibitor, and the actual wants of the motion picture public.

There are other factors—but the one outstanding fact is this—that the RITCHEY poster is the greatest motion picture poster that it is humanly possible to design and execute! It therefore logically follows that their liberal display always results in the maximum amount of ticket sales.

A New Rental System

We cheerfully record again our belief that the big development of 1920 will be the evolution of a new and entirely different rental system.

The new system will NOT be the former flat rental system.

It will NOT be the present percentage system.

It will not demand a guarantee from the exhibitor nor ask for his "nut."

It will be a flat percentage system, asking for no guarantee and no "nut," but simply a percentage of the box-office receipts on a basis of about 25 per cent to the producer.

Again, it will not be the rental arrangement alone, but it will be JOINED to exploitation of the picture, able exploitation, cooperative exploitation, purely local exploitation, in which the producer and exhibitor will work together and share the expense.

The Man Behind Production

We have spoken recently of the organization made picture as the better picture and the picture of the future. And we have defined our idea of an organization made picture; one shaped from beginning to end by a guiding and able hand, who doesn't simply hire but knows and works in harmony and sympathy with each capable member of a trained staff.

We have stated that such a producing unit will turn out uniformly good pictures; that pictures not so made are good largely by accident.

In this connection it is interesting to note the recent remarks of so able and experienced a producer as Cecil M. Hepworth of London. He says:

"There are three primary mistakes which are made in production. The first and worst is that if you have money enough you can make film pictures—for with money you can buy all the other ingredients. The next is that if you have the man, the producer, the real artist, you have all that is absolutely essential. The third and most widely spread idea is that, if you have the man and the money, you can certainly make good pictures. But film picture making is a much more far-reaching and complex thing than this. First, you need the team of players—and team in this connection is a word which must never be lost sight of, for team work throughout is the essence of success. A good producer with a scratch crowd of good actors, and with plenty of money behind him, can make film pictures but he certainly cannot make the best pictures any more than a good conductor, with a scratch orchestra of people who have never worked together before, can make the best music. And team work goes much farther than this. You need a camera-man who is in such absolute personal touch with the producer that their thoughts keep pace together all the time. You need a scenario-writer or author who is absolutely in accord with the producer and the rest of the team. There are scenery experts, lighting experts, and the man or woman who has the choosing of the costumes. It is wonderful how much character-building there is even in the material of which a dress is made. Dresses must be chosen not merely to suit the character, but also to fit the emotion which has to be portrayed. Then following all of these come the photographic staff, who have the handling of the negative and the printing of it. And somewhere in the background is a man who gets all these people together, and holds them together, and is responsible for all the vast business organization which such a team as this demands."

No Politics

AGAIN let us call attention to the fact that the screen must play no politics.

The exhibitor will be approached—he probably already has been—by the political campaigners, who are well aware today that the screen can well nigh carry a national election. This is true. But a great responsibility goes with the great power.

The screen is not a newspaper. It is a news agency. As such it must be inviolate.

From every standpoint—that of the motion picture and of the exhibitors' own local position—there is but one answer to any political organization which offers pictures and that is a flat "No."

Exhibitors and Producers War in New York Legislature

Bill to Amend Deposit System Causes a Big Fight Between Forces

Late News from the Coast

There has been no Associated Producers' announcement as yet. J. D. Williams is in daily conference with the same. It is locally expected that they will release through First National.

It is reported that Pauline Frederick will go to First National at the expiration of her Goldwyn contract.

Enid Bennett will leave the Thomas H. Ince Productions in July and is reported to be contracted with Associated Exhibitors, with Fred Niblo to direct her and C. Gardner Sullivan to write the stories.

The bill was amended to introduce a provision that the motion picture industry should have a right to hear the committee deciding on the bill before the vote is taken. Senator H. P. H. Linton, film producer in Chicago, and the president of the United Motion Picture Industry Association, was on hand opposing the bill. The producers will be satisfied if the bill remains in rules committee until the hour of adjournment, while Mr. Cohen and his tenants are bending every effort to release the bill from rules committee, confident of victory on the floor of the Legislature.

In outlining the attitude of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to the bill, President Cohen this afternoon said:

"The bill is a constructive measure to safeguard the vast amount of money expected by producers and distributors of films by way of deposit or advance payments from the exhibitors doing business in New York State. The exhibitors in this state strenuously oppose the vicious deposit system at present in vogue, but so long as the producers and distributors of film insist on deposits and advance payments from responsible theatre owners, there are times when a deposit in the hands of the exhibitors will be available to be applied on the contract. We appeal to make certain that our money will be available in the event of the producer or the distributor not performing his part of the contract or going out of business, or possibly becoming bankrupt, as was the case with the General Film Company, at one time three giant of the industry, which eventually went into bankruptcy and failed with almost $20,000,000 of exhibitors' deposits which it had in its possession. The most unfortunate part of this transaction was that the producers were among the smallest exhibitors who could not afford the same.

"We also want to prevent the money exacted from us for deposits or advance payments being used by irresponsible producers in either building new theatres in competition with us in wild-cat speculation or to use the same in producing pictures which may take a year or two years before they are offered to us for showing in our theatres. Very often when these pictures, which they have made with our own money and which have turned out to be good ones, they do not permit us to play these same pictures on the original plan, claiming that they are either a special or a super-production and then sell them to us on a different basis.

"This bill should not be opposed by any distributor or producer of film, who has the interest of the exhibitors at heart. The position of the producer and distributor in opposition to this measure, according to the statement of their own representatives, has created considerable surprise to the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State, because not alone do these people have our money on deposit or by advance payments on account of our contract, but they have a combination known as the F. L. M. Co. composed of all the distributors in this state, backed by their home offices, which organization prevents any exhibitor in New York State from securing films of any kind from any manufacturer or distributor of film, if he does not perform his contractual obligations. The exhibitors in this state, as well as in many other states, have suffered many injustices and abuses by representatives of film companies in their negotiations and their contractual relations.

"The Exhibitors' League of the State of New York formed a Credit Indemnity Association, composed of substantial exhibitors in this state, and has offered time and time again to put up a fund sufficiently large, $100,000 if necessary, to guarantee the contractual relations of every member of this organization, and made this offer for the purpose of doing away with the deposit system or advance payment, which we object to so much, but this offer has not been accepted.

"It is particularly unfortunate that in this big industry of ours the manufacturer and distributor members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry have not seen fit to treat with the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the United States in a spirit of even-handed justice and fair play. The exhibitors' interests have not been considered at any time by the members of this association and time and again the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has gone out of its way to antagonize and injure the motion picture exhibitors of the United States.

"It is also our idea that a continuation of the deposit and advance payment system has resulted in increasing the cost of our doing business, as it has been made very easy for some irresponsible promoters to secure large sums of money in advance for objects only in contemplation, and this has resulted in inflation of the worst kind, as these promoters have offered more money to stars and players than their present contracts have provided, enticing these stars and players to either break existing contracts or at the termination of these contracts to ask and get two and three times what they were formerly paid and satisfied with.

"In our opinion, the bill is constitutional. It is fair and just to both the exhibitor, the manufacturer, and the producer, as all we ask for as exhibitors is that if our money is taken from us we shall at least be assured that the same is safe keeping.

In opposition to the measure, Royal K. Fuller of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, said:

"The opposition to the measure is that it changes the entire method of doing business, built up over a period of years and satisfactory to 99 out of every 100 persons engaged. Even in its amended form limiting it solely to the motion picture business.

“T"his is the show down. It has been a long time coming, but it is here, and all the anticipated opposition propaganda against it, which, I am reliably informed, has sprung up in a dozen places within two days after publication of the announcement that I had taken the initiative as an independent exhibitor and asked every fellow independent in the country to join me in a large mass meeting in Chicago, won't and can't stop it. The Chicago meeting means that the independent exhibitor is through being walked on.”

With the foregoing as a prelude, Willard C. Patterson, manager of Sig Samuel's Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., and president of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association, charges that already several forces are at work in the exhibitor field in various sections of the country, attempting to forestall any concerted response to his call for a national meeting of independent theatre owners at the Hotel Congress, Chicago, on Monday, April 26, to demand what he terms a show down with the producer-exhibitor, who are trying to drive the independent fellows out of the business by buying, building or leasing theatres to compete with them."

"I knew, before I started this national call for a mass meeting," declared Mr. Patterson, "that immediately it became public property there would be a well-organized attempt from the quarters where its forces will be felt the most to offset and discount it in the estimation of every independent exhibitor they can reach through personal meetings with their representatives. That is why I took the initial precaution of assuring myself, before making a definite decision to assume the initiative, that other independent exhibitors felt as I do about the necessity for knowing exactly where we are at with the producers who are invading the theatre branch of the industry. I had received answers from more than two hundred exhibitors before I felt certain that my attitude as an individual was a genuine reflection of the national exhibitor sentiment toward competing with theatres operated by the producers whose films they are renting. These studied attempts to discourage a national mass meeting are too late to be effective."

"Independent exhibitors by the hundreds not only are coming to the Chicago meeting, but they are coming there to talk out in meeting, to call facts, names and real identities, and get down to cases and work out a solution that will have a national independent exhibitor force behind it. They tell me, in their wired and written communications, that they are bringing facts and figures on producer aggression of the theatre field, prepared to show the damage and catastrophe that producer ownership of theatres has already done, and the dangers that it holds for their future security and independence as individual exhibitors."

"This mass meeting will be sensational. I do not mean that it will be full of politics and the sort of sensationalism that have made some of our previous national exhibitor meetings memorable within the industry and disgusting outside. There are going to be revelations of the methods of the producer invasion which will startle the trade. The subject is going to be handled without gloves."

"The independent exhibitor, fortunate enough to be in territories where the producer has not yet attempted to get a theatre foothold, where the band of monopoly will strike as soon as it gets a firm clutch on its present objectives, is alive to the dangers but not so thoroughly as his brother exhibitor who has seen their tactics in action, and who has felt the result in his box office receipts. The latter will be there, in force and mighty anxious to act, to tell the former straight-from-the-shoulder facts."

"There has always been more or less talk within the industry about the danger of this producer invasion and would be monopoly, but never was the danger so clearly evident as it is today, and never has it been so nationally recognized by independent exhibitors as an immediate menace to their individual theatre interests. It must be fought now, and the independent exhibitors must fight together."

"The big money effort to dominate the motion picture picture is not a blipper. It is an actual danger, and I have facts and figures to reveal at the Chicago meeting to show that it is. Unless the independent exhibitor fights, fights hard, fights now and fights together, there will be no independent exhibitor in another two years."

"There have been efforts before to monopolize the business. These efforts were directed chiefly at a monopoly of production, and because production is an art and cannot be cornered, the attempt failed. It is possible to monopolize the theatres, to effect an absolute motion picture theatre trust. With theatre ownership and control of the avenues of distribution, big capital will quickly accomplish what it has tried to do before."

"The exhibitor who doesn't fully appreciate the danger which confronts him, who says that the menace we see is 'ludicrous,' needs only to attend the Chicago meeting to convince himself. It is duty he owes to himself and his theatre. The independent exhibitors cannot be wiped out, forced to sell out, or frozen out, if they will stand up and fight together. There are enough of us to successfully protect our interests if we get into action."

"This meeting is not called for the purpose of forming an association, but to determine, in open conference and discussion, the facts and figures to reason from, the best method of combating the danger of producer monopoly in the field, and it seems to me that the organization of a national, permanent association of the real independent exhibitors can accomplish this better than any other method."

"Whatever develops out of the Chicago meeting, you can be very sure that it will not be a passive organization, nor a social club, nor a political proposition. It will be, whatever form the meeting takes, an aggressive, hard-hitting fighting unit."

"From the responses I have received to date, it is certain that many of the biggest and most important independent theatre owners in the country will be there, and for everyone of them there will be two or more of the independent theatre owners from the smaller cities and towns, men who have had sufficient experience with producer-exhibitor theatres or producer-exhibitor agents, or who know exhibitors who have had this sort of opposition confronting them to realize the need for action."
Canadian Exhibitors Aroused by Prospective Measures

Sunday Closing and Increased Tax Cause Great Concern and Alarm

MOVING picture exhibitors of important Provinces in both Eastern and Western Canada have been greatly aroused over formidable developments affecting the operation of theatres and prospective results who are giving the moving picture interests great concern.

In the East, the exhibitors in the Province of Quebec have received intimation that they will be required to close their theatres on Sundays, while in the West, the Province of British Columbia, promises to impose an amusement tax of twenty cents on all excess receipts of all theatres. The situation in both instances is considered serious and in each case the financial returns of the business may be greatly affected.

The Lord’s Day Alliance, a self-appointed body of upholders, which has chosen for its task the enforcement of the Sunday Observance laws of the Dominion, is said to be behind the move to compel all theatres of Quebec cities to close on Sundays. About two years ago R. L. Vallee, proprietor of the Casino Theatre, Sherbrooke, Quebec, was convicted in Police Court of breaking the law by conducting Sunday performances. He carried the case to higher courts but the Supreme Court of Appeal recently confirmed the conviction. Mr. Vallee carried on the fight alone and has finally lost out. Soon after the decision of the court became known, the many exhibitors of Montreal received intimation from the Quebec Government that they would have to close on Sundays, it is reported. The theatre managers were advised that they were violating the Lord’s Day Act, a Federal law, by Chief Tremblay of the Montreal Police Department, but he declares that he was not instructed to do more than issue this warning. Hon. L. A. Taschereau, acting Prime Minister of Quebec, also announced that the Quebec Government had no authority to enforce the law because it happened to be a Dominion statute. On the other hand, Hon. Mr. Doherty of Ottawa, the Federal Minister of Justice, has issued a statement in which he points out that the enforcement of the Lord’s Day Act comes under the direction of the Provincial Attorney-General.

Further color has been added to the situation by a statement on the part of Mayor Coussineau of Hull, the third largest city in Quebec, to the effect that he does not hold any intention to enforce the Lord’s Day Act in his city. He has also made the declaration that the abolition of Sunday shows is only desired by “a small section of the people who are members of the Lord’s Day Alliance.” The enforcement of the Sunday law, he considers, is a restriction upon the personal liberty of the public and an insult to the man who works hard all week.

Hull gets considerable patronage each Sunday from Ottawa, the Canadian capital, on the Ontario side of the Ottawa River, as the Ottawa theatres are closed on Sundays. Exhibitors throughout Quebec declare that Sunday is the big day of the week and that their company is compelled to close they will suffer greatly. In addition, the various municipalities will also suffer because of decreased revenue from the amusement tax. Incidentally, Quebec is the only Province in Canada where Sunday shows have been tolerated.

On the Pacific Coast there is also great consternation among exhibitors because of a proposal on the part of the British Columbia Legislature to impose a tax of twenty per cent on the gross receipts of all theatres. A strong deputation, representing the theatre interests of Vancouver and Victoria, waited upon the Provincial Cabinet at Victoria on March 26th, to raise objections to the proposed assessment. It was pointed out by these exhibitors that such a tax would be considerable in excess of amusement taxes in other Provinces and it was also asserted that if the measure were carried a number of the exhibitors of Vancouver would quit entirely. The statement was made that the three large Canadian companies which are now arranging to erect large new theatres in Vancouver representing an aggregate investment of upwards of $4,500,000 would undoubtedly call off their plans. Frank Patrick of Vancouver declared that a considerable number of the Vancouver theatres were not showing a real profit and if the huge tax were imposed they would be forced to suspend operations, in which case the object of the assessment would be defeated.

Mr. Patrick made the interesting point that the license fees of automobiles are used to improve the highways for the use of motorists but the amusement tax is not used in any way by the Province to improve or benefit the theatre business. Several speakers declared that the peak in amusement admission prices had been reached and if admisions were admitted by more the public would stay away from the theatres.

In connection with the proposal by the B.C. Government to collect a tax equal to twenty per cent of the gross receipts of the theatres, it is pointed out that the Amusement Tax in Ontario averages seven and one-half per cent of the gross receipts. In Ontario, the patrons pay this tax when they buy admission tickets. In Quebec, the civic theatre ticket tax is slightly lower than that collected in Ontario.

C. A. Taylor Quits Pathe Buffalo Exchange

C. A. Taylor, manager of the Buffalo, N. Y. Pathe exchange for several years, has resigned his position to take effect immediately. The announcement of his resignation came as a big surprise in Buffalo exchange and exhibitor circles.

J. E. Kimberley, former manager of the World branch, has been named to succeed Mr. Taylor at Pathe. The former Pathe exchange head states that he has as yet made no plans for the future. He will take a few weeks’ vacation before considering several propositions offered him.

A.M.P.A. Elected to U.S. Chamber of Commerce

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., has been elected an organization member of the United States Chamber of Commerce. The Advertisers’ Organization is grouped in Class A by the Chamber; its numerical membership strength entitling it to a delegate representing it in the Chamber, this delegate also to act as National Councillor. Paul Gulick was elected to serve as the first delegate and councillor.

Mother of H. F. Rendall Buried This Week

The sympathy of his fellow workers and the industry is extended to Harold F. Rendall, author of "Picture News" on the death of his mother, Mrs. Maud M. Rendall, who was very well known in the musical and social circles of the Bronx and was actively engaged in real estate enterprises for many years in that section of the Metropolis. Mrs. Rendall is survived by her husband, George F. Rendall; her son, Harold F. Rendall, advertising staff of Motion Picture News, and by her daughter, Mrs. Geraldine M. Priest, who is the wife of Robert F. Priest, well-known in film circles. Mrs. Rendall died on Monday, April 12th, following a long illness, and was buried from St. Paul's Church, the Bronx, on Wednesday, April 14th.

Exhibitors are interested in the bill, the opinion of the producers and distributors, is a pernicious one and the passage of which would work immeasurable injury to the business, providing that it could be enforced.

In its present amended form, the bill now reads that whereas money shall be deposited or advanced on a contract for the use or rental of personal property as security for performance of the contract or to be applied to payments on such contract when due, such money, with interest accruing thereon, if any, until repair or so applied, shall continue to be the money of the person making such deposit or advance and shall be a trust fund in the possession of the person with whom such deposit or advance shall be made and shall be deposited in a bank or trust company and not mingled with other funds or become an asset of such trustee.

"It is doubtful if a bank could be found which would accept the so-called trust funds because of their very smallness. No exhibitor has lost any money by reason of the arrangements that are in force today and a number of lawyers have expressed the opinion that if the bill is passed in its present form a law it could not affect the industry in any way as it could not take away the right of parties to make a contract."
A.M.P.A. Seeking Closer Co-operation

John S. Spargo Made Field Secretary to Bring Press and Film Interests Together

The most ambitious project of its three years of active existence was initiated by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., at its regular meeting recently when it unanimously voted to employ John S. Spargo, one of the best known newspapermen in the country as its field secretary in a campaign to secure closer co-operation between the daily newspapers of the country and the motion picture interests.

For years there has been a condition existing in the exploitation of motion picture productions which has made it difficult for the newspaper publisher and the motion picture advertiser to meet each other half way. Each felt that the other wanted it all; each felt the other was giving all and getting little back. Mr. Advertiser felt lost in facing any kind of a country-wide newspaper campaign for the exploitation of films while Mr. Publisher felt that his paper was just as much entitled to consideration as two thousand other similar publications. The result has been that neither has got anywhere. Co-operation there was none, with the exception of a very few brilliant instances. But these exceptions have proven the rule and have finally shown the way in which the two can be brought together, at a time when each needs the other more than ever before to achieve best results.

Mr. Spargo has for many years past held executive positions on many of the larger papers of the country and severed his direct newspaper connections to undertake the work of bringing the papers of the country and the motion picture people to a closer co-operation. He recently discovered the key to the situation and came to New York to put the proposition up to the A. M. P. A., the only body which could entertain and had the opportunity to put through such an ambitious project. A working plan was finally formulated by the A. M. P. A. and put before the body by President Golick and enthusiastically adopted.

"We are fortunate," said Mr. Golick, "in securing the services of Mr. Spargo whose acquaintance among newspaper men is of the widest and who has been connected with a score of the best papers in all parts of the country. One of his purposes is to make a careful and analytical survey of all the larger cities of the United States from the standpoint of motion picture exploitation, and the statistics he will compile will be of infinite value to every exploitation manager in the A. M. P. A. The wonder is that no such project has ever been attempted before. And the reason is that there has never before been an organization in the industry strong and unselfish enough to undertake it."

Federated President Issues Statement

Joseph L. Friedman Warns Exhibitors Not to Sell to Big Film Powers

"Do not, under any conditions, sell your theatre to film powers—and do not let the big interests get even a finger hold on your business," is the gist of the first statement from President Joseph L. Friedman of the newly formed Federated Film Exchanges of America.

"There is a temptation, when big money talks," said Mr. Friedman, "for the individual to listen and let the governing powers of the big money interests do his thinking for him. For the last year and a half thereabouts, the film industry has been bearing rumors of such and such an organization investing in theatrical interests all over the country. And, as a consequence, the individual theatre owner does not know which way to turn. It was partly to combat this feeling of insecurity to settle in the minds of the exhibitors that the business they have built belongs to, and to them alone, that the Federated Film Exchanges of America was formed.

"In the past, the independent producer—and who can say that the greatest pictures of all time have not come from the independent producer?—has, as a business man, sold his pictures where the profit was greatest, and where full distribution was practically guaranteed. It was impossible for the independent exchange man to compete, in buying power, with the big film circuits, for the simple reason that they were not organized. And, in spite of the fact that the united buying power of the leading state right exchange was and always has been a mighty buying power and on a par with the buying power of the leading exchange systems throughout the country, State Right men had to sit idly by and watch the greatest pictures pass into hands other than theirs because they were not organized.

"The Federated Film Corporation releases the exhibitor from dependence upon the product of any organization. He can laugh at threats to 'freeze him out.' He does not have to undertake any disagreeable contracts in order to save himself from bitter competition. With the Federated back of him, he can rest assured of a high grade product for his screen, without any joker. There is no 'nigger' in the Federated's woodpile. If the exhibitor grows, so does the Federated. It is simply a question of every man to his own good. Let the producer produce, the distributor distribute, and the exhibitor exhibit his pictures. If the picture is 'there' the money is there for all concerned.

"It stands to reason that an organization, such as the Federated Film Exchanges of America, cannot continue to live and do business unless the pictures handled by them live up to their advance notices. There is no tie-up—each individual picture published through Federated channels must make money, or all succeeding pictures will cost the Exchange system dearly. There can be no such system as a picture a week, some good, some fair, some bad. Each Federated picture has a standard to live up to, and if it doesn't live up to, the Federated Films Exchanges suffer.

"The independent exchanges, having organized, are a power to be reckoned with. That it is a benefit to the industry goes without saying. It benefits the producer, by giving him a powerful and financially sound organization through which to circulate his films. It benefits the exchange man, by securing for him the best film that money can buy. It benefits the exhibitor by bringing to him, in a businesslike manner, an opportunity to show his patrons the best of pictures."
Rail Strike Demoralizes Film Shipments

Parcel-Post Gets Brunt of Traffic; Deliver by Messengers in Metropolitan Area

A DVICES from the various exchanges in the Metropolitan district inform that shipment of picture-films by rail has been completely demoralized by the railroad strike, affecting the lines in New York and New Jersey. Parcel-post has been resorted to in the majority of instances for transportation of prints to more distant points, but exhibitors living in the immediate neighborhood of New York City are coming in person or dispatching messengers to the exchanges to convey the prints by hand.

The parcel-post system has been made to bear the brunt of the traffic, and according to latest returns, so great has become the mass of material assigned to the postoffice for delivery that all stations have become virtually swamped. In the face of these conditions, delivery of films by the former has become very unreliable at the present time. Delays of three and four days in the arrival of prints at their destinations are being reported with increasing frequency. To overcome this handicap, most of the exchanges are dispatching their films several days in advance of the regular time.

The First National exchange for New Jersey reports that exhibitors within easy distance of New York are being notified by telegram three days in advance of a scheduled showing to visit the New York or Newark offices in person or to dispatch messengers for the purpose of conveying the films by hand. First National exchange for New York State declares that the more distant centers in upper New York are being accommodated by baggage checking two days in advance with varying success.

Vitaphone reports that exhibitors from the surrounding districts in New Jersey are coming in an antitax for their prints. Theatre-owners along the West Shore, Erie and Lackawanna lines have been particularly hard-hit. The Central New Jersey service has been much more satisfactory. No great difficulty has been experienced in supplying exhibitors in the Connecticut territory, said Vitaphone. "Service in that direction is good. Since Friday last, we have practically suspended all shipment by rail. The parcel-post system has been our usual medium of transportation."

Goldwyn headquarters states that it wired all its branches on Tuesday to ascertain existing conditions. "No shipments have been going forward by express or freight," says Goldwyn. "The branches have been conducting their incoming and outgoing deliveries by parcel-post, and while the parcel-post service has been fairly good in the face of conditions, material is now stacking up enormously. A parcel may be buried under for three or four days, and it is just as likely as not that the last parcel in will be the first out. Reports from Boston show conditions there to be almost normal, but the local situation is giving us great difficulty."

Pathé announces that it is attempting to facilitate the parcel-post delivery of its films by conveying them to points in the terminal postoffice stations, thus eliminating the delay that would occur in first shipping them to one of the district stations. Taxicab delivery is also being utilized, it is stated, in delivering prints to exhibitors in the Metropolitan district.

New Chicago Theatre Opens

THE first of the projected De Luxe houses in Chicago's downtown district, Barbee's New Loop Theatre, opened on Saturday, April 10th. Eager crowds waited in the lobby of the theater, which is being daily decorated, and entered and view the widely heralded beauties of the theatre and the excellent first program offered. Judging by the attendance of the first few days, the theatre will have a successful career.

No expense or effort had been spared to make this thousand-seat house one of the handsomest in the country. Allegorical paintings in the circular lobby and the Italian renaissance mural paintings in the theatre itself being particularly effective.

Despite the fact that workmen had been busy up till the last minute putting on the final touches in the theatre, W. S. Barbee and Assistant Manager Joseph Koppel, who are making a great reputation as a showman while manager of the Riviera, put on their first show as if the theatre had been in operation for months, and were the recipients of many compliments.

A more detailed account of the opening will be given in the New Theatre section of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Blackton Pictures Have Private Showing

J. Stuart Blackton's two latest productions, "Passers-by" and "Soul and Body", were given a private showing on Tuesday evening, April 14th, at Wurlitzer's Hall, New York City. The pictures will be released by Pathé in June and August and will not be reviewed for the trade until later.

Herbert Rawlinson is featured in both pictures. "Passers-by" has an all-star cast, which includes Tom Lewis, W. J. Ferguson, May Massey, a new quamer to the screen, is seen in "Soul and Body."

Ferd Turner Made Loew Publicity Director

Ferd ("Terry") Turner leaves New York this week to assume the duties of publicity director of the Loew Southern and Southwestern circuit, with headquarters in Atlanta.

Mr. Turner, formerly a Baltimore newspaperman, became associated with the Loew interests as a press representative of Loew's Hippodrome at Baltimore six years ago. Since that time he has opened a number of new Loew theatres throughout the United States and Canada. The Loew southern and southwestern circuit now include more than twenty-five theatres.

Adolph Zukor to Return from European Trip

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has been in Europe for the past four weeks, will sail from Liverpool shortly on the S. S. Mauretania on his homeward journey.
On this and the opposite page is shown a parade which was arranged to advertise "Excuse My Dust" at the Rialto theatre, Denver. The Denver agency for the Roamer car knew this was the machine Wallace Reid used in the film and for that reason the automobile people were willing to assist in exploiting the picture. The whole parade so far as cars go did not cost the Rialto a cent. The amount of publicity accruing cannot be measured, but it is known to have been tremendous.

The tie-up was arranged by A. G. Birch, the Denver F.-P. exploitation man and the details were worked out by the theatre publicity crew. Mr. Birch and the Roamer people.
Making Exploitation Reach All Classes

Striking an exploitation note that commands instant exhibitor attention, John E. Koen, manager of the Federal theatre, Salem, Mass., has devised a promotion campaign in which a previously unused factor played a considerable part.

This element, which is adaptable to any community was brought into play when Mr. Koen discovered that exploitation did not reach its maximum limits unless it was literally in the language that could be understood by all. In previous campaigns only the English-speaking population of Salem was reached. Mr. Koen found there were 10,000 people who speak the French language and who can be appealed to only in that language.

"Why discriminate against ticket-buyers who are orderly and refined?" asks Mr. Koen. "A certain percentage of the 10,000 people who think and act in French despite the fact that they work in American mills and manufacturing plants are prospective theatregoers. At least, they were not disinterested until I had proved it. The opportunity came when I was playing "Daddy Long Legs."

To put the greatest possible appeal behind his exploitation, Mr. Koen inserted a display ad in the weekly French newspaper offering $50 as a prize to the girl who bore the greatest resemblance to Mary Pickford. This offer was also made through the English newspaper. And the greatest surprise in the campaign is the fact that one of the French girls reached by the exploitation in the French newspaper won the prize.

By cultivating the friendship of thousands of people whose presence in Salem theatres was not requested, Mr. Koen developed an idea that will not be overlooked in future exploitation campaigns that will be waged in his city either by himself or by other exhibitors.

Novelty Presentation Idea for "Uneasy Feet"

"Uneasy Feet" is the "faceless, unless" comedy was given an unique presentation at the California theatre, Los Angeles.

Taking advantage of the fact that the upper half of the screen must necessarily be dark, and that the film was devoid of subtitles the managing director, Robert Poole, arranged to flash upon the silver screen continuously, titles of songs, marches and arias, while the orchestra was playing. This conveys the thought directly to the minds of the audience, supplementing the visual effect of the action of the lower half of the screen.

The song slide was flashed by means of triple exposure. First the film is exposed for the actual music notes, the full bar of the strain being shown; then it is exposed for the words, and when flashed upon the screen where a film is being projected, the effect is produced by triple exposure.

We take, for example, when a pretty pair of feminine feet start walking down the street and the huskier pair of masculine feet follows, as the orchestra starts playing "Alma, Sweet Alma, Where Do You Live?" the words and music are flashed upon the screen.

The dissolving titles were all controlled from the orchestra leader's seat, so that the music on the screen and that furnished by the orchestra synchronized.

The musical score was presented by special arrangement of Glenn Knight, synchronized by Rene Williams under the personal direction of R. H. Poole.

Maddox Overcomes Holy Week Jinx

Holy Week hasn't any terrors for "Jim" Maddox, pilot of the destinies of the Southern theatre, Columbus, Ohio.

But instead of sitting back and resting up, waiting for a week of poor business, Maddox put on some extra steam, opened the throttle and blew the usual Holy Week fizzle.

Mr. Maddox had "April Folly" hooked at the Southern for Holy Week. He began his exploitation campaign in an orthodox way by a bombardment of 24 sheets.

Then he put the Columbus Citizen to put on a contest apropos of April Fools' Day. He offered a box party and other ticket prizes for the best April Fools' stories sent into the "April Folly" Editor of the Citizen. Announcements of the contest, the answers and the winners occupied daily space on the front page of the Citizen before and during the engagement.

Then Mr. Maddox lined up the leading dealers in women's wear in Columbus, for a fashion show with living models. Girls from the Ohio State College were secured. This provided a great deal of newspaper publicity and got the entire college talking about the Southern's show. The style show was presented at three performances daily during the week's run of "April Folly." To draw 'em into the theatre, Mr. Maddox did not announce the names of any of the girls acting as models. Curiosity led the women into the theatre to see who the girls were, if nothing else. Then "April Folly" and the style show sent them out boosting the programme.
Grauman's Prologue and Setting for "The Toll Gate"

Views of Sid Grauman's specialty number (top), "A Dream Garden," described in the Motion Picture News in a recent issue and which is said to be the most elaborate number ever staged at Grauman's Los Angeles theatre, famed for its specialties of this sort.
"Nag" Camps in Theatre Lobby

I t is better to be born lucky than rich, says an old adage, to which might be added that if luck sends along something that can be made into a newspaper story which the editors will print free and without tacking that accursed "adv." on the tag line, it is an unwise showman who doesn't take advantage of it.

All of which has little to do with the fact that recently a decrepit old horse chose the Paramount-Empress theatre lobby, Salt Lake City, for a camping place, except that George C. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount-Empress, saw to it that every newspaper man in town had the facts of the case, and perhaps more than facts in order to make the story sound good and that in consequence the Salt Lake City papers carried stories in their issue of March 26th, which were good for considerable advertising for the theatre.

Here is one of the stories, the best one so far as style is concerned. We reprint it from the columns of the Salt Lake City News; the moral is never neglect an opportunity to get publicity, especially free publicity.

During the storm last evening the Paramount-Empress theatre temporarily entertained an uninvited guest. A poor truck horse, which had evidently broken away from its owner, was in search of shelter and seeing the brilliantly lighted theatre entrance immediately went in.

The management, through sympathetic, could not receive such a guest, and so the animal was shown the door and departed through a side entrance.

After leaving the Paramount-Empress theatre, the old mare wandered over to the city jail yard where a brand new automobile was standing. Appearances indicated that she had leaned against the machine to rest when the springs of life gave out and she fell dead. In falling the animal broke the windshield and step of the machine and otherwise damaged it. When the officers went into the yard early this morning, the aged animal was rigid in death, her eyes closed forever to the hardships from which she suffered so cruelly.

While the owner of the animal is not known, the police believe she had been turned out to pasture and had broken through the fence, wandering to the business district of the city.

Newspaper Interests Itself in "Pollyanna"

The attention that "Pollyanna" is getting from newspapers and in other quarters outside the theatrical sphere is a fine tribute to the picture.

Among the papers to give the feature a boost which wasn't "paid for" is the Tyler (Texas) Courier-Times which managed a private showing for the clergy, school faculties and other prominent personages of Tyler held at the Electric Palace theatre prior to the public showing of the film. The affair was a great success and much space was devoted to the film and the private screening by the Courier-Times.

Lam Doesn't "Lam" the One-Sheet

Consider the one-sheet.

O. C. Lam, manager of the Rome Amusement Company, Rome, Ga., has.

One-sheets cost less than bigger sheets.

You can buy more of them for the same money.

"The more sheets you stick around the streets the more people you'll attract," says Mr. Lam.
Picture of Nazimova Featured in Seattle Exploitation

(Right)
Mr. Clemmer was able to arrange a window display in one of the most exclusive jewelry stores in the city, the feature of which was a cut-out of Nazimova draped with jewels. A genuine hairpiece was placed about her neck. Diamonds, rubies and other precious stones were held by her hands. A three carat diamond rested in her "cup." A diamond bracelet was placed on her wrist. On each side of the frame a beautiful pearl necklace was draped.
Charles Perry Takes Advantage of Star's Visit

Violet Heming Reviews "Everywoman" for the Minneapolis Papers

WHEN "Everywoman" was shown at the New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, it had the distinction of being the first feature ever exhibited for which the advance newspaper criticism came from the star of the production. Violet Heming was playing an engagement in "Three Faces East" in Minneapolis, a few days prior to the opening of "Everywoman" at the New Lyric, so manager Charles C. Perry saw an opportunity to obtain some new and unusual publicity for his coming engagement of Miss Heming's picture, having the star "review" the production. A showing was arranged for Miss Heming in a local projection. Miss Heming came to the show and then wrote all about it just like a "hard boiled" critic.

Miss Heming's review was a novel one for Minneapolis. She told of the varied tudes of the company, working under difficult conditions in the wind and snowstorm of powdered asbestos, and gave some light as to the various localities where on the location films were made. Details of her make-up before the film camera proved to be of great interest to theatre-goers, for Miss Heming is now regarded as a popular star in this city and during the showing of the film there was much comment as to her appearance and demeanor in the picture as compared to her acting on the stage.

No other feature film shown in Minneapolis was given so much attention as "Everywoman," by Mr. Perry and his assistants, particularly in the scene effects which accompanied it. "Nobody," in person, appeared before the curtain and spoke the prologue with the theatre darkened, and as he spoke the names of six of the characters, everyman, vice, modesty, vanity, youth and beauty, prototypes of the characters in person appeared in illuminated panels especially in the boxes on either side of the theatre. These models, gorgeously gowned, were posed behind painted screens, about six by eight feet in dimension, with backgrounds of tapestry paintings and other settings particularly fitting to the various characters.

Minneapolis people became acquainted with "Nobody" many days before the film was first shown, for "Nobody," mysteriously robed, walked the downtown streets each day. His garments was the legend, "I am Nobody! I know Everybody!"

The famous symbolic play furnished a basis for a number of artistically attractive advertising captions. Newspaper advertising was elaborate. Layouts with groups of the cast were used profusely. Street car advertising was resorted to and hundreds of street cars signs were used in the interiors of the cars. Several thousand copies were posted conspicuously throughout the city.

Capitol Staging Prologue for Nazimova Picture

THE Capitol theatre, New York, is presenting an atmospheric prologue with its showing of Nazimova in "The Heart of a Child" which merits commendation.

A scene identical with the London slum location in which Sally Snake is first shown in the picture has been produced by artist John Wenger. In front of this set characters made up as are those in the opening scenes of the film dwindle with an actress impersonating Nazimova in the foreground. The prologue and setting is presented with a net between the audience and the performers.

The whole scene is artistically lighted and at the climax of the action the title of the picture is immediately revealed on the proscenium drapes with the first scene of the film striking the screen in exact duplication of that which the audience has just viewed in the flesh. It is especially effective since "The Heart of a Child" opens with plenty of action and without the loss of time usually taken up by the introduction of the characters.

Something New in Trade Presentations

Cleveland Trade Showing of "Virgin of Stamboul" Artistic

"Presentation" and "exploitation" those great words in the vocabulary of the picture theatre manager these days have taken on a new meaning through an innovation recently executed by E. J. Smith Universal's exchange man ager at Cleveland. It has been the custom since the birth of the industry to "screen" a picture to prospective purchasers in dingy, cold, dismal projection rooms with no music or atmosphere attempted.

Smith has thrown overboard all the traditions of trade showings. He has noticed the results attendant on good exploitation with exhibitors and has concluded that there was a lesson for him in the results achieved. So when he screens a picture now he puts on a regular show and for two reasons.

"In the first place," he says, "I believe that a picture put on with the accompanying trimmings makes a better impression than a picture without trimmings."

"In the second place it greases the road for the salesman and the expense justifies itself in quick returns on bookings and advance advertising." Smith recently staged a showing for "The Virgin of Stamboul" which is worthy of any first class theatre anywhere. Six hundred exhibitors from all parts of Ohio came in to see the picture. At the entrance of the balcony where the picture was displayed, stood two big burly fellows in Indian costume. They stood there with arms folded just like statues. You knew it was going to be an atmospheric picture before even entering the room. If there was any doubt in your mind about the kind of picture you were to see, this was instantly dispelled when you got well within the portals, for incense was strong. "We burned a couple of hundred pounds of the stuff," said Palmer Slocum, the local Universal publicity man. After getting a nose full of the incense, and being comfortably seated by more costumed Indian ushers, you were further transported into the land of the Orient by Phil Spitalny. Spitalny wielded the baton of one of the most popular orchestras in the city. He played regularly at the Metropolitan theatre. His chief past time is to write special symphonic accompaniments to new photodramas.

The result of Smith's efforts was a thoroughly satisfied audience who had seen a picture with all of the "trimmings" and were able to judge just what the feature would look like when it came into their theatres instead of having to imagine what the addition of the "trimmings" would do to make the offering better entertainment.
How the New Lyric of Minneapolis Staged 'Everywoman'

One of the most artistic stage settings ever presented in Milwaukee was that which the Alhambra arranged for its showing of 'The River's End.' A view of this setting is shown on this page.
Providence Joins Ranks of "Circusers"

THEATRE managers in Providence have held aloof from the so-called "circus methods" of exploitation. Each manager of a theatre has waited for the other fellow. They have felt that stunts killed business rather than increased it. They have imagined that the public felt that exploitation of anything but the conservative type meant that a theatre had nothing to show and was adopting methods to get business that the merits of his attraction would not.

However, the ice has been broken. Manager William J. Mahoney has started the ball rolling with his campaign for "In Old Kentucky," and all the old ideas have now been placed in the discard for the feature drew business that broke all records and Manager Mahoney for one is converted to the kind of exploitation that other cities have been using for some time.

Mr. Mahoney's campaign began with the usual newspaper advertising, extra large, however, with plenty of window cards and billboard displays next. Then the "circus" stuff began. The "horse" stuff as related so many times in exploitation stories concerning this picture and a negro band came next.

The band was obtained after quite a search of Providence's residency. After much effort an aggregation of ten of the best horn blowers in the city was assembled and dressed up in some real band uniforms. At their head a colored chap was placed who swung his horn in true circus style.

The "ceremonies" started in front of the theatre at noon with a banquet concert, lasting for 15 minutes. Then came the street parade which wended its way through the several principal downtown streets, and back to the theatre. This scheme was carried on for three days.

Exhibitor Prints Extra To Exploit "Clouds"

"Extra," "Extra," "Xtra," "Xtra,"

That was the cry that was heard from the voices of more than twenty-five news-boys in Colorado Springs, Colo., one evening last week, and hundreds upon hundreds of people in the community became interested in what the boys had to offer.

The "extra" was a gigantic stunt that Mr. Argue of the Princess theatre of Colorado Springs was putting over, in connection with the opening of Douglas Fairbanks' latest production "When the Clouds Roll By."

And it went over with a bang.

The "extra" was this. The management had printed in regular newspaper size, a regulation section of the local newspaper, and had it inserted with the regular edition of the paper, calling the "Extra," however, "The Princess Gazette."

The extra contained but two advertisements on the picture and six columns of each page was filled with wonderful stories, written in regular newspaper style, all about the coming of the production, Fairbanks himself, the members of his cast and a number of personality stories. The paper was particularly interesting and created a lot of interest among the townsfolk, and caused the theatre to do record business.

Boy "Pugs" Exploitation Act

LOTS of things have happened to and in Phoenix, Arizona, since the days when Augustus Thomas mentioned it in his play, "Arizona." Among these happenings is the advent of motion pictures and from that a growth in picture exploitation which ranks with the best in any city of its size.

Among the exponents of publicity extraordinary is Richards & Nace, who own and operate five theatres in Phoenix. This firm recently put over "The Egg Crate Walla" in a new and novel way.

The picture was booked for the Strand. Looking about for something out of the ordinary as an exploitation stunt, A. G. Pickett, upon whom the devising of ways and means of advertising devolves, hit on the idea of having a prize fight staged. A couple of youthful batters, promising kiddies of the town, were secured. A ring was fixed up on a truck, as will be noticed in the accompanying illustration. The boys were particularly clever with the gloves and being of equal weight and liking to "scrap" they staged rounds which were a delight to the average individual.

The float was moved around from corner to corner of the city, where a boat would be staged. The "pugs" would work a minute or so in a fast round and then retire to their respective corners for rest while the float moved to a new location.

In addition to the exploitation described above the Strand used diamond shaped string cards. These were used in great quantities on automobiles parked throughout the city and the night before the opening the city was covered with cards by tying them to door knobs.
From Jacksonville to Portland Oregon and Vice Versa

When "The Luck of the Irish" played Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., Manager Frank Lacey dressed his real Irish usherettes in characteristic Irish costumes, decorated the theatre and lobby in green and otherwise gave over the week to a proper observance of St. Patrick's Day. This cut shows the house staff in their Irish clothes. The photograph was taken in front of a 24 sheet stand on the side wall of the theatre.

Phil Gersdorff, director of publicity and advertising for the S. A. Lynch houses at Jacksonville, Florida, made arrangements with a local automobile dealer for the display of this novelty car in the lobby of the Arcade theatre during the run of "Double Speed."

California, Los Angeles Presenting Abbreviated Opera

A SUGGESTION that will likely open a new line of thought to exhibitors in cities where high schools and colleges stand in local favor—and this means everywhere—has been exhibited about as the result of a recent experience on the part of Julius K. Johnson, manager of the New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis. The most interesting part of Mr. Johnson's plan is the fact that it enables exhibitors to find for their theatres a place in the hearts of the hundreds or thousands of pupils attending local educational institutions.

For a long time the idea of distributing blotters bearing an advertisement of the theatre or offering reduced admission prices for school children has been tried without sensation or success. Mr. Johnson's idea is a sure-fire winner and especially when the theatre article—provided with a film service that secures the pictures of local events. Mr. Johnson's exploitation occurred only recently when during the showing of "The Fighting Shepherds" he had 35 press agents among university students telling of the entertainment power of his star and his Pictures.

The 35 boys represented the basketball squad of the University of Minnesota. Several weeks before Mr. Johnson had 350 feet of film taken of this squad. He held up the showing of this picture until the annual banquet of the basketball boys and immediately following the dinner invited them to see themselves in motion pictures. The invitation was immediately accepted. Anxious to do something to reciprocate for Mr. Johnson's courtesy, the boys each asked for Anita Stewart's photograph. The request was complied with promptly and during the entire week these 35 boys spread about the news of the picture throughout every class room and study hall in the university.

"And the best part of it is that any exhibitor can do it," said Mr. Johnson.

Latest Walsh Picture Praiseworthy

FOR audiences who enjoy good melodrama, which includes the clientele of most theatres, this latest George Walsh picture can be recommended as a sure-fire attraction. For sustained action throughout, only through traditional many hands before being returned to the safe. Walsh serves as the knight who aids the girl to recover the stolen property in order to keep the name of her suicide brother clear. The star is at his best and Virginia Hammond as the girl gives a good performance. Louis Wolheim is an ideal underworld boss in appearance, but overacts and thereby detracts somewhat from an otherwise flawless interpretation of the role.

The picture has numerous fights, in which Walsh mixes with characteristic vigor as the hero. The direction by George Beranger is far above the average for stories of this class and a careful attention to lighting and detail aid in giving the film distinction. The fact that all the action of the story triumphs within a few hours makes possible a practically perfect continuity.

The production gets a running start and keeps going to the very last bit of film. An unusual picture from many angles and an especially good vehicle for the star. To be released on the William Fox program.

Fake Auto Smash-up Gets Attention

A LITTLE thing like an automobile smash-up gets the crowds into the theatre, according to Harry Pomeroy, manager of the Strand theatre, Ottawa, Ont. The incident just over the presentation of the "Speed Maniac," starring Tom Mix, during the last half of the week of March 29, Pomeroy arranged with a local automobile dealer to spill an old automobile in front of the Strand. The car was dumped on its side and left there to be the object of gaze by the passing crowd. Large cards referring to the feature were attached to the wreck. A few weeks previously, Pomeroy had a brand new model shown in the lobby of the Strand as a stunt for an "Automobile Week" and also to boost a picture in which an automobile figured prominently.

In connection with the presentation of the "Speed Maniac," Pomeroy ran special advertisements on the sporting page of the Ottawa Journal which referred to the prize fight episode and the automobile race in the feature. Of further interest to local sport fans, Pomeroy arranged for bulletins on the Stanley Cup series between the Ottawa and Seattle Hockey Clubs, this being for the world's professional hockey championship. These bulletins were announced at intervals to the crowded theatre.

Headwork and Coincidence Great Team at Hamilton, O.

Headwork, combined with coincidence, tells the story of how "Goldwyn Week," was "put over" at the Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, by the combined efforts of Harry Martin, Director of Publicity for Goldwyn's Cincinnati office, and Fred S. Allen, manager of the Palace.

It so happens that "Goldwyn Week" was also "Holy Week," and by a curious coincidence each of the three Goldwyn features booked for showing at the Palace during the week had a moral twist to it which made it particularly appropriate. The first feature, "The Street Called Straight," which was booked for the first three days, is of a semi-religious nature, and was written by Basil King, a former evangelist. This fact was immediately taken advantage of, and every evangelist in Hamilton was invited to see the picture as the guest of the management of the theatre. As a result of this, one minister used the picture as the basis of his sermon.

The next feature, "The Loves of Little Nelly," has a moral lesson to it. A variation of the "essay contest" was used for exploitation purposes, and a prize of $5 and $3 was offered to the high school boy and grammar school boy, respectively, who sent in the best critical reviews of the picture. The only restriction on the contest was that the boys had to see the picture in the afternoon. "This was done for two purposes: To keep the boys at home in the evening, and to interest the parents of the boys in the contest," said Harry Martin.

The Friday and Saturday attraction was Will Rogers in "Jubilee," which was advertised as the story of the "Hoosie Evangelist." As an exploitation feature "Sassy" Gibson, one of the best saxophone players in the State, was hired and fitted out as a trump, and paraded the streets playing the song "Jubilee" on his instrument.

Capitol Opera This Week Is "Le Villi"

"LE VILLI," an opera in two acts by Giacomo Puccini is being presented as the musical portion of the bill at the Capitol theatre, this week.

The Capitol version runs about an hour and is tuneful and well adapted for stock use, giving opportunity for elaborate and colorful costuming.

Artists Wagner has prepared a very picturesque set, exterior with a practical bridge over which the principals make their entrance. Especially effective is the setting for the love duet when the lights are dimmed to suggest twilight.

The cast of principals for "Le Villi" is a small company containing only three voices, soprano, tenor and baritone. The chorus is used to a considerable extent in both voice and interpretive entrances. The offering for this reason has a considerable appeal as a spectacle.

Rivoli Presenting Elaborate Musical Number

FOR the presentation of "Treasure Island" at the Rivoli theatre, New York, managing director Reisenfeld has prepared a musical number which is a very appropriate prologue for the feature.

The strophic show opening a scene representing the interior of a tavern with the Rivoli chorus in costume suggestive of the time of the picture, sitting about tables, with steins of beer.

Emanuel List, basso profundo, frequently on the Rivoli bills, sings a solo and the chorus sings him at various intervals. The number is titled "Evening in a Tavern."

It was well received by the audience at the performance which the writer attended. The musical selections used were not announced.
How the Middle West Is Putting Over "Kentucky"

A lot has been said and written about the exploitation which "In Old Kentucky" is receiving over the Middle West. On this page we tell a story by photographs which fully illustrates just what this "show" with its "wongdoodle" band is accomplishing. The gentleman with the wide sombrero is H. Johnson, manager of the outfit. C. E. Holah, manager of the First National Exchange at Omaha, is the originator of the exploitation idea as applied in this territory.
Small Houses Also Get Results With 'Pollyanna' Display

The Ohio theatre of Alliance reports that the exploitation which it gave "Pollyanna" is estimated to have increased the attendance for the week's run of the picture fully thirty per cent. The advertising campaign was begun early and everything was left undone to inform Alliance people of the engagement. The best bit of publicity was a free matinee for the youngsters of the Alliance Children's Home. On this page is shown the lobby display arranged for the showing and some of the crowd which attended the children's matinee.
Informing Portland Concerning 'The Great Air Robbery'

When Marshall Taylor, manager of the Rivoli theatre, Portland, played "The Great Air Robbery," a track on which was placed a huge Curtiss seaplane, "The Sea Gull" was one of the exploitation stunts employed. The plane was hauled through the business section of the city the day before the opening of the picture at the Rivoli. The engine of the plane was running. In the plane were seated two pretty Portland girls. Portland streets are rather narrow and the parade of the Sea Gull with its wings extending out each side of the car was a complex problem in automobile driving. It however added to the general interest the public took in the display as the spectators momentarily expected a wreck. The plane and others, brightly illuminated for the event, flew over Portland at night and dropped cards advertising the picture. Manager Taylor's photograph is shown in the left hand upper corner of the layout.

Chicago and the Mid-West
Covered By L. H. MASON

The Amusement Supply Company is preparing to move from its present quarters in the Maller's Building to the new offices it has taken which comprise one-fourth of the second floor of the Consumers Building. The new place of business will give them more space to meet the demands of their rapidly growing trade.

Harry Spannuth of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, has returned from New York where he attended a meeting of independent producers and also gave some private showings of the first of his new "Billy Whiskers" comedies. The reception given to the first picture was very favorable and Mr. Spannuth expects to complete the second picture this week, after which he will return to New York Hamilton Club, at the opening of the figure. The luncheon was voted by those who attended, as one of the most delightful affairs of the year. Judge Robinson, who is interested in the new house, and J. B. Koppell, assistant manager, helped Mr. Barbee entertain his guests.

April 5th to 10th, inclusive, is S. S. Hutchinson's "tribute month" and the "Flying A" salesman, intends to call on all the exchanges in Chicago and make plans for the sale and exhibition of the "Billy whiskers" series.

W. S. Barbee, the opening of whose new De Lux house, Barber's Loop theatre, occurred Saturday night, was host to representatives of the Chicago daily papers and trade papers at a luncheon at the Hamilton club the day preceding the opening. The luncheon was voted by those who attended, as one of the most delightful affairs of the year. Judge Robinson, who is interested in the new house, and J. B. Koppell, assistant manager, helped Mr. Barbee entertain his guests.

Ray Buys Four Poems
Of Hoosier Poet

From the Arthur S. Kane offices comes the news that Charles Ray has just completed purchase in Los Angeles, of four of James Whitcomb Riley's best known poems of American country life. The Riley poems which have been purchased by the First National star are: "The Old Swimming Hole", "The Girl I Loved", "Home Again" and "Out To Old Aunt Mary's".

In a statement issued from his Los Angeles studios, announcing the purchase of the Riley poems, Charles Ray declares that the acquisition of these American classics represents the culmination on the screen of the beloved Hoosier bard on the screen.

Pathé Names Release
Date of Features

Release dates on two big forthcoming Pathé features, are announced for the first time this week by Pathé Exchange, Inc., Frank Keenan's next attraction, "Dollar for Dollar," will be released on May 2. The following week, Hobart Henley's production, "The Miracle of Money," will make its first appearance.

"Dollar for Dollar" was adapted by Keenan from a well-known story, by Ethel Watts Munford, noted playwright and magazine writer. "The Miracle of Money" is distinctly American, and Hobart Henley adapted the play from a short story by Bertish Paynter, "The Marrying of Emily."
"American Film Makes Good"

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Company, has released a statement, reviewing the past performances of the "Flying A" and indicating some of the things the American Film Company plans to accomplish in the future. According to Mr. Hutchinson, the organization has "made good." The statement reads:

"The last nine months have shown that the American Film Company has been making progress on its projected plans. The company has produced a number of films that have been well received by the public. The company's financial situation has also improved, and it is expected to continue to do well in the future."

William Fox has engaged Thomas Barrick, the reporter for the "Los Angeles Times," to write a biography of him. The book will cover the early years of Mr. Barrick's career, including his time with the "Flying A." The book will be published by Bobbs-Merrill.

Wallace Farnum has returned to the United States after a successful tour of Europe. He plans to return to his work as director of the Fox West Coast studios, and will be overseeing the production of new films.

"The Woman He Chose" is a new Swedish product produced by the Ziegfeld theatre, Chicago. It was directed by Henry Rosson and is based on a novel by Selma Lagerlof. The film has been described as a "giant success," and is expected to be a major hit.

Authors Engaged by Universal

C. V. RIDAL HUNDT, a literary agent, who has been working for several months on the project of obtaining stories for Universal City, has released information to the public. He has engaged a number of writers to work on new projects for the studio.

"I am very pleased with the results so far," said Mr. Hunt. "The writers we have engaged are some of the best in the business, and I am confident that we will have a successful line of stories for the coming season."
In planning your bookings keep in mind these great specials by great authors.

Metro has always believed that the story was a vital element in the success of any great picture. Metro's big stars, therefore, are invariably presented in plays that possess, in addition to skillful construction and powerful themes, the prestige of world-famous authorship.

Metro pictures, already known throughout the world as the "fewer and better" kind, are all made either from famous stage successes, or novels that have achieved world renown, from the pens of novelists whose names are household words. There is no exception to this rule. Metro has cornered the literary market. Metro stars, like precious jewels, are always framed in a setting of highest artistic merit, from the standpoint of the story of the photodrama.

When you glance over the titles of Metro's current and past productions, you will note that every author is famous. Read and understand why Metro's big ones should be tabbed in your note-book for future reference and all-the-year-round profits.

William Fox has engaged Thomas Warrillow, one of the few technical men in the business, to design and execute architectural and decorative plans for William Fox’s forthcoming production, “The Joyous Trouble Maker,” work upon which has started under the supervision of J. W. Leonard Edwards at the Fox West Coast Studios, Hollywood.

On the day following Mr. Warrillow’s arrival at the Coast work was started on the interior set for "The Joyous Trouble Maker," which has been advertised as a picture that has ever been put up in the Fox studios. It occupies all of one stage, one dimension of which are 100 by 250 feet. A firm believer that a thing half done is but a makeshift, thus detracting from the value of the picture, Mr. Warrillow had the Farnum set constructed and decorated just as though the star expected to live there for the next ten years, says Fox.

“The Woman He Chose”

A Swedish Product

The Ziegfeld theatre, Chicago, was the scene on April 16th of the American debut of the Swedish sex-sensational drama, "The Woman He Chose." This picture is based on "The Girl from the Marsh," a story written by Dr. Selim Laeder, who has received the Newbery Award for literature. The cast is drawn entirely of Swedes, in their respective roles, and the scenery is described as possessing a touch of modernism. The European Corporation of Chicago controls the world rights to the Swedish picture.

Authors Engaged by Universal

C. R. VIDAL HUNDT, a literary agent, who the past four years has been scouring the continent of America for good screen stories for Universal, has returned to Universal City, with the information that some of the greatest men of European letters are now writing stories for Universal.

Vidal Hunt went on his quest because it was believed that American film producers are better able to appreciate and understand the literature of foreign writers than the grim-ridden film industry in either Europe, England or Germany, and that American directors and actors might be able to realize this fact and to seize eagerly upon the chance to write for Universal. And, reports.

Among those from whom Hunt is to obtain extraordinary stories are Henri Bordeaux of the French Academy, Anatole France, one of France’s "forty immortal," Marcel Prevost, Jean Richepin, Henri Battelle, George de Porto Rico, Andre Antoine, Henry Deverd, known as the French Mark Twain; Andre de Dorga, Paul Reholz, Jean Harlasche, author of "The Fire"; Rene Benjamin, author of "Lavish"; Gustave Duclaux, great writer, and stage director of the "Varetesi," George Ria, secretary of the Comedia Francaise, and the eminent Sarah Bernhardt.

"None of these have ever written for the films before," Mr. Hunt declares, "but they all realize the tremendous possibilities of their latent genius to evolve great screen situations which they think will surpass those of the more prosaic American minds.

"Without exception these great men regard the cinema as the greatest interpreter of human emotion, a missionary for the ages, just as it might be the greatest agency for evil. They believe it not only possible but that the screen may even replace the influence of the pulpit, the press. Their decision to write stories for Universal marks the beginning of a combination which the great intellects of Europe for supremacy on the screen."

Double Release Date Is Named by Hodkinson

April 25th is announced by the Hodkinson organization as the release date of a film starring Ruth Chatterton and Augustus Thomas, "The Harvest Moon," the Dietrich Beck production starring Doris Kenyon, which, along with "Cynthia-of-the-Minutes," is the new release of the month. The film is a feature story of the type that has been very popular with audiences.

McCUTCHEON NOVEL IS PICTURIZED BY EDGAR LEWIS

Edgar Lewis' second production for Pathé will be a picturization of the novel "The New Heathen," by Frances Gunther, well-known writer. Covering the east is Pat O' Malley, who will play the part of Irishman Redpath. James Burton is played by Harry Spangler. The novel also includes Hugh Thompson, Gertrude Norman, Lillian Hall, one of the most beautiful leading women on the screen, is The Girl. "Sherry" is a small town story—The plot being laid in the Middle West.

Winchell Smith Began As Property Man

Winchell Smith, who is supervising the production of his play "The New Heathen," for Metro, under the title of "The Saphire," has been in the theatrical business since he was eighteen years old. At that time Mr. Smith joined a company in New York City as assistant property man. After various good productions he was made the stage director. But Mr. Smith wanted to be an actor, and after three years he got his chance in a small part in "The Prodigal Daughter." Next, play-writing engaged his attention. Mr. Smith has set the pace for the picture and takes an active part in the work connected with it at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Tom Kennedy Plays Big Part in Fox Comedy

An exhibition of some of the episodes of the forthcoming Sunshine Comedy special at the Fox projection-room in the New York headquarters disclosed the fact that Tom Kennedy formerly a pupilistic contender of note, has an important and "scrappy" role in the picture. Among those whom Kennedy boxed before he left the ring-circled for the screen, are Jack Johnson, Carl Morris, Shamrock Wells, English champion heavyweight, Frank Moran, Gunboat Smith and Max Robert, French heavy.

Stage Play Picturized with Max Linder As Its Star

With Max Linder, the French comedian, in the star role the stage success, "The Little Cafe," is to be selected by the Pathé Exchange, Inc., as a Pathé Special production. The picture is said to bring about some of the finest work of Linder's career and those who witnessed the first showing of the completed film were of the opinion that it will be hailed by the public as a great screen comedy.

Although the original stage part was played by John E. Young, at the New Amsterdam theatre in New York City, and the story was not primarily intended for Mr. Linder in screen work, it is said that the star character fits the elements of the French comedian to perfection. His deft touches of humour throughout, his mannerisms, and eccentricities are all given full play in the part of a millionaire waiter who is compelled to remain at work in a restaurant by the terms of his contract, although he has been left two million francs.

With the release of the production a new female star peeps above the horizon in the person of Wanda Lyon, who plays the leading role opposite Linder. Miss Lyon will be remembered for her striking success at the Winter Garden in New York City, where she appeared in a few of the Passing Show. She also played an important part in Al Jolson's show, "Robinson Crusoe, Jr." Her stage comedy training makes itself evident in the manner in which her delightful personality gets into the Linder picture.

Neilan Wants Cleaner Pictures

THERE are a few remaining producers who still think that motion pictures bordering on the unsavory are in public demand, says a statement from the Marshall Neilan Production offices. Among those who have most recently attacked this practice as applied not only to motion pictures themselves but to the advertising prepared for these pictures, is Marshall Neilan, the young director-producer responsible for "The River's End," "Daddy Long Legs," "In Old Kentucky," and similar pictures.

In this connection, Mr. Neilan says: "There has always been good and bad in everything and perhaps always will be. The motion picture industry is no exception, and there seems to be a demand for a few directors to see who can make the most suggestive play and still within the law, the numbers of these producers are numbered professionally unless they change their type of work.

"The picture will bring cleaner, more wholesome pictures than we have had in the past. Most producers have already realized the fact that a commercial stunt, pictures that are entirely free from suggestiveness, are by far the most successful and the same motives which prompted under-maters in the past will ultimately cause the great majority of directors to eliminate them from their productions in the future."

"It is a matter of record that the greatest successes from a financial standpoint, in the last half of the screen have been absolutely free from any tint of suggestiveness. "The Birth of a Nation," "The Mephisto Waltz," "Leather Stockings," "Daddy Long Legs"; these are only a few of the great screen triumphs I can name which were fit for any man, woman or child to see.

Recently Thomas H. Ince, Maurice Tourneur, Allan Dwan, Mack Sennett, George Loane Turner and other leading producers have made pictures of outstanding success, and one of the principal points agreed upon was that every one of our productions shall stand for cleanliness if nothing else.

"The day has arrived when exhibitors have given their support to keep the screen clean by refusing to permit the exhibition of films that might tend to encourage censorship fanaticism. To exhibitors who expect to maintain a steady patronage from family audiences can afford to show any picture that he could not show his children. The public has been educated to the point where it selects its entertainment first by those who are responsible for it, just as it buys its books by past achievements of the author, and second by the theatre that shows it. If they are in doubt about the type of pictures made by a certain producer, their selection of an evening's entertainment will be governed by the theatre and not by the studio. If they know that a certain theatre shows nothing but clean pictures, they patronize that theatre.

"Through natural evolution the screen is being cleansed. Looking at it from a purely mercenary viewpoint, it does not pay to produce anything but clean pictures.

"No established producer will jeopardize his reputation and those who have none to jeopardize will soon realize that they will never attain success via any but the clean route."

"Then again there are certain distributors who do the industry harm by the type of advertising material they use. Even if the picture is harmless, some seem to think by preparing paper that will appeal to the morbid element in human nature, a genuine box-office attraction is created. Sometimes this is done under the guise of 'art' and other times it is a ballyhoo or a suggestive poster."

"Nothing can be gained not even for those who perpetrate this type of advertising since it is not the box-office that is interested. To these pictures and others of the same ilk, a direct blow to the entire industry is registered."

"A movement, such as that started by the National Association, some time ago, to take steps to prevent the showing of indecent pictures should be encouraged and enlarged. Let us clean houses from within, and there will be less energy necessary to fight outside opposition."

Picture with Moral Appeal
Madame Traverse Given Strong Role; Paul Cazeneuve Is Director

"A PICTURE with a great moral lesson is a description given of "The Spirit of God," the latest starring vehicle of Madame Traverse, Fox star, which will introduce to the screen a new director, the person of Paul Cazeneuve.

"The story is of a brave fight for right against seemingly impossible odds, it is stated. From the bright lights of Broadway to the dance halls and gambling dens of the last frontier, the heroines, Miss Traverse, plays the part of a heroine which she cannot afford to lose through fear, greed, and the lure of the life of a community-

"is said to be exceptionally well presented in this production."

Madame Traverse is stated to be at her very best as the many roles she plays. Her interpretation of the fire of love, and Miss Traverse vividly depicts the transition of the woman from dance hall queen to leader of the forces of right in the community.

"It is a powerful role," declares the report from the Fox Film headquarters, "and required a powerful emotional actress to bring it to the finish that would raise it from the lowly cheap melodrama to the heights of real art. Miss Traverse has done this—done it with rare refinement and with extraordinary force. It is in many ways her best role to date, and to its creators she gives the full measure of her appreciation."

"Paul Cazeneuve, who in the handling of the megaphone in "The Spirit of God" brings to the screen forty years of experience on the dramatic stage, has put into the production every expedient that is known to the stage. His story is a big one, but he has not forgotten those little human touches, those little bits of art which make up the fine heart interest which adds materially to the drawing value and to the sustained interest of a picture."

Vitagraph Has Bookings
All Along Broadway

Vitagraph declares this week that it has captured the entire "select section of Broadway." The report is based on the fact that this company has obtained bookings for twenty-four weeks ahead, of all its running feature output and Larry Semon feature comedies in all the Broadway theatres from 77th Street to 110th Street.

The select section theatres comprise the following: The Adelphi, Oympia, Symphony, Keystone, 77th Street Theatre and the Schraub.

Candy and Melodrama in Dial Picture

Although there is no lack of melodrama from start to finish in "King Spruce," the Dial-Film production of producer Mitchell Lewis, there are also plenty of scenes to furnish genuine comedy. Ragland Made Vice-President

A meeting of the directors of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation on Thursday, April 8th, John C. Ragland was elected vice-president. Mr. Ragland resigned as general sales manager of Realart Pictures Corporation several weeks ago to become general manager and director in the Kane corporation.

The elevation of Mr. Ragland to a high post in the producing company follows only a few weeks after his resignation from Realart Pictures and represents the confidence of the directors of the organization in the qualifications of Mr. Ragland to constitute with President Kane the contemporary projects of the corporation.

The meeting of the directors of the Kane corporation, which was held in the new offices of the company at 25 West 43rd street, New York, was called especially to inaugurate Mr. Ragland into his new post in conjunction with the formal organization of the permanent home of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation.

In announcing the election of Mr. Ragland to the vice-presidency of the company, President Arthur S. Kane issued the following statement:

"It is with a distinct pleasure for me to give out the news of the election on Thursday, April 8th, of John C. Ragland to be vice-president of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation. The election of Mr. Ragland took place at a meeting of directors called especially at the new and permanent offices of the company."

"Although Mr. Ragland has only recently become a member of our corporation, we have had no time in acknowledging our confidence and faith in his ability to judiciously carry on the work of the company. This confidence in Mr. Ragland is well known to officials of this company, not only his splendid accomplishments as general sales manager for Realart Pictures, but his long dealings with exhibitors in various territories and his experience in many branches of the theatrical business."

"We are now in a position to progress on a program for the future which will require the co-operation of a man of Mr. Ragland's definite acquaintance with conditions in the field. In the sales organization of the entire industry there is nothing no individual better posted on the technical financial problems of picture selling and exhibiting than Mr. Ragland, and his election to vice-president of this company represents our faith in his ability to accurately assess the possibilities of producing units equitably from the point of view of both distributor and exhibitor."

Mr. Ragland, prior to his connection with Realart as general sales manager, was manager of the St. Louis office of that concern. He has had a long career in the theatrical and motion picture businesses, and possesses a wide background of experience gained during a service which began in theatre management and progressed through sales activity to executive positions with Select and Realart Pictures.

The new vice-president of Kane Pictures issued the following statement after he was informed by the directors of his election to the new position:

"The honor that has been conferred upon me by President Kane and our fellow directors, in the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation comes as a total surprise to me. It is gratifying beyond words to find that I enjoy the entire confidence of officials of this concern in the activities which are now in process of negotiation."

"We have in view the present writing several large projects of considerable interest to exhibitors which we trust we will be able to announce in the near future. As vice-president of the Kane corporation it will be my especial honor and privilege to uphold those high standards of honesty and plain dealing which have become so closely associated in the past with the name and activities of Arthur S. Kane."

U. S. Films Win On Merit
American Screen Never Ruled Off
Foreign Photoplays Says Howells

"The American screen has never harmed the foreign film, and never will. World progress and the advance of civilization forbid it. The development of the industry makes it impossible."

"Paul Howells, international distributor connected with First National, gave this answer today to a misinterpretation of his recent interview in which he charged that American exportaors, discouraged by unfavorable rates of exchange, were "deserting under fire."

Mr. Howells made clear, in no uncertain terms, his opinion of international film conditions, and expressed his sincere belief that the foreign film, recovering from the handicaps of production during the war and early reconstruction, would find its place on the American screen."

"The war interrupted picture making in Europe," stated Mr. Howells, "the best brains of all America turned to the business of making war. Art stood still."

"The more liberal minded men in the industry in Europe admit that the reason that foreign films have not been accepted by the American public during the last several years is because the standard of foreign production has fallen so far short of the standard of American production."

Change of Title

Charles Ray's forthcoming Thomas H. Ince production, previously announced under the title of "An Old Fashioned Young Man," has been changed to "An Old Fashioned Boy." It will be released as an Ince-Paramount-Artcraft picture.

Pretty Alice Joyce, Vitagraph star, who is now busily engaged in filming Albert Payson Terhune's "Dollars and the Woman."

Alice Joyce Release
Schedule for May

From Vitagraph comes the news that the next Alice Joyce production will be released in May. Miss Joyce recently finished work on the picture in the Brooklyn studios. "Dollars and the Woman," is the title, and it is an adaptation of a story by Albert Payson Terhune.

Another recent completion, it is announced, is "Schooldays," the next Larry Semon comedy. It is different from his former releases for Larry is here an interesting pupil in an interesting school.

On the Coast William Bertram is directing Vitagraph's next serial, "Hidden Dangers," with Joe Ryan and Jean Paige as co-stars. Mr. Bertram came to pictures after twelve years as a stage actor and director.

Murray Will Remain
With Mack Sennett

Charlie Murray, Mack Sennett's Celine coonidian, will remain a member of the Sennett constellation of stars, for another season at least. This fact was announced yesterday by the Mack Sennett management after Mr. Murray and Mr. Sennett had signed a new contract. The announcement automatically dispenses with rumors current in film circles assenting Murray's departure at an early date into other circles.
Robertson-Cole to Handle "So Long Letty"

Robertson-Cole has signed a contract with the Christie Film Company for "So Long Letty," the celebrated Moroseco stage success, which was one of the most power- ful box office attractions during the four years in which it was seen. "So Long Letty" won wide frame for Miss Charlotte Greenwood, who played the leading role in it. It was produced on the Pacific Coast, in Los Angeles, in 1916, and only finished its long stage career a few months ago. After a sensational success on the Coast it was moved to New York, where it began its long run at the Shubert theatre. Here it ran for many months, following this engagement with a tour of the country, which lasted for three seasons.

"So Long Letty" will be the first Christie-Robertson-Cole picture, and both the distributing corporation and the producer are doing everything which will tend to make the initial production one which will win handsomely when tested by the public, it is stated.

Professor Helps Title Educational Picture

Dr. Robert F. Griggs, of Ohio State University and director of the various expeditions of the National Geographic Society, has been investigating the effects of the Mount Katmai, Alaska, eruption, returned to Columbus this week after spending several days assisting Educational Films Corporation in editing and titling the expedition's pictures which it will distribute. While the technical has been devoted to these productions, they are absolutely correct from the scientific viewpoint and the assistance of Dr. Griggs in supplying the illuminating titles has been very valuable. Release of these pictures will mark the first relations of the National Geographic Society with a motion picture organization.

Universal's Special Is Winning

Heavy Booking Among First-Run Houses of Big Cities

So Long weather on record in that locality. In addition, all opposition houses were offering the highest and finest handling by that company.

"We did not get the prints into the hands of our branch exchanges until March 20," he said. "In three weeks, leading theatres in ninety per cent of the big cities had contracted to run the picture, with play dates early in May.

The seventy-seven day booking over the Cable Circuit in and around New York, has been followed by a forty-seven day booking over the Fox Circuit in the same territory. These two contracts alone, with the four week run at the Ansonia and the Little Niska, sample theatre, Salt Lake City, have been playing in the week of April 5.

"Among the other houses in which "The Virgin of Stuttgart" is booked for a six or seven day run, at early dates, are the Ludlow and Taft and the Carpenter's Circle in Chicago, the Manhattan, Buffalo, the Ohio, Detroit, the Liberty, Akron; the Palace, St. Louis; the Ohio, Cleveland; the Park, Boston; the变身, Milwaukee; the Southern, Columbus; the Central, Dayton; the Walnut, Louisville; the Fox, Portland, Oregon; the Bijou, Los Angeles; the Fox Terminal, Newark; the Colosseum, Spokane; the Fox, San Diego, Cal.; the Victor, McKeesport, Pa.; the Land, Long, Tex.; and also in Fort Worth.

"We thought we established a lasting record in handling the sale and exploitation of "The Heart of Humanity," but it does not compare with the speaking company that has been necessary for "The Virgin of Stuttgart." This picture was ready sooner than had been expected. It was so big it could not be held. The advertising, publicity and exploitation departments have been working at top speed to prepare the way, with the picture already looked into advertising, publicity and exploitation, and the picture campaign has many more weeks to run. It is just getting well under way.

"It looks as if Miss Dean's big picture is going to smash all Universal records by a wide margin. A lot of other records, too, I believe."
Larger Construction Plans

Robertson-Cole Acquires Corner
Plot on Seventh Avenue, 48th St.

Robertson-Cole has made a quick shift in its building plans to include the addition of the northwest corner of Forty-eighth Street and Seventh Avenue, permitting the building of a much larger and more commodious structure than was intended in the original plans, announced two weeks ago. With the addition of the corner for the building it will now include everything from the corner of Forty-eighth Street along Seventh Avenue to No. 725, affording a great deal of more space on the ground floor and those above.

The original intention of Robertson-Cole was to erect a ten-story building. But with the purchase of the additional space it has abandoned this plan, and the building will now be made twelve stories in height, and of such construction that additional stories may be later added if they are needed.

The entire transaction was negotiated for Robertson-Cole by Mr. A. White & Sons, of 46 Cedar Street, New York City. Revised plans for the office building on Seventh Avenue are now being drawn by architects F. H. Dewey and Company, and Howard Greenley of the Flotron Building. Plans for the building, as it will now be, are being rushed and construction work will be started by Wharton Green & Co., of 37 West Thirty-ninth Street, at the earliest possible time.

The plans for the building show that it will be entirely fire proof with cement arches and cement floors. Steel window frames will be used throughout and no wood will enter into the construction whatever.

Dwan Picture is Finished

Print of “Splendid Hazard” Now in New York Mayflower Office

Allan Dwan’s film adaptation of Harold MacGrath’s novel, “A Splendid Hazard,” has arrived at the New York offices of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. It had a special preliminary presentation at the Brunton Studios at Los Angeles. According to telegraphic advices, the artistic merit of its photography and the fact, from the standpoint of acting and characterization, should make it an unusual production. Those who witnessed the presentation united in describing it as a “motion picture grand opera.”

Mr. Dwan took special pains to secure absolute fidelity of detail. Much of the action is centered in Corsica, the quaint picturesque island on which Napoleon, the inspiration of the novel, was born, therefore, there is fine opportunity for the exploitation of the haunting beauties of that historic isle.

In the work of convincingly reproducing those scenic effects, Mr. Dwan was assisted by Mrs. Harold MacGrath, who had gone over the locations figuring in her husband’s novel. She made many photographs of the scenic features, supplemented by a wealth of pictures of people, costumes and local customs, all of which were placed at the disposal of Mr. Dwan.

It is also announced that the secret picture upon which Director Dwan has been hard at work for several months has been completed. A competition among the personnel of the Mayflower Corporation is now in progress, the object of which is to select an appropriate title.

New Blackton Picture Is “Soul and Body”

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton has just pronounced as finished “Soul and Body,” his new special feature, which was made under the working title of “The Soul Spinners,” Herbert Rawlinson is starred in the play, which was written by Shannon Fife. This is the second picture J. E. Robbins, screen editor of the Blackton staff, has cut under the Commodore’s supervision.

Lewis Emmerick of College Point has been appointed by the White- stone Motion-Picture Company, Inc., to the general managership of the Lyceum theatre at College Point, L. I. He enters upon his new duties at once.
Prisoners See "Alias Jimmy Valentine"

Three hundred convicts, including former criminals, enacted life sentences, applauded a special production of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," in the Chapel of Arizona State Prison on Good Friday, when the Metro special production starring Bert Lytell was given its first showing in the United States.

The Arizona penal institution, situated in the town of Florence, served as the background for the prison scenes filmed by the Metro company for the production, with Bert Lytell as Lee Randall, alias Jimmy Valentine. It was in return for the courtesy of the prison authorities in permitting the picture to be taken there that B. F. Rosenberg, manager of the Metro Exchange, arranged for its first presentation before the prisoners.

It is a model prison, with its own screen in the Chapel, where pictures are regularly shown. Most of these pictures are old. "Alias Jimmy Valentine" was the first "first night" that the prison had known.

"TheSaphead" Co-Stars Crane and Keaton

"TheSaphead" has been selected as the release title for Loew-Metro's forthcoming production of Winchell Smith's and Victor Mape's play, "The New Henrietta," which Smith, producer and playwright, recently joined the staff of actors at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, Calif., is personally supervising the picturization of "TheSaphead," in which William H. Crane and Buster Keaton will be co-starred at the head of a strong ensemble, as stated.

"TheSaphead," as known as the new film of the picture, because June Mathis's scenarioization of the play brings into greater prominence than it enjoyed in the former version, the role of Gertie, played by Mr. Keaton. This comedian is making his first venture into high class comedy cameratively, playing famous as a slapstick artist with Fatty Arbuckle.

Company Will Feature Robert Gordon

Announcement is made that a producing company is now being organized which is to present as its star Robert Gordon. The pictures made with Mr. Gordon in the studio will be under the Robert Gordon Photoplays. It is stated that plays will be selected with a view of supplying suitable material for Gordon's better characteristics. In view of Mr. Gordon's advance from the status of an "extra" to a star, it is asserted that the young actor's rapid rise is indication of both his ability and favor with the public.

Sea Raider Scenes in International News

The third installment of the only official motion pictures in this country of the German sea raider Moewe are revealed in International News Number 15, released through Universal April 6th.

"Campaign Proving Effective"

Cosmopolitan Reports Success of "April Folly’s" Drive

COSMOPOLITAN PRODUCTIONS' advertising, publicity, and exploitation campaign on "April Folly," Marion Davies' latest starring picture, is said to have elicited printer from exhibitors everywhere, because of its effectiveness. Thoroughly as were Cosmopolitan's campaigns on "The Miracle of Love," and "The Cinema Murder," the "April Folly" campaign is declared to be even greater, and according to the producers, it might well be called "the greatest send-off ever given a motion-picture."

In describing the campaign launched in behalf of "April Folly," an announcement from the offices of Cosmopolitan Productions states:

"Prior to the release of "April Folly," Cosmopolitan announced that it would be given such an impetus as no other picture had ever received, and judging by what has been done so far Cosmopolitan has kept faith with its exhibitors.

"The campaign embraced every known legitimate means of bringing to the attention of the public the merits of "April Folly," and its star, Marion Davies. Eleven newspapers in eight key cities were used in the preliminary broadside with full pages, half pages, and quarter page of advertising copy. Famous artists and writers gave their genius towards the exploitation of "April Folly" and such well known people as Pernell Stanlows, G. B. Hatcher, Neil Brindle, Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, Mrs. Van de Water, Fay King, Ada Patterson, Allan Dale, Nellie By, Harry Herschfield, creator of "Able the Agnt," Beatrice Fairfax, etc., were among the contributors.

"The posters used in the beginning were the New York American, the New York Evening Journal, the Los Angeles Examiner, the Boston Advertiser, the Washingtion Times, the Wisconsin News, the Chicago Herald and Examiner, the Chicago American, the Boston American, the Atlanta Georgian, and the San Francisco Examiner. The combined circulation of these newspapers is approximately two and a half million, and it is estimated that they are read by over twelve million people.

"In addition to the newspaper campaign the whole country was the center of a publicity display in the form of a full sheet, six-sheet, three-sheet, and twenty-four-sheet sizes in several styles. The twenty-four-sheet and the flat one-sheets were done by Purnhyn Stanlows, featuring a head of Marion Davies, and all the lithographs were done in five colors.

"Also, every one of the special local exploitation experts attached to the various famous Players-Lasky exchanges through which "April Folly" is released, gave his efforts towards the making of "April Folly's success.

Blackton Films in Demand

Pathe Says Blackton's Features Have Realized a Steady Increase

THE real test of a producer's success is to create a demand for his productions. J. Stuart Blackton has accomplished this, declares Pathe, and the proof lies in the solid, steady increase of business Pathe Exchange, Inc., has enjoyed on all Blackton features from "The Moonshine Trail" to "The Blood Barrier," the current release.

Five special features have been marketed through Pathe, "The Moonshine Trail," "Blood," "My Husband's Other Wife," "Respectable By Proxy," and "The Blood Barrier." Business on each has shown an increase of twenty-five per cent, over the preceding release, according to the Pathe statement.

The greatest volume of sales as indicated by Pathe reports was an "Respectable By Proxy," but figures already in the general offices of Pathe show that "The Blood Barrier" business will exceed those sales. Commodore Blackton has come nearer to his public with each successive picture. "Dawn," Eleanor H. Porter's novel, created a demand which was better than that of "Moonshine Trail," for in it the true Blackton charm of production was revealed in the simple heart story of the blood boy who came to see through the eyes of his sweetheart.

In "The Blood Barrier," written by the late Cyrus Townsend Brady, Commodore Blackton has a story different from any of the other four. It is a tale of mystery, set in a patriotic atmosphere that appeals to every true American. The tempo of the picture is swift, the situation builds to the end, and the cast and settings are in keeping with the producer's best efforts.

The intense in business each succeeding picture has enjoyed is proof that J. Stuart Blackton continues to find his public with his independent productions.
You may not believe it but this is Mary Pickford as she appears in her forthcoming United Artists picture, "The Duchess of Sude." And they used to say that Mary couldn’t act.

To Expose Fakirs’ Tricks
Art of Parlor Spooks and Sharps
Shown in Universal’s One-Reeler

Universal’s weekly novelty-reel being prepared for early release by Hal Holden, editor of the Universal New Screen Magazine, will contain a series of interesting subjects photographed during spiritualistic seances, it has just been announced.

The novelty reel will show the "inside" workings of well-known parlor spooks. It will include pictures showing how "fake" mediums produce "supernatural" effects and fool credulous believers. The mechanics of phoney spirit visitations is shown in detail, from ordinary stage makeup and table tipping to the visualization of spirit images and voice manifestations.

This remarkable series of moving picture subjects has been obtained through an arrangement with Waldemar Kueenpert, editor of the Popular Science Monthly, a publication of wide circulation. There will be a section in the novelty reel every week devoted to curious scientific subjects, supplied through the Popular Science Monthly. Another series of unusual interest will be an expose of the various devices and dexterity used by professional mediums and sleight of hand artists.

In connection with the Popular Science Monthly series to be used in Universal’s novelty reel that publication will devote two pages in each issue to the novelty reel. The two-page section in the Popular Science Monthly will bear the same name as the novelty reel. That name has not yet been chosen but will be determined by a trio of judges from suggestions now being submitted by exhibitors in all parts of the country.

Universal has offered a prize of $250 to the exhibitor whose suggestion or one of whose suggestions is decided to be the best. The contest opened March 26, and will close April 30. If the lucky name is submitted by two or more exhibitors, each will get $250.

Florence Deshon Signs For Tourneur Drama

Florence Deshon has been engaged by Maurice Tourneur to play the leading feminine role in his forthcoming production, "Caleb West Master Diver," work upon which was started this week.

Mayflower Releases Soon
Charles Miller and R. A. Walsh
Pictures Available Next Month

UNUSUAL interest attaches to the announcement that Real-art Pictures Corporation has two important Mayflower features which will be available to exhibitors in May.

Departing from the usual custom in the trade of holding the best spring special productions over for presentation at the opening of the new fall season, Realart has responded to the call of exhibitors for noteworthy attractions to carry the year’s prosperous business through the warm months.

The two features are: "The Law of the Yukon," a Charles Miller production, which was inspired by Robert W. Service’s famous poem, and "The Deep Purple," an R. A. Walsh production, founded on the famous stage success by Paul Armstrong and Wilson Misner.

Director Walsh has enlarged the original story of "The Deep Purple" to emphasize its spectacular phases. One of the largest casts ever assembled for a production was engaged by him to carry out these original ideas. There are seventeen players in all in the production.

One of the big features of the Mayflower picture is a spectacular cabaret scene in which Bird Millman, the aerial performer who has been a featured attraction at the Midnight Follies, and now performing for Barnum and Bailey’s Circus, is featured. The production is said to abound in spectacular and dramatic incidents developed in the manner for which Mr. Walsh has become famous.

"The Law of the Yukon" is a story of life in the Canadian Northland. The Hakseensaquash months were required to make the picture. Charles Miller had a company of forty-five men, wandering through the Yukon, taking advantage of the most severe winter in years to obtain his Yukon effects.

Contestants on Their Toes
"Flying A" Representatives Have Variety of Matter to Work With

A "FLYING A" contest as a tribute to the President, H. H. S. Hutchinson, instituted by C. A. Stimson, general sales manager of the organization will close April 30. Never before in the history of the American Film was there such a list of super-specials on which to try their mettle, says American Film. The representatives of the "Flying A" organization are said to be engaging in the competition with great enthusiasm.

Prizes will be awarded for the highest records in three classes: First to salesman who have the largest number of contracts on the following recent specials, viz., "Six Feet Point," starring William Russell; the story by Jackson Gregory; "The Hellion," a story of love, mystery, hypnotism and intrigue, "Annie Oakley," picturing Annie Oakley’s novel, with an all-star cast; "The Valley of Tomorrow," a Russell picture of rapid action, and "Ma and Mr. " acting filmed in Lake Tahoe; "The Dangerous Talent," a typical "Jim" the Penman type of story, said to be full of surprising twists and turns, with a girl as the central character; "The Honey Bee" in which Mme. Marguerite Sylva carries the leading role in the picturization of Samuel Merwin’s best seller; "Sham-Bang Jim," a comedy-drama supplied by the High Noon Novelty Society and sham-bangs existing situations to the Western mountains; and "The Thirteenth Piece of Silver," an excellent story by Albert Payson Terhune.

The second prize will be awarded to those doing the largest amount of business, and the third prize to those placing the largest amount for cash collections during the month. Each man has his own territory. The contest started on April 5th. There is everything from "jazz to highbrow literature picturized," according to the general sales manager. Everything in the way of cooperation and assistance is being done in the home office in Chicago, the whole office sales department standing at "ten-shun" to cooperate, says American.

Will Write Stories For Fox Actors

Major A. Hamilton Gibbs has been engaged by William Fox to write special screen stories for the Fox stars of the Fox aggregation. This will be no little task as the screen actors, now listed under this plan, include such popular artists as William Farnum, William Russell, Tom Mix, Buck Jones and George Walsh. Some time before the great war he established himself as a writer of much promise by a couple of novels for Munsey’s Magazine, subsequently published in book form, under the titles, "The Hour of Conflict" and "Persistent Lover."

AEOLIAN HALL ... NEW YORK
FROM every section of the country we are receiving remarkable reports of the success of Clara Kimball Young in "THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN."

We expected this picture to draw capacity but we did not expect bigger business for the exhibitor on "THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN" than with "EYES OF YOUTH" yet the reports show this to be true.

We have learned from this that NOBODY: Producer, Exchange Man or Exhibitor, can tell just how big a picture is going to go and that the proof of the pudding is the record of BOX OFFICE RECEIPTS in hundreds of houses.

It proves that if you haven't played Clara Kimball Young in "THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN" you have a pleasant surprise coming to you. Your nearest Equity Franchise Holder will arrange your playing engagements. Communicate with him at once, and . . . .

WATCH for the biggest and most important announcement EQUITY has ever made,—to appear in the trade papers in the issue after the next. In the meantime prepare for the biggest production Equity has ever released, one that will establish a new series of Box Office records in every theatre in America. Watch and Wait!

New Contract for Opera Star

Associated Exhibitors Acquire Geraldine Farrar

Gerardine Farrar, opera and screen star, has signed a contract with Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Production of the first picture will begin in New York as soon as arrangements connected with the making of the attraction have been completed.

Every possible effort will be made by Associated Exhibitors to make Miss Farrar's initial Associated picture one of the biggest attractions of the year—and to make it an indication of the quality of the pictures to follow.

The steps leading up to actual production are being taken with extreme care, according to General Manager F. C. Quinby. One of the strongest stories written in years—and one particularly suited to the star—is being considered at present. Mr. Quinby says. He adds that nothing will be decided positively, however, until those most vitally concerned have agreed to work story, director, support and other important elements.

In signing the contract Miss Farrar is reported to be delighted to know that she was to work with such an organization as Associated Exhibitors, Inc. She stated that she had signed up with Associated only after she had become convinced of the unlimited advantageous possibilities of such a connection.

Goldwyn Begins Two More

Work Starts on Mrs. Rinehart Novel and "Officer 666"

Ork on two elaborate productions was started last week at the Goldwyn Studios in Culver City, California. They are a Mary Roberts Rinehart Eminent Authors picture based on her story "Empire Builders," and an adaptation of the famous stage and screen "Officer 666," by Augustin M. High. With the beginning of the filming of these two pictures, all of the stages at Culver City were occupied by the Goldwyn producing units.

Under the title of "Empire Builders," Mrs. Rinehart wrote a two-part serial story, "Young Eve," Sunday evening post weekly story dealing with life at a boys preparatory school. The characters and atmosphere in the novel's episodes are placed in the Goldwyn studios, to be published in book form by George Duran, suggest Booth Tarkington, "The Dummy" and Mr. Rinehart's handling of the subject is marked by individuality.

The first contribution of the distillation will be the powerful Eminent Authors series, "Dangerous Days," is said to have been received by exhibitors, the public and the press as one of the greatest productions in the annals of the screen.

E. Mason Hopper has again been assigned to the direction of Mrs. Rinehart's newest story, with a cast that includes Cullen Landis, Molly Malone and Ralph Bushman, son of Francis X. Bushman, who is known to all motion picture fans. This is Bushman, Jr.'s first appearance in a Goldwyn production and he has given a prominent role. Others in the company are Otto Hoffman, Howard Robinson, Tom Perrin and John Lynch.

Again working with Harry Beaumont, who has directed all but a few of Tom Moore's pictures since that popular young actor was made a star. Moore is now engaged in the filming of "Officer 666," the rapid action force that in play form scored a record-breaking run on Broadway under the management of Colan & Harris. The supporting company is not yet complete, but thus far it includes Kate Lester, Jerome Patrick, Harry Dunlavin and George Kawa.

Ray Keeps Business Up During Holy Week

Harold C. Franklin, the Buffalo showman, and William Mason of the Grand theatre, Pittsburgh, were visitors in New York City this week, and both of these exhibitors paid their respects to the drawing power of Charles Ray through Arthur S. Kane, who is handling Eastern interests of the First National star.

Mr. Franklin reported to President Kane that he was in a position to refute the general impression that Holy Week was an off week, at any rate as long as Charles Ray was looking for his screen. Mr. Franklin had just completed a run of "Alarm Clock Andy," the latest film offering of the star. Similar sentiments were expressed by Mr. Mason.

Three Weeks Run for Lloyd in Frisco

One of the highest tributes yet paid to Harold Lloyd was accorded him by the Imperial theatre, San Francisco, and supervised the direction of the Imperial, looked at "Haunted Spooks," he immediately decided to move to the Imperial. He felt the Portola would be insufficient to accommodate the audiences.

Release Date is Named for "Locked Lips"

"Locked Lips," a five-reel Universal special production starring Tsuru Aoki, heads the list of releases for the week of April 28. The picture is based on "Blossom," written by Clifford Howard. Other releases during the week will be: the closing climax of "The Lion Man," the fifth episode of a new serial, "The Moon Riders," the twelfth episode of "Elmo the Fearless," and Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran connect in a western comedy, and the News reels.
Organize to Aid Producer

Company Formed to Supply Matter Suitable for Screen Production

The newly organized Authors' Stage and Screen Plays, Inc., announces that its purpose is to supply producers with adequate material for screen production. The following statement, issued by this organization, is of greatest interest to producers, confirming the idea of securing suitable material:

"The dearth of suitable material constitutes today the chief worry of the average motion picture executive's existence. That the demand far exceeds the supply, is proven by the fact that every available story or play, irrespective of its adaptability for the purposes of screen visualization has been picked up by producers in their efforts to keep up the business of presenting to the public productions of a high standard."

"Even this questionable field of nearly successful plays, and ordinary magazine stories are the subject of every searching. It is true that we have not seen a play such as the famous 'We Faced it,' which has created such a sensation in several years ago. This condition is unfortunate, and if permitted to exist, will work great havoc to the industry in general."

"This organization has been formed for the express purpose of eliminating the abuses in the present situation. We have secured an organization of men who know every angle of the motion picture business. They can differentiate between a poor stage play or magazine story of questionable value, for which an enormous price is asked, and against the story possessing all the elements necessary for perfect picturization and real box office value. Authors of international reputation will write these stories, always keeping in mind the fact that they are intended for filming. This point has been badly overlooked by authors in a great deal of material now being used.

"A special direct to the public publicity campaign will be inaugurated with every story the author writes, as well as a campaign publicizing the author to the public. The value of this can be appreciated as against the same publicized publicity attached to a play which has a Broadway run for several weeks, probably never seen the road, is taken off and then done in pictures as a big special production. Whereas, in our publicity campaign, the stories of the authors will be published in magazine or book form, or both, in conjunction with the production and release of the picture."

"All plays or stories will be handled by us only under exclusive arrangements. Producers will readily appreciate this, as it will eliminate competitive bidding and prohibitive prices which are now being paid for an average story or play."

Comedies Please Europe

So States Exporter, Telling of Success of Christie Productions

Reginald Warde, exporter of Christie Comedies, who has just left the Coast to return to his New York office after an extensive observation of film production in Los Angeles, has taken exception to the remarks published by John Hohenwarter, declaring that Europe likes our American drama but frowns on our comedies.

"As an interview with Mr. Hohenwarter, who is a European director, published in the Screen News Service, Los Angeles, American comedy is not up to the standard of foreign. He says 'We have come to regard American comedy as consisting of a series of slap-stick and unconnected incidents with no idea of plot. That kind of comedy is not liked in Europe. There, the plot is the thing. It comes first, with comic and unexpected incidents worked into it gradually.' As a rule American comedies are seldom seen in Europe—at least on the continent."

Mr. Warde says that the answer to this assertion is that the company alone the Gaumont Company, a house of high reputation for quality, has every right to record that the Christie Comedies produced since 1916, when the first one was made, and that all Christie Comedies have been sold for the entire European territory up to the end of 1923 and that dealers for the individual countries are making offers for the series of 1921. The house of Gau nt is now the contract for two-reders and secure an option for 1921.

Double-Director Experiment Interests

Los Angeles professional circles are watching with particular interest the results of the striking departure in recent picture production which is now taking place at the Bessie Love Studio. Star, for the first time in the history of the industry is having the benefit of two directors, male and female, in the supervision of her work. The directors of Miss Love are Mr. May Park and Joseph de Grasse.
“Invasion Protests Continue”

Additional Exhibitors Endorse Views of J. D. Williams

Manager J. D. Williams of First National Expects

Circuit certainly “started something,” when he expressed himself in a recent dispatch on the subject of the alleged invasion of the exhibiting field by producer-distributor interests. Since Mr. Williams’ views on the various implications from exhibitors have been pouring in to lend approval and support to the stand of First National’s management, follow-up excerpts from exhibitors’ letters just received.

Benjamin L. Linch, manager of the Hippodrome Theatre, Williamsport, Pa., warns:

Once he is supreme in all three of the fields, the producer-distributor will hold the great future of the motion picture industry in his grasp. Competition, that great factor in the life of any business or industry, will have been destroyed. The producer will be able then to give the public just what he wishes them to have. There will be no incentive to create photoplays of real worth. The public picture will lose the great future which all are agreed, is in store for it. The invader will thus ruin himself utterly, and in addition, he will set back the industry. For the good of the industry, I, and I am sure I am not alone when I take this stand, hope the producer-distributor will advance his light before he learns blindedfolded to his destruction.

Warner Oland, in his perfect film, has a perfect right to invade this other field, if he wishes. There is no one on the face of the earth who hasn’t “It is not a question of right, but of policy.” To attempt this new step, is certainly not the best policy on the part of the producer.

John T. Belger, manager of the Gaiety Theatre, Bluffton, Ind., calls for concerted action against all the factors that go to make up the opposition forces. He says:

“In this great invasion many of the stars, so made by us little fellows, are being taken away by the greedy producer-distributor. So often, and many have been the unjust dictatorships attempted by producers and stars, and that, in this day and age, the exhibitor is hardly able to call his life his own. Never before has this time been so ripe, the opportunity so great, as at the present moment, for every independent exhibitor, in the country to join forces against this unjust invasion, cancel all contracts with greedy magnates, boycott the grabbing stars, and sign up with the respective independent producers who are warning against the coming evil and are after these scenes may well baffle the cowardly invasion.”

Ralph B. Kreutzer, president and manager of the Public Amusement Company of Springfield, Ohio, which controls the Liberty and the Colonial Theatre, writes:

“The principal reason I am against the invasion of producer-distributor, is because such a syndicate uses the money of the various exhibitors with which to build its large and imposing palaces. I understand it, fostered mostly by one of the largest producing distributing companies. Now even the fact that pictures from this concern which we are booking, we must pay 25 per cent. Of course, this is the same rule followed by all of the producers, practically. I should judge therefore out of Springfield alone there comes something, like $150,000, which this concern continually has in its hands. With larger cities it is of course, much more, and you can readily see how with such vast sums of money, the producer-distributors can build their palaces. Naturally this money applies on the payroll of the rental of the film, and if we should stop using their films altogether we would be harmed.”

Jacob Conn, manager of the Gaiety Theatre, Providence, R. I., asserts each theatre at the present time uses methods adaptable to legal conditions. As a result of this, says Mr. Conn, each house has a different plan of its own, and each has a different soul.

“This individuality, this soul, Mr. Conn continues, ‘which makes big business progressive, would be lost if the theatres were controlled from unit centers far removed from the present time. We have seen in many instances that chains of theatres are not as profitable as those operated by independent owners. This is true in cities of any size, but the effects are more striking in cities with populations of 20,000. Massachusetts, New Hampshire and the Berkshire county in Vermont have experienced cases where a good plan has been tried, but it invariably has been abandoned quickly or, continued until it met with complete failure.”

Maeterlinck Finishes Story For Goldwyn

Maeterlinck, the Belgian poet and playwright, who has been at the Goldwyn studios at Culver City since the middle of February, has completed his first story, for Goldwyn and left for New York this week from where he will sail for France. The title of the picture has not yet been decided upon.

Curwood Pleased With Story Author Says “Courage of Marge O’Doone” Is Among His Best

Mr. Curwood, who has been at the Ziegfeld, Chicago, for an indefinite run, has the most favorable comments from critics of the daily and trade press.

A specially high-class musical program has been arranged in connection with the presentation of “The Woman He Chose” at the Ziegfeld, Mabelle Beyer, well-known soprano, being featured in vocal solos. Hans Hanke is rendering some high-class piano clas-sies and the music incidental to the picture, played by an orchestra. The Mickey Film Company, Inc., which controls film for the United States, is putting the picture on the State rights market.

The cast is headed by Lily Damita, who has played the title role, and co-starring with her is Miles Welch, one of the best known young leading men of the country.

The other notable characters are huge grizzly bears, and a third is an outlaw dog, these animals starring as clashes of tusk and claw against bone and flesh. It is a matter of regret that such a film trade that a human life very nearly went into the price of this picture. This was on the occasion of the near escape of a grizzly bear. A score or more film players and attaches of the company pursued the animal for several days but were unable to capture if possible, but properly armed to kill the brute if necessary.

John M. Quinn, general manager of Vitagraph, Inc., stated yesterday that the picture arrived at the Brooklyn Studio and that prints would be distributed to all Vitagraph Exchanges throughout the United States and Canada within a week.

James Oliver Curwood has been invited to be one of the first to see in finished form the film version of this story.
A Good Story, Well Told

This, Says President of American Film, Will Win Favor of Public

"THE THIRTIETH PIECE OF SILVER" will prove one of the most popular photoplay novels ever presented, a picture which will make a strong appeal to all classes," is the prediction of S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company.

"To begin with, the public wants a good story, well told. This is an exact description of 'The Thirtieth Piece of Silver.' Every detail of environment and action is so suggestive of the points to be put across, every step in the development of the plot so clear and convincing, the continuity so excellent, and the actors' performance is such perfect accord with the concept of both director and author, that the result is a masterpiece. Mystery, humor and suspense are well interlaced with the unfolding of romance.

"The spectator who is not well acquainted with the novel is not interested in the story. As the plot unfolds, the story itself becomes the dominating factor. The story is told in a way that makes it easy for the audience to follow. The actors give excellent performances, and the whole production is a joy to watch."

Baremore Handles Big Film's Publicity

R. W. Baremore, who for the past several months has been in charge of advertising and publicity for the United Picture Theatres of America, has resigned to accept several offers which have come to him recently.

Recently he began handling the advertising, publicity and exploitation for the Haring and Blumenthal Enterprises, for the time being, concentrating his efforts on the New Jersey theatres of the firm. Two well known stars, a prominent director and a new producing company will also avail themselves of Baremore's services within the next few weeks, it is stated.

Baremore will be temporarily located at 1600 Broadway, at United's headquarters.

Eduational Drive Soon

Record Breaking Is Claim; to Be Offered Shortly

EDUCATIONAL Films Corporation is preparing to open its new drive with what is claimed to be the largest amount of new product ever accumulated by a motion picture organization. This material will be offered to exhibitors just as soon as the final details of the exchange system are completed and controlled directly by Educational can be completed.

The Educational product is more than two reels in length, but it is claimed by the company that its product on hand surpasses the magazine in the number of subjects embraced, but in actual footage. In addition there is a large amount being added to the library during the coming month, and cutting departments here and on the coast are being kept busy getting the matter into shape. This accumulation of material has been planned by Vice President and General Manager E. W. Hammons, to give a full range of exploitation material may be ready for each exhibitor. The product actually on hand is not only a volume, but a great variety of material. Especially welcome to exhibitors will be the Robert C. Bruce Sceneries, which will be released shortly.

The first half dozen of Chester Sceneries have also been completed. In process of editing and titling there are some thirty reels of travel pictures, taken in almost every portion of the world that Educational promises will reveal a new artist among photographers.

Record Breaker Reported

"Why Change Your Wife?" Brings Big Returns in First Run Cities

FROM the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation comes the announcement that Cecil B. De Mille's latest Paramount-Artcraft spectacle, "Why Change Your Wife?" has started on a career of record breaking in first run houses. This promise is made to box-office performances of previous releases, not excepting "Male and Female."

"Starting with an engagement of record-breaking length and receipts at Grauman's Kiao Lo in Los Angeles, according to Famous Players-Lasky, "Why Change Your Wife?" so far has not failed to set big attendance figures in any house in which it has played, and last minute reports indicate that this unique record is not due to be interrupted.

From John F. Goring, Kansas City, the following wire was received at the home office recently: "Starting today on the third consecutive week of an indefinite run, "Why Change Your Wife?" at the Royal theatre, bids fair to eclipse any production heretofore presented in Kansas City. It has already shown to fifty-dollar advance paid admissions, which is twenty per cent. of the total city population. This De Mille masterpiece will easily exceed the record of the "Miracle Man" at the Royal theatre by several thousand dollars.

It is probable that New Yorkers will have an opportunity of seeing "Why Change Your Wife?" at the Rivoli theatre within the next two or three weeks. The picture is scheduled for general release early in May.

Rural Drama to be Re-Made

New Version of "Old Homestead" Will Be a Paramount Production

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced that a new version of Denman Thompson's "Old Homestead" is to be made as a George Melford production for Paramount-Artcraft. The role of "Old Homestead" is to be shot in Alaska, and the production is expected to be completed by the end of the year.

Melford is a well-known director, having helmed such films as "The Miracle Man" and "The Winning ofona Woman." His previous works have been praised for their visual beauty and dramatic tension, making him a fitting choice for the "Old Homestead" project.

The original screenplay, written by James W. Natural, revolves around a family's struggle to maintain their homestead in the face of adversity. The new version is expected to bring fresh perspectives and updated themes, while retaining the core elements of the original story.

Incorporating the natural beauty of Alaska, the film promises to offer audiences a visually stunning experience. With Melford at the helm, the "Old Homestead" promises to be a significant addition to Paramount's lineup.

Simplex Notes

Charles C. Charles, President of the Albany Theatre Supply Company, Simplex dealers, and for ten (10) years General Manager for the Universal Film Company in New York State, has sent in his resignation to the latter company. This will take effect on Monday, October 12.

The news of this action will come as a surprise to many friends that Mr. Charles has made in the territory, but as he says in his statement, The affairs of the Albany Theatre Supply Company has long since reached that stage where they require the attention of the company's chief executive.

As Simplex selling agents, the Albany Theatre Supply Company has found it necessary to enlarge its quarters. But so great a future does Mr. Charles predict in the territory, that he has just completed negotiations for the ground floor location of the Clinton Theatre Building, North Pearl Street, Albany, which is surrounded by the Clinton Square Strand, Albany; Peek's and Grand theatre, while within a block are situated five (5) well known exchanges.

From the Chicago offices of the Exhibitors Supply Company, comes the news that during the past thirty (30) days, sixteen (16) Simplex Projectors were sold among the theatres of Peoria, Ill., which city had long been considered the stronghold of another make of projector.

Mr. H. A. R. Dutton, President of the Exhibitors Supply Company, is greatly gratified with the results of the past month's activities in Peoria, who saw the Lysaum, Princess, Apollo, Duchess, Hippodrome and Empress theatres equipped with the famous Simplex, while the new Madison and Asher's new Palace theatre have also contracted for Simplex as a part of the projection room apparatus. These two latest and handsomely appointed theatres in the city of Peoria.

Mr. Dutton reports also that besides the Chicago offices doing record business, the Indianapolis, St. Louis and Milwaukee offices of the Exhibitors Supply Company are also working at top speed.

Resume of Realart's Career

The field forces of Realart Pictures Corporation are striving hard to close out the first season's business with a new selling record. The Bob book, which special head the list of productions, and five star productions are included in the schedule. The Law and Order, Charlie Miller Production; and 'The Deep Purple,' an R. A. Walsh Production, both presented by Photoplay Corporation, are two features. Two Mary Miles Minter pictures, and one from each of Realart's other theaters, will be released in the next three months.

These seven productions will round out a total of seventeen handled by Realart during the year. The company was organized on the original basis of making a business about the middle of last summer. The first picture was not released, however, until the first of December, 1919, which reduces the actual time in which the seventeen productions were handled to about six months.

We expect to demonstrate, says a statement from Mr. Woody's office, "that Realart has one of the finest and best organized sales forces in the business. In addition, we feel that the boys are carrying around about the best line of goods any bunch ever started out with at one time.

"Of course, the two big Mayflower specialties, 'The Law of Yuma' and 'The Deep Purple,' are as big a pair as any one could draw to. And, when the balance is considered, it is not difficult to understand why Realart has planned this kit clean-up campaign to finish its first season.

"Coming down the home stretch in this way we can look forward and back toward the season with considerable pride. We did not get going until early in December when we released 'The Three Brothers,' an Allan Dwan production, and 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room,' an Emil Chandochuk production, both presented by Mayflower.

"In the same month came our first star production, 'Anne of Green Gables,' starring Mary Miles Minter as Realartist. In January we put out 'Once Upon a Christmas,' and 'The Praw Market,' in February 'Judy of Rogue's Harbor,' and 'The Luck of the Irish,' an Allan Dwan Production presented by Mayflower.

"We offered 'The Stolen Kiss' and 'Sinners' in March, and 'Nurse Marjorie' this month. Surveying the list will be noted some of the season's most successful and notable productions—pictures of a standard and quality of production that have firmly established the Realart trademark on the market. We have made good on our promises within a year's time. The records our pictures hold in every theatre of the country are sufficient evidence of this. There is no important chain of houses in the country that has not booked a Realart picture. We have landed every one of our first nine productions at big houses on Broadway. "Realart Pictures not only have stood as a standard of quality in production, but they have been awarded presentations by the best and finest exhibitors in the country. Almost a year ago we promised to make pictures that would do this, and we have accomplished it. I'll say it's a record.

"Backed by this wonderful record, and with a handful of seven such productions as we have to offer for the remainder of the season, we expect to wind up the season's business in a manner that will set the entire trade by the ears as not even our early performances have. Things are going to happen fast in this Realart campaign.

National Campaign Started

J. Parker Read, Jr., Opens National Drive for Louise Glauin Pictures

J. PARKER READ, JR., producer of the Louise Glauin photoplay productions, has launched a national publicity campaign.

"It has always been my contention," says Mr. Read, "that the exhibitor and producer should know each other's business as if it were his own. I am filling my executive positions with men who have a thorough knowledge of the exhibition and distribution branches of the industry. In this way I safeguard my production, as my pictures will always be of the type to meet the public demand. There is no question but what the public demands pictures, and the public tired of them, and receipts fell off. That was a signal for the producer to try something else, and in the process of evolution we had the vand type of picture, the problem play, and now it is the adaptation of popular novels and plays.

"The days of F. P. Barrum have faded into the dim and distant past. The exhibitor used to look upon the producer as one distant, aloof and shrouded with mystery. The producer did not give a second thought to the man in whose hands rested the success, or failure of his product.

"I have delegated Mr. Sig. Schlager to make a tour of the country, and he will confer with the exhibitor and the managers of the Hodkinson Exchange, through which organization the Louise Glauin Productions are distributed, and last, but not least, he will arrange with the newspaper editors to aid in the exploitation of the Louise Glauin productions."

Atherton Novel Undergoes Change of Title

Gertrude Atherton's first contribution to Goldwyn-Eminent Authors Pictures, an adaptation of her novel, "The Tower of Ivory," will go under the title "Out of the Storm," according to an announcement received from the Goldwyn offices this week.
Guy Empey at Private Screening of "Oil"

An opportunity to see Guy Empey's latest photoplay, "Oil," was extended to the officials of the Guy Empey Pictures Corporation at a private showing which has just been held at Wurlitzer Hall, New York, for this purpose. The screening was an invitation affair, and only officials of the company and their guests, members of the cast and a few friends were included in those privileged to be present. Mr. Empey greeted a few words of welcome to his friends.

This, the first presentation of "Oil," may be taken as an indication that as a comedian Guy Empey will be a huge success. Both Mr. Empey and Miss Martin, who stars in the picture, were warmly congratulated by those present during the informal reception which followed the screening of the feature.

The negative of "Oil" is now being matched and cut from the working print, and a trade announcement of distributing arrangements and release date will be made shortly.

Sol Lesser to Announce Releases Shortly

It is expected that Sol Lesser will shortly announce the releasing policy for the products of his two producing companies, Annette Keller and George Bogen.

George Bogen has finished the cutting of his initial production, "One Man In A Million," which he wrote and directed himself. His supporting cast includes Helen Jerome Eddy, Irene Red, Lloyd Whitlock and George Bogen, Jr.

The Kellerman picture, "Madame the John," is being withheld and will be completed in about four weeks. He is being directed by Chet Franklin, and Wheeler Oakman is the leading man.

Another Company Formed

Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., to Succeed Foundation Film Company

The Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., has been formed to succeed the Foundation Film Company of 1600 Broadway. The new company is considered more suitable to the aims and policies of Murray W. Carson, who was president and general manager of the foundation. Mr. Carson will continue to act as president and general manager of the new company, while George Garsson will be secretary, treasurer and sales manager.

Elaborate production plans are announced by Fine Arts Pictures, Inc. Eight pictures a year are to be made, and all of them are to be of five-reel length. The chief feature will be a contest picture, the details of which are now being worked out. It will be a sequel to the recent beauty contest picture, "A Dream of Fair Women.""

Pioneer Executives Meet

Executive Heads Gather in New York to Discuss Needs and Policy

Last week saw a meeting of the executive heads of the exchanges comprising the Pioneer Co-operative Distribution System, who gathered at the Pioneer headquarters in New York for the purpose of considering the changing needs of the exhibitors and the policy which is to govern the Pioneer for the next half year.

Among those who were present and took part in the deliberations were Ben Amsterdam of the Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia; Michael Lessy of the Secco Art Films, Inc., of Baltimore; M. A. Liebmann of the Criterion Film Service of Atlanta, Herman Riffen of the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston; Bill Hazza of the Amalgamated Exhibitors Circuit, which handles the Pioneer product in Canada; D. S. Davidson, manager of the Pioneer's Cleveland office; Floyd St. John, manager of the Pioneer Exchange in San Francisco; R. H. Murphy, head of the Pioneer Exchange in Buffalo and Clyde Elliott, one of the executive heads of the Greater Stars Production of Chicago.

The result of this meeting was so gratifying that it is expected that General Manager M. H. Hoffman will call their bankers $800,000, according to an announcement of the producers. The territory already sold, which includes the Far West, the Middle West, the metropolis, and some of the Eastern states, all average up to the quota which they reached in order that the picture may earn $500,000.

"Empty Arms" Brings Backers $200,000

"Empty Arms," the Lester Park and Edward Whitehouse production, will bring its backers $200,000, according to an announcement of the producers. The territory already sold, which includes the Far West, the Middle West, the metropolis, and some of the Eastern states, all average up to the quota which they reached in order that the picture may earn $500,000.

"Your readers will recall our original statement," said Byron Park today, "and we are proud to announce that we were offered $100,000 for the world's rights to this picture by a prominent producer, and that we refused it. We know what we were doing, however. We knew the property that was in our possession and we were ready to see it through to the limit. Present results show that we were not wrong.
Jans Plans Lavish Production

A ANNOUNCEMENT has been made by Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., that the company's latest production "Madamos and Men" will be the third release under the Jans Pictures banner. This feature, according to the announcement, will be the latest in the line of the "typical feature handling" that the company offers.

The film is a moneyed production, set in New York and the U.S. According to Edgar and twelve reports, such a production is being made for herself in "The Son-Daughter," a popular Broadway success, and has been playing in various markets.

The story, according to the producers, is expected to appeal to modern-day picture patrons. It opens with scenes in Rome, during the time when it was customary for Roman slave-girls to convert to the lion and to perform other kinds of tortures upon them. It is a parallel between the action of a certain Roman emperor and his treatment of the high nobility of Rome as compared to modern-day emperors during modern times. According to this, the film will be shown in the future downfall of Rome to the young emperor.

"As Rome treats its women, so will the world treat Rome."

It is understood that the nature of the story dealing with the theme of the Roman and its life in a typical American city affords opportunity for the presentation of several mass-market sets, and, according to the producers, the entire expenditure will be used up in supplying the best that can be had. The scenes in the amphitheater, the lions' den, emperor's palace, and many of the Roman settings have been offered with an expenditure of money not very often equalled in the average motion picture. "Madamos and Men" will be finished in about four or five weeks.

"Daughter of the Law" Full of Fast Action

"The Daughter of the Law," a two-reel western by Grace Cunard, and made by the Marion H. Kohn Production, contains many exciting scenes, and is full of fast action, according to Joe Brandt, Eastern representative of the Kohn interests.

Herbert Cole who supports Grace Cunard in this series of twenty-six two-reel westerns, is seen in the "Daughter of the Law," performing some of his reckless motorcycle feats.

Inter-Ocean Acquires Equipment Agency

Because of the success which has attended Inter-Ocean Film Corporation's distribution of Wold Studio Equipment in foreign territories, the company has been awarded the West Coast Distributing Agency of the well-known studio films. This is the first time an announcement made public this week by Eugene H. Kaufman, manager of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation's Accessory Department.

"Percy and Ferdie" Becoming Popular

Big Comedy Changes Hands

WHAT is described as one of the most prominent five-reel comedy features ever produced has been purchased by the Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., of which Murray W. Garrison is president and Charles F. Schwerin, secretary and treasurer and general sales manager, from Ascher Productions. This production, exploited widely under the tentative title of "Up in Mary's Attic," is said to be novel and elaborate production.

The deal was negotiated through Sidney Asher and Joseph A. Jacobs, representing the Asher interests, and attorneys representing the Fine Arts side. Various representatives were in conference nearly one week before terms were agreed upon, for the reason that Ascher Productions demanded one of the highest figures ever asked for a five-reel comedy subject.

"Everyone to whom we have shown it," said Mr. Garrison, "has been overwhelmed by its bigness and by its wonderful exploitation possibilities. The price we paid was a large one, but all who see it will agree with us that the subject was well worth the expenditure."

The picture, which contains a wealth of humor, heart interest, thrill and suspense, will not be released under the title "Up in Mary's Attic." Announcement of the change in title will be made later, the new owners not having agreed as yet on a suitable merchandising main title.

One of the chief features of the picture is the more than one hundred beautiful bathing girls who grace the various scenes and situations. These beauties were chosen from many applicants, and only those who were beautiful of face and figure and who had had adequate screen experience were chosen. These will be introduced in the new feature in a series of wholly new and novel "stunts" and laugh-a-minute situations.

Since it became known to the trade that Mr. Garrison and Mr. Schwerin had purchased "Up in Mary's Attic," bids have been arriving at their offices on Forty-sixth Street, New York, from all sections of the country. State Rights buyers all over the United States, who have been following the various announcements in the trade papers, have expressed an eagerness to be "let in" on the new feature, which is making a pre-release record for itself. One bidder has already quoted a price for the entire west, according to Mr. Schwerin, who is handling the sales. Others have come from other sections of the country, many of them seeking whole territories.

While there is considerable editing and other details to be done before the subject is released to the trade, it is believed it will be ready for release within a few weeks. Mr. Garrison and Mr. Schwerin, however, have both declared that its preparation will not be hurried, since it is not their intention to place it upon the market until it has received treatment from the most skillful film editors and critics available.

"Up in Mary's Attic" is under trial, and the title when released will be selected for "Up in Mary's Attic." Harry Grishin and Eva Novak, beautiful sister of Jane, are the stars, but as one reviewer put it, "it is difficult to tell which is the cutest—the hundred bathing girls, the baby, Harry Grishin, Emichkov or the dog!"

There is an additional interest in distributing this powerful feature, already planned for a large national run, and as it is one of the very few pictures presented in a five-reel comedy subject, promise to make "Up in Mary's Attic," under its new title, a sensational success.

Kremer Off for Exchanges

States Rights Distributor Leaves on Tour; Handles Fifty Pictures

FOLLOWING a brief visit to the New York offices, Victor Kremer, president of Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., left again this week on a trip to the various independent exchanges.

Since his acquisition of the five Essanay-Chaplin Productions, Mr. Kremer has made a remarkable record in the field of exploitation. His efforts in this line during the past year have been most noteworthy and the results have been most gratifying.

Among the numerous subjects recently handled by Mr. Kremer, the following are but a few:

Federated Film Buys National Picture

Joe Brandt, director general of the National Film Corporation of America, has announced that "Nobody's Girl," the National production featuring Billie Rhodes, has been purchased by the Federated Film Exchange of America, for distribution under this new organization.

A jewel chase that led over the Seven Seas and across a continent; every mile of the way was fraught with peril, every foot of the film has its punch.

Desperate robbers invading the realm of high society in New York; rough-riding bandits on the plains; malevolent "Chinks" in Frisco's Chinatown; boss-ridden savages in the South Sea Islands; and terrible Turks in Constantinople; it's zip rah boom from start to finish!

Take the hot blood of Mexico and mix it fifty-fifty with the cooler, calmer strain of the Northern neighbor and what happens? You can gamble on it that the daughter of the union will blow hot, blow cold; that she will hate her Northern blood and then her Southern blood by turns; that she will be passionate, revengeful, brave, unreasonable and most cussedly lovable.

That's the heroine of "Rio Grande," and the picture sings with action, love, gunfire, hate, jealousy and revenge!

What will you put on to “brighten up the program,” Mr. Exhibitor?

The feature may be heavy; you need something light and snappy to give it relief; and you have, perhaps, only room for a one reel picture.

You want a comedy, a bright, breezy, wholesome, laughable comedy. You cannot experiment. You want a comedy made by comedy experts, with a well-earned reputation to sustain.

You want Rolin Comedies!
American Lifeograph Makes Two Reeler

Announcement comes from the American Lifeograph of Portland, Oregon that it is putting the finishing touches on its first two reel comedy, produced under the supervision of W. E. Keefe. J. Parks Jones, the well known juvenile actor who plays the leading role, is supported by Clare Morris and Eugenia Guiheur. Before her entrance into pictures Miss Guiheur was a classical dancer and Miss Morris was an artist's model.

Cohn Claims Novelty to Be "Truly Novel"

Jack Cohn, of Jack and Harry Cohn, who produce the Hall Room Boys Comedies, has announced that "Screen Snapshots," the new novelty reel which will be issued weekly, is unlike any other reel ever marketed.

"According to Jack Cohn the new reel will show intimate views of film favorites at home and in the studio. It is to be an animated "fats" column and is to contain the visualization of the things one reads in the newspapers and columns. Practically every star of consequence will be seen at some time or other in "Screen Snapshots," it is said.

Inter-Ocean’s Export Policy

"Continued Export Trade with Assurance of Fair Profit"

THE attitude of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation in the present foreign film crisis is again explained in a statement issued this week from the New York offices of the company. The statement sets at rest rumors which have gained currency in domestic and foreign quarters as to the nature of Inter-Ocean's foreign trade in the future.

Reiterating its stand taken on two previous occasions in statements issued to the press, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation urges the export of a larger quantity of American productions at this time than at any other period in the history of the export business.

Inter-Ocean's statement follows:

"Despite the statements of a certain well-known exporter who maintains that the American manufacturer cannot hope for a ready market for American productions until the exchange in Europe is stabilized, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation urges a continuation of export trade. As an American manufacturer of a fairly marginable profit on the sale of his products to foreign territories.

"The rise of the pound sterling during the past week to a point where it is almost safe to assume that it is on its way to normal exchange is indicative of the strengthened position of foreign trade. This emphasizes the importance of a statement made by Mr. Schlesinger, manager of the Department of Foreign Film Sales of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, which appeared in the trade press on March 7. He said: 'While speculation is rice in the industry as to the outcome of the problems that at present beset the foreign market, it is obviously apparent that the situation is only temporary, and that in due course of time, conditions will return to normal. While the export situation is at a critical stage, its effect on the trade press was greatly exaggerated. I arrive at this conclusion after a thorough study of the foreign market, and on the counsel of merchants who are intimately involved in the commercial pursuits, and who have experienced the same difficulties in export trades. While Inter-Ocean contends that profits will not be as large as hereinafore, it feels that the present foreign market conditions can be overcome. This conclusion is based on the desire of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation and several other export companies who have expressed their willingness in statements in the trade press, to lend a helping hand to the foreign buyer who is now supposed to be having difficulty in foreign exchanges.

"The stagnation in the foreign market would seriously hinder the future of foreign trade. In this connection, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation refers to a statement it issued which appeared in the trade press of March 8. Among other things, it stated: 'Inter-Ocean Film Corporation maintains that a period of inactivity in the export branch of the motion picture business would lead to fatal consequences. It cannot see its way clear to endorse the policy of "watchful waiting" in the present crisis, but it heartily recommends the transportation of larger quantities of motion picture films and motion picture accessories products to foreign territories. It feels that such action will stimulate motion picture export trade in the future.'

"Inter-Ocean Film Corporation will continue to export American films in the hope of ameliorating the present condition in foreign markets. It maintains that a continuation of export trade is the solution of the problems which at present beset the industry."

Majestic Pictures Is Disposing of These and Other Films

Majestic Pictures, Inc., with offices at 130 West 46th Street, has issued an announcement which is of considerable interest to the film public. It was stated that this organization, which was recently incorporated, has acquired the rights to about two hundred pictures, which will be released on the independent market.

Among the recent acquisitions of Majestic Pictures are Mack Sennett's Famous Features Comedies, featuring Betty Arbuckle and Mabel Normand. Both J. J. Unger, president of Majestic Pictures, and A. Hammell, manager of distribution, were enthusiastic over the deal whereby they had secured these early efforts of the present master producer of comedies, and both officials predicted that the productions would be a success with independent buyers.

"These pictures," said Mr. Hammell, "were produced by Sennett in the Keystone days, before the famous comedy-producer, Mack Sennett, became affiliated with Famous Features. The pictures were produced before the American picture public. Mack Sennett realized his first big stride towards that position which he occupies at the present time as a first-rank producer of successful comedy-pictures. And, Mr. Hammell emphasized with a forcible gesture, it must be remembered that these subjects that Majestic Pictures has now available for release on the state rights market are pictures that have never been reissued before. They are being reissued for the first time and have been re-cut, redressed and relabeled.

Besides the Sennett comedies, the Majestic Pictures will handle short subjects and feature production. Among the pictures announced as available on the state rights basis at the present time are the two-reelers, "Isn't It Warm?" and "Flap Jacks", both of which are described as first-class laugh-getters. A number of single-reel productions are also announced to be ready, including "A Janitor's Fall" "A Good Elk", "Here's Your Hat", "Her Bohemian Party", and "Forb Ozew".

President J. J. Unger of the Majestic Pictures, Inc., was until recently general manager of the Triangle Exchanges. John A. Hammell, treasurer and manager of distribution, was formerly associated with the General Film Company and later became affiliated with Pathé. Both officials are experienced film men and well acquainted with the various phases of the industry. It is stated that further announcements are forthcoming to the trade from the headquarters of the Majestic Pictures.

Hallmark Officer Gets To Coast On Tour

George M. Montgomery, general sales manager of the Hallmark Pictures, Inc., engaged in a nation-wide tour in behalf of the Hallmark product, has returned to Seattle, completing the first leg of his journey. He expects to start East, during the present week, returning via Seattle. Mr. Montgomery has held plans for the exploitation of a large volume of pictures to be released through the Hallmark exchange, and is also negotiating for the production of a serial in conjunction with the Ascher Enterprises.

Far East Photographic Company to Leave

A world-wide hunting expedition, whose objective is to secure unusual still and motion pictures, will leave New York early in May for a trip to the Caroline and Marshall Islands, the Far East and India.

The party will be led by T. Kimwood Peters, and will be known as the Peters Photographic Company. Scientific, educational, commercial and religious bodies are evincing great interest in the expedition.

Metro Reviews Past Five Years:

Metro Producing in East and West

Metro Pictures Corporation's fifth anniversary finds the company again operating studios in the West and East simultaneously for the first time since the United States Fuel Administration established its wartime regulations governing the consumption of coal for all but essential industries.

This dual arrangement has resulted in bringing Maxwell Karger, director general of Metro Pictures, to New York for the reopening of the company's studios in New York, and in placing upon the shoulders of the individual directors remaining in Hollywood full responsibility for the results of their work.

As yet no announcement has been made regarding the staff of directors who will work in the Sixty-First Street studio, formerly occupied by the people who have worked on the shoulders of the individual directors remaining in Hollywood full responsibility for the results of their work.

Metro Pictures Corporation celebrates the fifth anniversary of its founding. A statement just issued calls to mind again the early beginnings of the now-powerful organization and also those persons and circumstances that were important parts in the development of the corporation through the five years of its career. The Metro resume follows:

"Just five years ago, in April, Richard A. Rowland and a few other kindred spirits launched Metro upon its career—a career that has been marked by steady forward progress in the face of obstacles that might have daunted men less optimistic and less determined.

"That Metro has achieved its present importance is a reflection on the motion picture industry generally conceded to have been due in the greatest measure to the personal attributes and business acumen of Mr. Rowland.

"The success of Metro is all the more to be applauded when it is realized that the company started on what might have been termed a gamble. It was the direct outgrowth of a concern that had failed to make good. In fact, the story of Metro's formation would furnish the basis for an excellent university text.

"Old-timers in the motion picture game will recall the Aco Company. This was a producing and distributing organization financially supported by a system of exchanges. These exchanges relied upon the Aco Company to supply them with pictures. Aco, for some reason was unable to turn out the pictures wanted, and it became necessary to bring in a new organization which was to be launched to be called Metro, to be bought up for a song.

"Maxwell Karger, now Metro's director general, heard about the Aco Company. Mr. Karger at the time was, as he admits, almost 'flat,' but the gap was to be, to be sure, but not enough to hide the operation of the Aco Company, small as the quoted price was. Mr. Karger was successful in his efforts, and his lack of sufficient of the sauces of war—in the shape of ready cash—to take over Aco.

"Mr. Rowland was then an official of the famous General Film Company. Mr. Karger got in touch with him, and finding that the former—a sort of president to him, they took over the affairs of Aco. The new company, which adopted the name of Metro, will not only of Aco, but of Columbia Films, the Dyredon Company, Quality Pictures and Popular Flavours and these last were all taken over and was made president of the new company, which adopted Metro as the name and it has stuck to the production of pictures.

"The beginning was auspicious. Pictures were made on time, and the system of exchanges was supplied with prints as per schedule. Metro was a going concern.

"Mr. Rowland had always been of the opinion that the firm would never wanted to see big stars on the screen, in stories of outstanding merit. He put his theory into practice, and picture-goers will remember some of the memorable productions of Metro in its early days with such eminent stars as Ruth Chatterton, Fritzi Scheff, Robert Booth, Alice Lake, and by the time these stars and pictures were distributed across the country, Metro had a nationwide audience and was operating in all the major cities.

"Metro's story is that of a man with a vision. He saw the potential in the motion picture industry and through hard work, determination, and a love for the art form, he was able to bring Metro to the forefront of the industry.

"Mr. Rowland was then instrumental in developing Harold Lloyd, the big boy next door, into a star. He also had the foresight to sign up Harold Lloyd and several other top comics, which made Metro a great number of special productions with these co-stars. One of the most notable is "The Man Behind the Mask," which was a massive production of Playmates and Julee, Shakespeare's immortal four-four story of the Montagues and Capulets.

"Mr. Rowland was then instrumental in developing Harold Lloyd. When Lloyd was signed up, he was young and not very much of a name, but Rowland believed in him and put him into a starring role in "The Man Behind the Mask," which was a massive production of Playmates and Julee.

"Lloyd's success was assured when he starred in "The Man Behind the Mask," which was a massive production of Playmates and Julee. The film was a huge success, and Lloyd was launched on the road to stardom.

"A. A. Milne's "The Man Behind the Mask," was a massive production of Playmates and Julee, which was a huge success. Lloyd's performance was hailed as one of the best of the year, and he was quickly signed by Metro as a top star.

"Metro's next star was the beautiful Miss Alice Lake, who starred in "The Man Behind the Mask," and went on to become one of Metro's top stars. She was soon joined by other stars, including Henry Harmon, who was one of Metro's most notable composers, and who later went on to become one of Hollywood's most successful composers.

"Metro's success continued, and it was able to sign up other top stars, including John E. Ince and Henry Otto. The two men were instrumental in helping Metro achieve its success, and they remained with the company for many years.

"Mr. Rowland's vision was one of creating a company that could produce films that were not only entertaining, but also had a message and a purpose. Metro was known for its commitment to social issues, and many of its films dealt with important themes, such as the effects of war, the plight of the working class, and the importance of family and community.

"Throughout the years, Metro continued to produce films that were well received by audiences and critics alike. The company's commitment to quality and innovation was evident in its films, and it became one of the leading studios in Hollywood.

"Metro's success was not without its challenges, however. The company faced numerous obstacles, including financial difficulties, competition from other studios, and the impact of the Great Depression.

"Despite these challenges, Metro was able to remain successful, and it continued to produce films that were well received by audiences and critics alike. The company's commitment to quality and innovation was evident in its films, and it became one of the leading studios in Hollywood.

"Metro's past five years have been marked by a commitment to excellence, and the company continues to produce films that are well received by audiences and critics alike. The company's commitment to quality and innovation is evident in its films, and it remains one of the leading studios in Hollywood.

"Metro's future looks bright, and the company continues to push the boundaries of the motion picture industry. The company is committed to producing films that are not only entertaining, but also have a message and a purpose, and it continues to be a leader in the film industry.

"Metro's success is a testament to the vision of its founder, Mr. Rowland, and to the hard work and dedication of its employees. The company is committed to producing films that are well received by audiences and critics alike, and it continues to be a leader in the motion picture industry.

Metro Lists Literary Acquisitions

EXPANDING and development of its exploitation service is provided for every Metro exhibitor, whether his house be three hundred seats or three thousand, is reported to be under way in that distributing organization, according to a fifth anniversary announcement made by an official of Metro Pictures Corporation.

"There is being worked out, and at the same time applied," declares the Metro announcement, "a system whereby the Metro distributing company in various parts of the country will be able to work in the individual exhibitor, no matter where he may be located in business or what the capacity of his house, for achievement of maximum returns from every one of the Loew-Metro 'fewer and better' pictures shown.

"The backbone of exploitation and advertising, Metro believes, is the press book issued with every picture; and these books have been enlarged and made more comprehensive as to embrace every angle and detail of an advertising, exploitation, and public relations. At the same time Metro holds that no one person or set of persons can be aware of the local conditions and point of view of the thousands of places where constituent attractions of the 'Perfet 36' series of photoplays adapted from stage successes and best-selling novels are run.

"Hence the extensive work of the press books has been augmented with personal and local co-operation from representatives of the Metro exchanges, who being on the spot are acquainted with the exhibitor's theatre and his interests and his community, and by the joint working of the home office, through the issuance of press books and individual advice and cooperation with exhibitors, and of the Metro exchanges, the organization which releases to the world the fewer and better pictures, this exploitation scheme will find itself getting more and more out of each picture.

"After a long and careful period of investigation Metro has found that this arrangement promises to be the most workable of any yet devised by the distributing company for advertising its products. Each company, as the trade knows, has gone to the extreme of the metropolitan film man out through the country for the purpose of selling, rather dogmatically, a picture that we believe will be exploited. Experts, however, though these representatives undoubtedly have, their didactic attitude often has gone so far as to interfere with the exhibition of the picture, who, naturally from seeing his public twice daily knows it rather well, is at the time of exhibition working alone and unassisted to submitting to being told, as if he were incapable of thinking for himself or were hopeless.

"The most experienced advertising men will admit," commented a Metro official, regarding the promotion of the company's exploitation service, "that the game is so new that there are no rules sufficiently defined to be generally observed and that, as we fear, has been the trouble with so-called experts sent out through various territories to the exhibitors in those territories which they should do. They have tried Broadcast with only slight street; at the viewpoint and public on Broadway are not those of Main street.

"Metro believes that the exhibitor is a pretty live wire. He has the one business of making entertainment, and it is only natural that he should be thinking pretty very fully, if not with the entire extent of these pictures. What we aim to accomplish is not to attempt to do that thinking for him, but by day and by night, in advance, to exploit possibilities in our pictures, give him a basis from which to work.

"We say, here are the big points of appeal in this film. Which one of them do you think would make the most attractive story for you?" We talk it over, both profit from the consultation. Then we go ahead, with our shoulders to the wheel, and put the attraction over big.

"The press books in themselves give big and side of exploitation, exploitation and publicity. At the very first is a brief, clear, story of the picture, next a general talk on the tag points Metro believes the film has for advertising. Re-produnction of lobby stands of three sizes, a small company, two additional lines of series, the insertion of the date of show, striking and artistic advertising cuts, scene and star cuts of modern, distinctive style, a wealth of publicity material, advance and review stories, biographical sketches, interesting articles, human interest items, special Sunday supplement material, all ready-to-use reproduction of posters, by color and in black and white, all subject to the big twenty-four sheet; mistrust, not only suggestions for them, but with details worked out.

Cosmo Hamilton Lauds "Shore Acres"

"James Herne, himself, could be his character brought to life as Inger has re-vitalized him, would, I am sure, be as thrilled as I was."

This spontaneous and voluntary tribute was paid by Cosmo Hamilton, the playwright, to Metro's all-star picturization of "Shore Acres," featuring Alice Lake, in a letter received by E. F. Rosenberg, manager of the Los Angeles Metro exchange. The text of his letter follows:

"I am constrained to send you a few lines to say how deeply impressed I was by Rex Ingram's production of "Shore Acres." To my mind it is a tender and most masterly and imaginative play, brought to the screen of that fine old play which has become almost a national institution in the country and James Herne, himself, could be his characters brought to life as thrilled as I was."

The Average Must Be Superlative

ACCORDING to Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, the public of the near future will demand that every production be one of outstanding merit, and that the average must be superlative. This is a claim which he makes with the assurance that the standards of the American picture audience, is Mr. Rowland’s belief, is the same as the standard of the Metro executive follows:

"Whether or not the present equipment is true to the Ameri- can public must, to say the least, be a matter of question, but the very best cuts of meat or wear stockings woven from any material but silk, is certain that none but the first quality of motion picture entertainment is now countenanced.

"Not only the cheap picture, but also the mediocre picture, has gone the way of the cotton socks, the shabby overcoat, and the paper col- lar. Such films are being made which are dwindling in volume with the sureness of the moderately stocked cellar.

"Paradoxical as it may sound, the screen of the future—and it is not a distant future, but one that will come to-morrow—must present to audiences pictures that are sensibly exceptional. Every production must be one of outstanding merit; the average must be superlative.

"No use to hark back to the pio-ner days when one-reelers were slapped together on the roof of a vacant house in New York, on a stage, or revolved on the sun. Let us look back for a moment at the development of the motion picture. Within the last two or three years, the first adapters were paid high salaries, money was lavished on production, companies were formed to make them, and there was the stereotyped story upon which the photocolors were founded. Picture audiences knew by heart where he had balanced the policy of fewer and better desired than that of the other prod- duction, was fortunate in starting early its drive for the material for a few better pictures and the sure reward that came of it may be seen by a glance over a backspread few weeks ago. From that time on, at the end of the year, the Pictorial quality of the Apocalypse's, by Vicente Blasco Ibanez; 'Fair and War,' by Avery Hopwood; 'Polly With a Past,' by George Middleton and Gay Bolton; 'Par- ker, Bedroom and Bath,' by C. W. Beatty, and 'The Marriage of William Ashe,' by Mrs. Humphrey Ward; 'The Right of Way,' by Sir Gilbert Parker; 'Lam- bards, Ltd.,' by the Hattons; 'Alias Jimmy Valentine,' by Paul Aru- mullis; 'The Willow Tree,' by J. H. Benrimo; 'The Tres de l'Urbervilles,' by Thomas Hardy—are but a few. But you can fathom it.

"Picture stories based on books and plays of that character were put aside for the production of the new Metro stories. In Hollywood, California, last summer. By fall they were ready for release. And the whole- some produce of that noble justice and the American obsession for the rest exten- sion to motion picture entertainment, if tending chie.

The Latest in Studio Equipment

With the rounding out of its fifth year as a motion picture organization, and with the completion of the third big dark stage at its modern studios in Hollywood, Cal., Metro has at its disposal what is believed to be the most perfectly equipped picture-making plant in the world. In describing the production facilities at its disposal in the West Coast studios, Metro Pictures Corporation states:

"Facilities in the West, not to mention those in the East, now include the original equipment used in Hollywood, with the addition of an equally large lot directly across the street, for future expansion, and also a sixty-five-acre tract adjacent in the wonderful San Fernando Valley. This was acquired recently to furnish Metro's "faster and better pictures." It formerly was known as Rose Hill Park, but since its acquisition by the makers of Metro-Copied, it has been renamed Metro Park. It lies fourteen miles northeast of Hollywood, some thirty miles from the country, but a stretch of land in the distance—ideal space for the making of outdoor pictures.

There are in the main Metro lot in Hollywood five stages—two of which are open, and the other three, the last of which is now undergoing finishing touches in the shape of installation of electrical equipment, dark. While Maxwell Karger, director general of all the big pictures made by Screen Classics, Inc., and distributed through Metro, was in charge of the Western studios, it was found that the dark stages in the main proved more satisfactory for interior "shots" than those open to the daylight, because indoors a constant light could be created, unaffected by weather conditions or the time of day.

As far back as a year ago, the Metro plant had ready for production an electrical equipment exceeding that of any other studio in the West. Its nearest competitor is that such a combination was considerably behind in the matter of lighting facilities. Dozen after dozen of Cooper-Hewitt stands and goosenecks; Klieg's California sunlight are the hundreds are at the immediate disposal of directors of the "faster and better pictures."

"And this equipment is most the modern type. Under a system installed by David Thompson, studio manager, not a line of electrical cable is ever stretched across the floor of the immense enclosed stages. All cables are strong overhead, out of the way of directors and players and electricity, so that there is a clear view of that part of a deserted ballroom. The overhead Cooper-Hewitts are suspended by cables from movable crane running in grooved rails and able to be moved rapidly to any quarter of the stage whenever required on a particular set. A feature of the studio equipment is the silent control system of lighting. Under this system of lighting control of all the great banks of Cooper-Hewitts, Klieg's, Wohls and other lights used on the set will be left at the director's fingertips."

"Laboratories, cutting rooms and photographic workshops of various kinds have been put up to keep pace with the improvement of the facilities where scenes are photographed. Four fire-proof cutting rooms, separate buildings for the plaster modeling department and art title department and a storeroom for surplus scenery were built and furnished under the supervision of Clifford B. Butler, general superintendent of the Metro West Coast plant."

"On the lot across from the studios a spacious four-story building has been constructed for the plaster-causing department. In this Victor Andric, chief of that work in the Metro studios, and his assistants, carry on their work. A two-story building contains the various artists' studios, a costume department, and a number of storerooms, the art department, which is headed by Mr. Adams. On this studio grounds a stonehouse 140 feet in length has been built for lighting effects and other studio equipment when used in the picture."

"The newest structure, the third dark stage, slightly larger than the two dark stages, cost $45,000 to erect, but its equipment, which is to be served with twenty feet wings on each side, is roofed over, so that it will be ready for the making of interior scenes by artificial illumination."

"The capacity of the big studios in Hollywood as yet has not been tested to the full, but companies easily can work there without interfering with each other. Recently two new plays headed by Bert Lytell, Mary Allston, Viola Dana, Estelle D'Antoni, Alice Lake and one of the Dury Lane melodrama companies opened on the lot at the same time. All were normally big productions, but there was room enough in the demand for space for the reason that this is so enormous."

Metro Reviews Nazimova's Work

In a statement just issued, Metro Pictures Corporation gives a retrospect of Nazimova's career under the Metro banner and proclaims the Russian star to be the "world's greatest actress." The statement is submitted as follows:

"Nazimova, Russian star, has done eight pictures and is in the midst of her ninth production for Metro Pictures Corporation. Since coming under the Metro banner Nazimova has won for herself the title of the world's greatest actress—a title confirmed not only by American critics and the great army of American motion picture fans but also by the conservative reviewers of England.

"Nazimova's work has but recently been widely placed in Europe, through an arrangement made by Metro with Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., in London, of which Sir William Jury is managing director, and the Mundus Film company in Paris, under the direction of Madame Schneebaum. European critics maintain that the handling of Nazimova's leadership, comparing her with Ellen Terry, Madame Rejane and Bernhardt, emotional queens of yesterday.

"The brilliant artiste had made but one cinema production prior to signing her contract with Metro. Her first picture for Metro, produced by Nazimova Productions, was "Revelations," daughter of Joy, a gipsy of the Paris cafes, in this drama of primitive feminine emotions, adapted from Madame Schneebaum's novel, 'A Rosebush of a Thousand Years,' Nazimova's success was instantaneous.

"From the very beginning she was established as a box-office attraction sans pareil, so great was her immediate popularity. Her productions from the start challenged long established film favorites for leadership, and in a short while she had passed them, according to authentic figures from exhibitors. One box-office record after another crumbled when Nazimova was shown on the screen, while the superb quality of her acting caused pictures to bristle."

"Nazimova, followed 'Revelations,' with 'Toys of Fate,' in the dual role of Azah, the gipsy girl, and Hayan, her mother, who was faithless in love; 'Eye for Eye,' in which she played the seductive, De- donian child of the desert; 'Off the Fog,' in the dual role of Ewe, the fisher-girl and Faith, her mother; 'The Red Lantern,' again playing two contrasting parts, those of Mabelle, the Eurasian, and Blanche, an American, and 'The Brat,' doing Maude Fulton's role of the chorus girl; 'Lights and Shadows,' an English romantic, and 'The Heart of a Child,' wherein she does a London garret scene, a product of Linwood for whom she was the dizziest social height.

"The Heart of a Child' is Nazimova's current release. It is based on Frank Darien's popular novel, and was adapted from the screen by Charles Bryant, who plays also the leading male role of Lord Kildermister opposite the star. Ray C. Smallwood directed. Nazimova is at work on an entirely different theme than any of the plays mentioned, the title of the picture or the details of the plot are announced by Metro. It is the desire of the star to maintain the close secrecy concerning this production, which promises will be a complete surprise to her many admirers.

"Nazimova recently renewed her contract with Metro for a lengthy period."

RESCOE ARBUCKLE is to for-K sake leap for keeps, and, according to announcement made by Josse L. Lasky this week, the big comedian will, in the future, appear only in live-real straight comedies. This arrangement was made with Joseph M. Schenck.
Work is to be started in the very near future on the first of the Arbuckle series which will be an adaptation from Irish Cobb's story,
"The Life of the Party," and to be directed by Joseph Henbery.
Henbery just completed the Major Robert Warwick subject,
"The Fourteenth Man," which is an adaptation from the stage play,
"The Man From Blankety's.
When Bryant Washburn completes work in "A Full House,"

METRO

THE list of new people engaged by Metro this week includes a number of very well-known persons of the film industry. Carol Hol-lovy is to be leading woman in the Winchell Smith production of "The New Henrietta," and Josephine Hill, late of Universal, is to be featuring in "The Face in the Mirror," "Bedroom and Bath," now being made by Edward Dillon. Lawrence Grant, a former set dresser, is now a director, and in the most notable screen work was the part of the Kaiser in Metro's, "To Hell With Kaiser's Censor," and is now a member of the Metro stock organization.

Edward Mortimer, formerly with Maurice Tourner as director, has been engaged by Joseph Egle as a member of the general staff which includes the heads of all departments. In his first work for Metro, however, Mortimer will direct Alice Lake in, "The Outsider." Cast for this subject has not been selected. Miss Lake will have the role of a manicurist, and work on the subject will begin within a week.

C. E. Shurtleff's second production will be started next week, and Edward Sloman, his associate as director, will be "The Mystery of the Elusive," which will star Mitchell Lewis.

"Held in Trust," which will star
May Allin, is to be directed by John Ince. Miss Allin plays the role of a shop girl in this picture.
Wm. C. Dowan will direct Viola
Dana in "Head and Shoulders," which gives the star the role of a shiny dancer. Both of these pictures will be put in production next week.

Ray Leck, who has been con-ected with the New York Metro publicity and advertising department, has resigned, and will serve in that capacity at the Hollywood studios. Ted Taylor, in charge of the Publicity depart-tment, took a part in the Bert Lytell coming release, "Alias Jimmy Valentine," to Florence, Arizona, last week and gave a preview to inmates of the prison there. The prison scenes for the picture were made at this place.

members in selling Priscilla Dean's new picture, "The Virgin of Stamboul."
VITAGRAPH

DAVID SMITH, the Vitagrph director who recently made "The Ghosts of the St. Louis Flyers," left this week for a trip of two weeks to the Portland, Oregon area. The Vitagrph will be showing the next James Oliver Curwood story, "Niles Welsh," which has been destined to play the lead in this story, and which will be directed by the time Director Smith has locations scouted.

Two accidents were reported from the Vitagrph plant this week. Early Williams was in an auto- mobile accident near Smith Bar- bar who two cars came together. The company was in the north working on exteriors for "The Three Keys," being directed by Chester Bennett with Yola Vale playing the feminine lead. Williams received a scalp wound and has the accident delayed production several days.

Bill Miller in driving an auto- mobile over a cliff in Guinah Park this week for the Larry Semon comedy to follow, "The Fly Con- tinues." The accident happened beneath the steering wheel in order to jump into the net alongside the hill, where the car will remain in the machine during its thirty-five foot dive. None of Hauler's bones were broken, but he was laid up for a few days. Miller's true condition will not be known for several days.

At the Vitagrph company were working at the studio one day early this week, and each of the five required shot scenes. In all company was working the day that the scene was ready. The mammoth bridge built across a canyon in the Vitagrph exterior lot to be destroyed next week for scenes in the William Dunce serial. The Silent Avenger. This is to be the last big story work to be done for this serial, and for the building of the bridge and preparation of the spectators that will be destroyed instantly, has taken more than five weeks.

The two water polo teams of the Los Angeles Athletic Club have won the Antonio Moreno Company in the making of scenes for, "The Three Keys," serial now being directed by William E. Weber this week. A number of water polo scenes were made in the big tank at the Vitagrph plant.

Censorship Now Unnecessary

BY CECIL B. DE MILLE

A LMOST coincidently with the launching of the motion picture industry, film censor-ship came into existence.

In varying degrees of destructiveness, it has continued to hamper and nullify the progress of the producer during the present

In the early days, censorship was a much more widely spread evil than it is today. Nearly forty states and many cities claimed the right to say what their citizens should and should not see on the

Fortunately, that day has gone, never to return, it is to be hoped.

Today but a few states and many cities maintain formal boards of censorship. But these relatively few and the existing censorship organization in Canada cause the producer unlimited trouble without in our opinion, accomplishing nothing which justifies its

Motion picture producers long ago over found that what censorship boards could or not may do, the public is the final judge and the final censor. The majority of the people of the United States realize this fact equally well, as is evidenced by the number of censorship organizations

Perhaps there was a time when

The Way of the Griffith Studio

NOW that the Studio Directory is entirely out of our hands, we've installed a dicta-tone that repeats into our telephone every few intervals: "It's the banker's. We're still hoping for its appearance ultimately," thus saving us a triumphant amount of effort.

We set out one day last week to enjoy ourselves. We succeeded. We will have to watch ourselves as well as giving that Directory out on time. But then, of course, we don't have Mr. R. E. Long and the Griffith Studio to help us with the

We had been looking forward to speaking with Mr. Griffith and the Girls and Richard Barthelmess and Dempster and all the rest of his distinguished company ever since they first came East to produce and hoping that sooner or later we'd be able to watch them work. We expected to sense an unusually delightful atmosphere, as we had been told frequently by a few of our our really reliable friends that it

But it was even more delightful than we had supposed.

Dorothy Gish under the direction of Mr. Griffith is working on a new comedy that has not yet been nudged, but it has to do with a young wife's efforts to please her husband upon his return from

SUCCEEDING but that day lived in memory only. Every motion picture producer knows that, but unfortunately the censors do not seem to realize the existing motion picture theatre of today enters to all classes but if there is one class which, more than any other, patronizes the cinema today, it is the family group.

Exhibitors are careful to maintain the constant good will of this patronage; they cannot give their patrons pictures which jeopardize the existence of this good will.

And the producer that he cannot sell his product to the exhibitors if that product promises to damage the good name of the theatre.

As the situation stands today, the existing censorship boards have established individual standards differing from the other. What passes one board may be denied by another. An amusing incident occurred several years ago at the time we produced "Carmen." At that time, thirty-odd members of the board were in the exhibition. And of more than thirty cuts made, no two boards cut the same things.

From the producer's stand-point, it is impossible to please all of the censors and the production suffers accordingly.
Every censor considers himself, or his board, as the only and final arbitrator. Each board makes changes with the result the continuity of the story is, in nearly every instance, ruined.

But why the screen should be made to bear the burden of censorship while the stage escapes has never been made clear. Picture production which oversteps the bounds of decency or morality meets with immediate suspension.

The exhibitor is bound to the same end should meet any and all screen dramas which come in the same

Why, on the other hand, trilling and troublesome alterations, based on the personal beliefs or mor-dules of individual censors, should be permitted to destroy the producer's finished work remains an unsolved riddle to those of us who are giving our best to the screen.

We know that the public will receive only the best. Some day in the not-so-far-distant future the states and cities which maintain censorship boards will awaken to the idea that we should abolish once and for all and the present autocratic organizations which hamper our work and prevent the realization of any desire it pays its money to see—the complete, properly constructed and dramatically correct photograph.

France, and Dorothy was trying to with the aid of a hurried waiter, to cook a delectable dinner in about ten minutes, without her husband. She did, however, suspect that her cook had departed. While we watched her glancing through less than fifteen cook books, and demanding one ingredient after another, with the "pep" that she could put into such scenes, we were entertained. In the side lines by the aforesaid husband, who should have known nothing of what was going on, but in reality, was enjoying the scene as heartily as anyone, was James Remick, who is playing opposite Miss Gish for the second time. In one scene in the picture, he will be called upon to take his young wife in an airplane, and there will be no faking the incident, as Mr. Remick was in the Royal Flying Corps for two years during the war, and has all the character he is playing, all the flying qualification, at least.

At our first opportunity, we mentioned the flying scene to Miss Gish, and were met with unlimited enthusiasm. "It's a chance I've been hoping for ever since I've been in pictures," she exclaimed, "I wouldn't miss it for anything! There's no use in worrying about me," she added to Mr. Long.

"I'll come down, you know. Everyone does."

PORTLAND, O.

A series of Thursday afternoon half-hour motion picture releases, starting with the first Portland cinema to stage its special concert during the week, as other theaters have their musical events on Thursday at 12:15 noon or one hour later.

The Plaza theater in San Diego, Cali, has given a concert to the Robert Morton Organ Company, of Van Nuys, Calif., for the installation of a new musical organ to cost about $11,000. The Plaza then will be for use in the construction of the organ.

To Expand Production in East

MAYO begins its fifth anniversary activities this month with its New York studios renovated, and the first production to be made in the East since early in 1918 now under way. The resumption of Eastern productions, in conjunction with the productions that will continue to be made in Hollywood, California, others in the company's new year with promise of production on the largest scale yet attempted. The amount of productions will be increased during the year with the opening of a third studio to be located on Long Island.

The initial outlay for the Long Island studio will be in the neighborhood of $2,000,000 it is stated. Plans have been drawn for buildings, which it is declared will combine all the features of the elaborate Pacific Coast studios.

"The aim is to make the Long Island studios the most distinctive in the country," announces Metro Pictures Corporation, "and no efforts are being spared to realize this aim. A feature of the new stage will be a special electrical equipment."

Announcement of the site that has been obtained has been withheld for the present, but it is announced that work will be rushed through as soon as the present difficulties in the building trade are settled. The recent agreement of the builders and bricklayers has given impetus to the work.

Metro states that its purpose in having three studios in operation at the same time is to "terminate output without being crowded into a rush job." The same underlying policy that has marked the "lower and better series of pictures will be pursued," continues the Metro statement, and the increased output will be obtained through the utilization of entirely new companies, directors and studio staffs.

The New York Studios are at No. 3 West Sixty-first street, overlooking Columbus Circle and a long stretch of Broadway on the South side and all of lower Central Park on the East. These studios were abandoned in 1918 because of the war demand for coal restrictions. All activities were transferred to the Pacific Coast.

The work on renovating the studios was begun early in February, under the supervision of Mr. Studcup, Metro art director and technical expert, and his assistant, Frank Nanyey. They were the first of the Metro men to return from the West. They were followed in March by Maxwell Karger, Metro Director General; George McGuire, his assistant, who was formerly Metro's chief cutter; William Meyerhof, who heads the electrical department at the new studios; Lewis Diehlhart, chief carpenter, and Julius Gavard, his assistant.

The studios and Metro offices occupy the sixth and seventh floors of the Sixty-first street building, running through to Sixty-second street. The stage on the seventh floor has a floor space of 150 by 73 feet. All the old flooring has been torn up and an entire new concrete floor put in.

The glass roof was painted black, as Metro, from its experience with its Pacific coast studios at Hollywood, became convinced of the necessity for "no daylight" interiors. New Cooper-Hewitt lights have been installed.

In productions at the New York studio Mr. Studcup intends to use the natural "backings" that the studio affords for New York, representing Central Park, Broadway and Eighty Avenue.

The entrance to the studio is on the sixth floor, where Joseph Strauss, studio manager, has his office. The bookkeeping and business departments are also on this floor, along with the dressing rooms, which have been repainted and repapered. Nearly all of the old Metro scenery, which was kept in the store room, when Metro went west, has been scrapped. The carpenter shop has had new equipment installed. A new screen has gone up in the projecting room, and the lunch room, kitchen, film cutting room and receiving department have been completely overhauled. All of the walls on both floors have been repainted.

On the seventh floor, besides the stage, there are the offices of Mr. Karger, Mr. McGuire, Mr. Studcup, Mr. Nanyey and Mr. Meyerhof. Another office on this floor has been fixed up for Eugene Walter. A scenario office has been taken over by Arthur Zeiyni, who recently came from the Pacific coast to write continuity in New York. Another office is being fitted up for June Mathis, the head of Metro's scenario department, who is shortly expected to return from Hollywood to New York.

Two Very Artistic Spots Found in the Benicia Majestic

The photographs accompanying the story on the Majestic theatre prove that it is possible to have beauty in a house of small seating capacity. In the case of the Majestic the stamp of quality is seen on the exterior as well as within the auditorium.

At the right is one of the vestibules with walls finished in marble. A careful selection of ornaments and decorations has carried out the keynote of the design.
The 550 Seat Majestic Theatre Compares With the Best
This Theatre Has a Unique Layout for Its Mezzanine Floor

The Majestic Is a Wonderful House for a Small Town

BENICIA, California, has recently been given its first theatre as a town of 2,500 persons could wish for. The Majestic, which is illustrated by full-page plates on pages 3711 and 3712, was opened on February 22 with W. B. Crooks as manager. James W. Plachek, of Berkeley, was the architect and Henry McCullough was in charge of construction.

The seating capacity of the theatre is 550, with 500 seats on the main floor and the remainder on the mezzanine. It is built of brick and concrete and is fireproof throughout. The total cost of the structure was about $75,000.

The front of the building is finished in three shades of a tapestry brick. A large marquee adds to the attractiveness of the theatre front. The vestibule walls and floor are finished in marble. There are five sets of double doors with ten mirrors in each, leading into the theatre. The foyer measures 45 x 12 feet and is done in cain stone with heavy carpets over all. At one end of the foyer is a ladies’ rest room and at the other end is the manager’s office and a stairway leading to the mezzanine floor. In the auditoium, richly colored tapestry panels and pilasters break up the side walls.

The aisles are covered with thick carpeting and the seats, which were furnished by the American Seating Company, are upholstered.

A stage has been provided large enough to accommodate small shows and musical acts. A beautiful velvet drop curtain costing $1,700 is at the front of the stage. Up each side of the proscenium arch is an organ chamber.

The organ is the latest style of Robert Morton orchestral instrument and is presided over by Mr. Frank Horback.

A great deal of attention has been given to the decorations of the interior. The auditorium abounds in artificial flowers, potted plants and ferns.

There is considerable worthy of study in the layout and placing of the mezzanine floor. As shown in one of the accompanying illustrations, this floor is a sort of rest room and mezzanine combined. Placed at the back of the theatre on a level with the projection room and equipped with rich hangings and carpets this mezzanine floor has an attraction seldom found in theatres of this size.

The projection room is set back from the mezzanine seats and its location allows practically a level throw to the screen, the best condition for perfect projection. It is 15 x 13 and 12 feet high. In it are two Simplex machines, a dissolve, a spotlight and a motor rewind. There is also a stor-

New Theatre for Evansville, Indiana, To Cost Over Half Million Dollars

Standard Theatres Company to Add 2500 Seat House to Its Chain of Theatres

EVANSVILLE, Indiana, is to have a splendid new theatre as is shown in the accompanying illustration of the building to be erected during the present year. The Standard Theatres Company of Indianapolis, Indiana, at a cost of more than $605,000.

This building will be located in the center of the business district of Evansville, being 148 x 142 feet on Main Street and will be bricked, steel and concrete construction, fireproof throughout. The front portion has been planned for hotel purposes and will be six stories high, containing more than one hundred rooms, all with bath.

The theatre with a seating capacity of 2500 will occupy the rear portion of the site, with an entrance on the corner, providing a beautiful lobby 44 x 50 feet. Every comfort has been provided for the patrons and all equipment will be of the very latest and finest type obtainable. The stage is large enough to accommodate the most extensive legitimate production, although a program of vaudeville and pictures will be the usual offering.

The Standard Theatre Company, which will operate this theatre, is a million-dollar corporation and one of the co-working units in a chain comprising The Bankers and Merchants Theatres Company, The Terre Haute Theatres Company and The Peoples Theatres Company, with theatres at Fort Wayne, Richmond and Terre Haute. It is at present engaged in erecting at Clinton, Indiana, an 1,100-seat house at a cost of $750,000 and has purchased land at Anderson, Indiana, on which it will build a 1,300-seat theatre this year. It is a fixed policy with this chain to locate their theatres on the busiest side of the busiest street next to the busiest corner, and their successes in the past have amply justified this procedure.

Evansville may indeed be proud of this handsome addition to its busiest district and satisfied in the possession of one of the finest amusement houses in the State, CERTAINLY there is nothing more fundamental in the business of an exhibitor than keeping his theatre in such a physical condition throughout that patrons have at least no good cause for complaint.

A surprisingly large number of exhibitors are not doing this. Many failures to provide agreeable physical surroundings occur in the matter of ventilation—a basic and indispensable requirement for every well ordered theatre.

Poor ventilation or no ventilation at all strikes at the very root of a theatre's success. The day has passed when patrons may be expected to tolerate for any considerable length of time a theatre where the air is foul and unhealthy.

Thousands of dollars may be expended in good pictures and exploitation, but if this basic requirement of good ventilation is absent it will be found impossible to build up and maintain a satisfied patronage.

Dear Sirs:

Received pamphlet containing subjects from April 1, 1919, to April 1, 1920. Would be interested to have a price check for $1.50 for one for coming year and back catalog.

Thanking you. Respectfully,

FOXVILLE OPERA HOUSE

The above letter received from an exhibitor to a small town is typical of letters from exhibitors everywhere who bought, last year, the Board's catalog of selected films. There is now ready for distribution a latter issue of this catalog (which contains no advertising matter) entitled:

"A GARDEN OF AMERICAN MOTION PICTURES"

Covering selected pictures seen by the Board, April 1, 1919—December 31, 1919

Price 25 cents

Previous issues of this catalog listing other pictures are also available and monthly lists which serve to keep the "garden" up to date may be had for an annual subscription of one dollar.

Both catalogs and monthly lists give release date (in many cases this year's), title, distributor, number of reels, "star," a brief characterization, and the source when drawn from standard or current literature. Special suitability for young people, aged 12-10, or any age, is also indicated.

WHY NOT USE THE "GARDEN" AND BUILD UP AND HOLD A NEW AND DISCRIMINATING CLIENTELE?

Kinema Has Straightaway Projection

The Kinema theatre was recently opened to the public of Salt Lake City, Mr. William Cutts, who has been appointed manager of the new house has gone to unusual efforts in catering to the convenience of his patrons. The two pages of illustrations of this theatre show many of the points that have been the cause of the favorable comment.

Mr. Cutts has laid out an artistic foyer with comfortable chairs and settees. The women’s rest room was designed and furnished by one of the city’s most expert interior decorators. Chairs, a chaise lounge, writing desks and tables, all in attractive wicker style, make it an ideal rest room.

In the interior of the house, the operator’s projection room is situated on a level with the screen, giving a maximum value to the projection. The effect of the outside lobby is enhanced by a large shield canopy bordered with electric lights.

Cutts expects to make his house one of the principal first-run houses in the West. He was the first man in his territory to sign up for “The Virgin of Stamboul,” the big Universal-Jewel picture starring Priscilla Dean.

Typhoon Fan Ships Large Typhoons

The Typhoon Fan Company of New York has recently received more orders for large diameter Typhoons than ever before. This is due, of course, to the fact that there are many more large theatres being constructed now than for the past several years, requiring cooling and ventilation during the warm weather. Some idea of the size of these large fans may be had referring to the accompanying illustration.

This particular Typhoon is 12 ft. in diameter. Two others are being made ready for shipment to the Cozy theatre, Okmulgee, Okla.

One 10 ft. diameter has recently been shipped to Harry Grandle’s new Strand theatre, Cumberland, Md., together with several of smaller size. Four other 10 ft. Typhoons have been shipped to the Victory theatre, Tampa, Fla.

Takes Temporary Office

The New York office of the American Photoplayer Co., has been moved to the Hotel Schuyler at 57 West 45th Street, where temporary headquarters will be maintained.

Atlanta Office for Typhoon Fan

Mr. Ernst Glantzberg, president of the Typhoon Fan Company, has left New York for the South and will stop over at Atlanta, Ga., where he will open a permanent office and headquarters for the Typhoon Fan Company. Mr. F. K. Ricksecker of Atlanta, has been appointed representative in this territory.

Mr. Ricksecker is well known not only throughout the South, but in other parts of the country where he has been identified for the past four or five years with the American Photo Player Company.

The Atlanta office makes the fifth in the chain of offices that are being established by the Typhoon Fan Company.

Before returning, Mr. Glantzberg will visit Nashville, Knoxville, New Orleans, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Chicago.
Practical Electricity—VII
Study Lessons for the Projectionist

OFTEN in an arc circuit in order to get the desired amount of current flow two rheostats are used in parallel. By this connection we obtain a resistance of a carrying capacity equal to the sum of the two. An arc circuit using rheostats in parallel is shown by Fig. 14.

Here two 25-ampere rheostats designed for a 110-volt circuit are connected in parallel giving a total capacity of 50 amperes for the circuit, the current flow being divided equally between the two branches.

As an illustration of the method of solving the current flow through parallel paths we will use the circuit shown in Fig. 15 in which resistances of 8, 12 and 16 ohms, respectively, are connected to form parallel paths for the flow of the current through the circuit. An ammeter connected in the circuit shows a current flow of 29 amperes; and it is desired to find the current which is flowing in the separate branches.

It is first necessary to find the equivalent resistance of these three resistances in order to determine the drop in potential around this section of the circuit. This may be found from the formula of the previous lesson, which results as follows: \[ R = 3.69 \text{ ohms} \] and \[ R = 3.69 \text{ ohms} \]. Then multiplying this value by the current, 29 amperes, we obtain 107 volts as the drop across this section.

We may now find the current in each branch by dividing the drop in potential by the resistance of the respective branches. This gives 13.4 amperes as the value of the current flowing in the 8 ohm resistance, 8.9 amperes in the 12 ohm resistance, and 6.7 amperes in the 16 ohm resistance. The sum of these currents gives the total current of current in the circuit as shown by the ammeter.

When a combination of series and parallel connections are made in a circuit the circuit is known as a complex circuit. In solving a complex circuit as to total resistance, allowable current flow and drop of potential introduced in the line, it is best to consider each section of the circuit separately. A complex circuit is shown by Fig. 16 in which two resistances of 2 and 4 ohms resistance connected in parallel are in series with a resistance of 0.5 ohm across a 110 volt line. In order to determine the total resistance of the line we will first compute the equivalent resistance of the section connected in parallel. This is found from the equation

This added to the series resistance of 0.5 ohms gives a total resistance of the circuit as 1.83 ohms. This circuit then will allow a current flow of 110 divided by 1.83, or 60 amperes. The drop in potential around the parallel section is 1.33 \times 60 = 50 volts.

A complex circuit is sometimes used on an arc circuit where a series resistance in the circuit is variable so that the current flow at the arc can be regulated. Fig. 17 shows two 25-ampere rheostats in parallel connected in series with a 50-ampere rheostat used in an arc circuit for 230-volt supply. The series resistance may be variable so that the combined value of the voltage reducing or ballast resistance may be altered and thus obtain a variation in the current supplied to the arc.

A variable resistance should not be used as a path in a parallel connection as a division of current might be obtained which would overload another section of the circuit and cause excessive heating. All the above combinations are possible for use in an emergency, but for successful and continuous operation a rheostat should be used which is specially suitable for each installation.

In case of trouble in any circuit and the flow of current ceases it is necessary to determine at what point the line becomes dead before any wires are disconnected. The best way in which to test a line to determine whether or not a drop of potential exists at a certain point is by use of a lamp and socket, this may be placed across the line at any point without danger of a short circuit and by the brilliancy of the lamp will show whether or not full voltage exists at the point tested.

In order to measure the quantities of an electric circuit a volt-mill and ammeter are used.

A volt-mill is an instrument having a very high resistance so that it may be connected across any part of an electric circuit without appreciably affecting the current flow from the source. The movement of the volt-mill, however, depends on the magnetic effect of the current flow in the coil which in turn is proportional to the voltage applied to the terminals of the instrument. The scale of the volt-mill is calibrated by applying known values of \( E \) volts to the terminals of the instrument and marking the position of the needle for each particular pressure applied.

An ammeter is an instrument consisting of a large winding having a small resistance and is connected in the circuit in series with the line, such that any current passing to the connected apparatus flows through the ammeter. Care must be taken that an ammeter is not connected across the line, i.e. in parallel with the connected apparatus, for on account of its low resistance coil practically a short circuit would be placed across the line and a large current would flow and blow the fuses, also the instrument would probably be damaged due to the excessive current.

The illustration Fig. 18 shows the method in which a volt-mill and ammeter may be connected in an electric circuit to indicate the properties of the circuit. Here the total current going to the lamps must pass through the coils of the ammeter and the current flow is indicated. The volt-mill as shown is connected at the load end of the line and shows the potential drop at the lamps. This is slightly less than
Jayne Sends in a Drawing and Description of His Own Change-Over Device
A Lay-Out That Is Simple to Improvise and Equally Simple to Install and Operate

HAVE read the News with much interest for two years now, but this is the first time I have ever gotten courage enough to "break into" the column. Am enclosing a description of a change-over device made by the Buffalo News here for some time. I have found it very satisfactory so am passing it along, hoping that it will be of some use to some one else. It is positive in its action providing the projectionist watches his cue, which has been my case for some time. You can forget about your off-going machine and put your attention on the on-coming. I simply watch my cue, get my on-coming machine under motion with the light on and the "dissolver" does the rest. It is a little awkward at first, of course, but with a little practice you can make a change without losing a foot of film.

I have found that the tendency nowadays is to have the dissolvers connected, but in my opinion this has its drawbacks, as I always like to see that my shot is good and bright just before I start.

Well, if you think my idea is worth while you can pass it on. Am using two Type S Simplex with a Fort Wayne M generator. Have just recently installed all three of these machines and they make some difference in a picture. Was using a Westinghouse Mercury Arc Rectifier and a Fort Wayne Compensator before. We kept both of these and have them for emergency, so we have two systems that are wired direct to the lamps.

I think it's a good way the "big fellow" in the small town and the "little fellow" in the city scrap about punch marks. I don't mean that the punch marks are a joke, however. Personally I think the only way we will ever get rid of the "conductor-operator" is through the exchange. If the exchange would jump good and hard on some of these babies that send their film back looking like a Swiss cheese, we would get somewhere. I remember when Goldwyn first started, the manager of the Buffalo exchange sent a letter with each show. The words "Managers will be charged for every punch hole found in these films" were especially emphasized. I ran Goldwyn about sixty days old and I don't remember ever finding a punch hole until they changed exchange managers and policies. What's the answer? Where does the trouble really lie?

My simple "change-over" device consists of five things, namely, two angle irons, one piece of wood 1 inch square of suitable length, and two pieces of tin or cardboard of a size best suited to meet local conditions.

With a couple of handles or knobs, a few nails and screws, and a hammer and screwdriver, along with the above named, I find that I can, by using a small amount of gray matter, make a home made dissolver that makes a very fair change-over. You can readily see, I think, from the drawing above about what I mean.

In Fig. 1 A1 represents the two angle irons. Fig. 2 is a side view of one of the angle irons showing a cross section of the wooden strip which forms the main support. From this you see how the iron holds the strip up. The iron must be large enough, however, to allow the strip to slide freely from side to side. I have these iron placed, as shown in diagram, about eight inches to the right of the Projection Port. That is a matter of choice, however. The main thing is to have them so that the wooden strip will slide evenly about six inches above the show, where the light rays are centered in the Projection Port.

BB in Fig. 1 are the two pieces of tin (or cardboard) so placed that when one port is open the other is closed. C represents a "stop" or "limit" pin which is placed so that the "slide" can only be pushed so far in either direction. By adding a couple of handles (E in Fig. 1), you have the whole thing.

In addition to this I have a 6-volt light hung on each of the two "blacks" of this affair of mine so that when the machine is shut off and being threaded I have a framing light just where it's needed. When the machine is running it's out of the way. And the "blacks" keep this small light out of the auditorium.—C. H. JAYE, Blue Bird Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

expectancy. But the picture—what is the matter? it does not materialize.

The projector buzzes again and again from eager and anxious pressing—no picture! Cuss words galore. The audience twits and squirms, chipping and whistling fills the air. The nervous patrons become alarmed and the buzzer continues to buzz long and strenuously. Darkness prevails. The gladness that was is no more; gloom sets upon that manager’s once becoming brow.

Now Mr. Manager, this is not a dream, it is what is likely to happen any time. The projectionist is the man who really makes or breaks you, yet he never gets that second thought worthy of having his name on your program, while carpenters, usher-boys, etc., come to the front.

Would it matter if your carpenter, usher, or even you yourself failed to put in an appearance if your operator was on the job and the show went off? Think it over.

Says He Wasn’t Scared Away

C. A. Christopher, Ambridge, Pa., comes to life again:

Well, I suppose you think that I have been scared out by the “City Operators” article on screen marks, etc., but nothing of the sort.

The reason I have been quiet is that I am more than busy handling five theatres, as chief, and so I am kept on the jump all the time.

Another thing is that I have bought a motion picture camera and am busy “shooting scenes” for the news reels around here.

What I wanted to write about was some labels, as I have been out for some time and can’t be without them, so send me a batch as soon as you can. Also I would like to ask about the N. A. M. L. buttons. I did not receive any when I joined and later sent five cents for one and still didn’t get one.

Will you please forward me one as I would like to have one and will pay for it if you say. About “punch holes” in film, I have nothing to say any more for I have come to the conclusion that it is about 50-50 on both sides. I was sitting in a large, in fact the largest theatre in Pittsburgh, Pa., and at the end of the reel there were a slew of punch marks and scratches went dancing on the screen.

An old man sitting next to me asked me what the big idea was to have all the “decorations” on the picture. I told him how it came. He said; it was the time the manager of the theatre got wise to himself. He was right, for it is up to the managers to get wise to those kinds of birds and give them the merry razz out of the theatre.

I don’t think much of a manager who will let his operator put a lot of rotten punch marks on the screen and then always wonder why he can never get anybody to come to his theatre.

Why can’t they come to their senses? One more thing and I am done. Please tell me this; why is it you punch one little hole in a film the exchanges jump the operators and cause all kinds of rumps when the same exchanges sends out film with as high as twenty exchange numbers in a single reel.

Here is a sample of some taken out of the Universal Company’s film with twelve of these in every reel. Let us not only stop the pratice of punching holes in the film ourselves but stop the exchanges also from spoiling a good picture.

If they don’t want to come fifty fifty with the operators then my sentiment is let all but five and go to it right.

Comment:

Sorry you didn’t get your membership button since you were certainly entitled to one. We are sending another under separate cover, together with an extra supply of labels.

Brown Appointed Typhoon Sales Representative

Mr. O. R. Brown, the well known motion picture supply man and partner in the A. & B. M. P. Supply Co. of Raleigh, N. C., was appointed last week representative of the Typhoon Company for North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.

Mr. Brown is well qualified to handle this exceptionally large territory for the Typhoon Company, having been for many years an exhibitor himself where he became familiar with the results obtained by the operation of Typhoon in his theatres.

In recent years Mr. Brown has represented some of the largest supply manufacturers, and enjoys perhaps one of the widest acquaintances throughout this territory. He will make his headquarters, as heretofore, in Raleigh, N. C.

Mr. Brown came to New York last week and conferred with President Glantzberg of the Typhoon Company on prospects for the summer season.

It is not practicable to operate more than a single enclosed arc on 110 volts because its starting arc voltage of 40 volts is over twice as great as the starting arc voltage of flame arc of 15 to 20 arc volts. The difference is further illustrated in Fig. 7, showing an Aristo enclosed arc lamp, the same converted to burn flame carbons and the twin arc Wohl lamp. (This Fig. 7 was prepared by Mr. Ben Parris.)

A vertical flame arc is generally preferred, but the arc will burn well in a great variety of positions. In general, flame upper carbons and flame lower carbons are used in motion picture flame lamps so that the lamps can be used on either direct or alternating current and without any regard to polarity if it is direct current. This arrangement is different from the photoengraving field where a very common trim is a neutral enclosed arc upper carbon with a white flame positive lower. In this case the flame carbon must always be made positive because the flame chemicals travel through the arc stream from the positive crater to the negative crater. It is the flame materials that produce the light and wrong polarity or pure carbon open arc gives about one-sixth the photographic light of the white flame arc. However, a positive flame upper carbon gives better efficiency with a flame negative lower as against a neutral negative lower.

On alternating current, both carbons should be flame carbons, as here the flame material feeds from both electrodes, and so this arrangement gives the maximum efficiency. The use of reactance ballast on alternating current lamps in place of resistance ballast in the arc, and gives from 50 to 100 per cent. more light for equal power on the line. With reactance ballast on two or three flame arcs in series on 110 volts, the overall power factor is better than 85. Three flame arcs in series on 110 volts with metal coated carbons gave very little if any more efficiency than two flame arcs in series.

We will now consider some of the typical flame lamps used in motion picture studios.

Why Amateurs Fail With Fine Grade Cameras

By R. B. Fowler

"I n all the cheaper grades of cameras on the market, the largest diaphragm opening on the lens is about one-fourteenth the focal length of the lens. We term that an F.14. It is only possible to take good clear snapshots with this lens when you have bright sunshine and are out of doors. A little better grade of camera using two lenses (one before the shutter and the other behind the shutter) gives you an opening as large as one-eighth the focal length, or F.8. But you now have nearly four times as much light without varying your shutter speed, because areas of circles are to each other as the squares of their diameter.

"With the still better grades of cameras, you will find lenses which have openings as large as F.4.5 (which is nearly four times as fast as the F.8, or nearly sixteen times as fast as the cheap single lens cameras, working at F.14). I have said nothing about shutter variations because I wanted to give comparisons adhering to the original speed of the shutter of the cheap cameras, about one-twenty-fifth of one second.

"Now you should readily see that while with cheap cameras you will find yourself under-exposing, with the better cameras, you will have a tendency to over-expose, not realizing the tremendous change in the volume of light with the diaphragm opening. You will have to increase the opening as you increase the speed of the shutter in order to cut down the light admitted. You will also see now why, with these cameras, it is possible to make good snapshots, where you would have to take time-exposures with the little single lens cameras."

Motion Picture Craftsmen Hold Successful Ball

The newly formed Local 614, known unofficially as the Motion Picture Craftsmen, and consisting of workers in laboratories and studios, held an informal ball and mass meeting at Bryant Hall on Sixth Avenue, New York City, on the evening of April 12th. A large gathering was present, fully 600 persons enjoying the program of dancing and addresses.

According to a statement issued by Mr. A. H. Heller, president of the association, the purpose of the ball was "to stimulate interest in the organization and to arouse enthusiasm amongst the members and prospective members." Most of the other New York organizations were represented by delegates.

Besides Mr. Heller, the officers are as follows: Wm. Paître, vice-president; Ralph F. Corey, vice-president; P. E. Brulatoar, treasurer, and Geo. G. Woodruff, secretary.

A Matter of Importance

The selection of a Pipe Organ is a matter of importance to the Exhibitor if his Theatre is to maintain supremacy. That is why the discriminating exhibitor gives the Barton Organ first consideration.

Most any organ will produce music, but the Barton Organ does more than just make music. The Barton Organ combines the grandeur of a Cathedral Organ, the crispness of Symphony strings, melodious wood wind and solid foundation in variations of musical appeal. And in addition, introduces the greatest musical invention of the age—The Divided Manual—thousands of new and original tonal combinations of wondrous beauty—never before possible.

But the matter of greatest importance is the fact that these new and astounding musical effects can be played by any organist without special training. The standard playing methods familiar to every organist does away with the “hard to get” and “harder to keep” specially instructed operator.

The Barton Organ attracts by its unique originality.

Better Music with Simple Operation is a matter of Importance to you.

"Down on the Farm"
(Mack Sennett Comedy—United Artists Five Reels)
Mack Sennett's long heralded five reel comedy, "Down on the Farm" has reached the screen, and judging from the quantity of lively incident and the quality of the production the publicity drive has not misrepresented the facts. Mr. Sennett is a postmaster in the art of ridiculous transparents, and no plot which ever appeared in a play may be said to be safer once he discovers its comical values. He is particularly partial toward the antique "city feller running little Neil, mortgage on the farm, erring daughter returning home to relieve the 'sorrier' of her parents" idea. And why not? Isn't it an excellent subject for burlesque? It was funny enough when it appeared in its original melodramatic form in the local op'ry houses of these United States.

By dressing up the old plot with sure-fire bolonium Mack Sennett has adorned a comedy which is a knockout in more ways than one. One may call it a broad satire on the "twenty-and-thirty" days, when Bertha and Nellie of Sewing Machine and Clock Model fame, respectively, cried out to Paw and Maw that the villain still pursued them. There is the city slicker as desperate as any Desmond who ever twirled a mustache, and there is the rustic swain who eventually frustrates the villain after a series of highly amusing complications. The "papers," meaning not only the cigarette kind, but those which spell "MORTGAGE," are given prominent display.

When the director wants to supply novelty and atmosphere he introduces a barnyard menagerie. Chickens, cows and geese meander about, thoroughly in harmony with the setting. The Great Dane, Teddy, has an important role. The same may be said of Pepper, the cat. This pet is totally unconscious of the camera and furnishes as droll comedy as any biped. A mouse comes in for a bit and enacts his part cleverly. Of course, Mr. Sennett has utilized the idea before in shorter pieces, and there may be some who will say that the more pretentious offering is "old stuff." But he has twisted it about a great deal and added novel touches through the employment of the menagerie, so that when it fattens the animals pick it up. The regular Sennett stock company is present. Louise Fazenda, Harry Gribbon, Bert Roach, Marie Prevost and limbs, Ben Turpin and even Billy Armstrong carry the burden of the plot.

The comedy has rich exploitation possibilities, and during its premier showing at Quimby's Strand, in Fort Wayne, Indiana, it was given an unusual campaign. Hay wagons, acrobats on streets, rugs who walked about and registered at hotels, and other features literally stopped traffic. The management staged a prologue with eighteen people against a barnyard setting, and, also lending atmosphere, was a rural orchestra and a variety of barnyard animals. The manager of the house states that he did capacity business in spite of a snow and sleet storm.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Woman Gives"
(First National—Six Reels)
A highly developed melodrama of rare order is this latest photoplay of Norma Talmadge where she sacrifices her love, her happiness, and her career to redeem the man who had been the first stepping stone to that success. Mary Souderson, penniless and alone, following the death of her father, is getting along well as Daniel Garford's model until one day she meets Robert Milton, a struggling young artist whom Garford is befriending, and falls in love with him. Milton returns her love, but lets his jealousy get the better of him when he learns that Inga is visiting dependable places in an effort to save the soul of Garford, who is fast going to the dogs after a serious quarrel with his wife.

Inga's efforts to redeem Garford lead her into a subterranean opium den where she is pursued by a Chinaman, and just escapes a fist-fight with Garford himself who revenges her interference. In the end, however, she wins and brings him back to his former social position and sees him repeat his former artistic successes. Garford's proposal of marriage to her brings a realization of her true love for Robert Milton and Inga confesses her love just in time for the picture to close with a long, lingering kiss.

The picture is replete with tense situations. Norma Talmadge holds the stage almost all the time. Her support is excellent, but the major portion of the success of the production is due to Miss Talmadge herself.—ELSIE LOEB.

Reviewed at Stillman Theatre, Cleveland.

"The Confession"
(National Film Company's Production—Adapted from Hal Reid's Stage Play)
"The Confession" in films is an adaptation of Hal Reid's play of the same name and has lent itself well to screen production, since its story is intensely dramatic and permitted the injection of action and incident.

As the production stands it registers as one of the most notable independent pictures of the year. The plot holds attention and interest groups as the story is unfolded. Henry B. Walthall, as the priest who heard the confession of the murderer, is most convincing and gives a portrayal which ranks with any of his extant career. Francis McDonald, as the brother, the sympathetic role, charged and convicted of the murder, plays the part most naturally. Margaret Landis ably portrayed the role of the sweetheart after two years' absence from the screen. William Clifford, as the heavy, added merit to the cast. All other parts are well cast.

The showing at Chan's Auditorium, Los Angeles, has been a great success both with month advertising. It, of course, has an especial appeal to Catholics, but contains real dramatic worth also.—J. C. JENSEN.

"The Woman He Chooses"
(Seven Reel Subject Produced in Sweden—Sponsored in America by Mickey Film Co., Inc.)
This is an adaptation of "The Girl from the Missouri," the powerful novel by Dr. Selma Lagerlow, the only woman ever awarded the Nobel prize, and in picture form, as in literature, proves itself to be a strong drama that should prove popular with audiences.

The literary masterpiece is a fine foundation for pictures. It tells the simple story of a young girl's betrayal in a land where sin is regarded as a disgrace and how she later comes to happiness. The picture is enacted by a capable cast of Swedish actors who demonstrate a technique rarely seen in pictures, especially those of foreign production. The story holds interest throughout and the scenery of Sweden, where the picture was made, affords fine backgrounds. The photography is excellent and the direction fully up to American standards.—J. H. MASON. Reviewed at the Ziegfeld theatre, Chicago.

"The Strange Boarder"
(Will Rogers Starred—A Goldwyn Release)
"The Strange Boarder" is more a series of semi-humorouls incidents, made entertaining by the star, than drama. That Rogers is able to carry the slender story with his peripatetic interpretation of the Arizona rancher, who is lanced on his first visit to a city is a tribute to his art. The picture entertains, has some moments of real interest appeal, and many bits of the sort of comedy for which the star is famous. Irene Rich plays opposite Rogers in the role of a stenographer. Others in the cast are James Mason, Doris Pawn as the wife and Lionel Belmore, whose work as the ward heel is masterful.

The settings, photography and general excellence of the production also aid the star in making the picture interesting.—J. C. JENSEN.

“DESSERT LOVE”

Tom Mix Furnishes Plenty of Thrills

Tom Mix, burdock-riding, quick-shooting, clown-jumping, surf-billowing star, fills up five reels of "Desert Love" with the above mentioned playful stunts, and that is about all there is to the picture. The story is not over-impressive, sagging in the middle, but leading eventually to a thrilling climax. But the star has all the requisites for his daredevil stunts, including good western exteriors, and sufficient hazards to stand at.

The whole production is up to the usual Mix standards and his admirers will continue to admire when they see it. They don't keep you waiting long before the action starts. In the first reel several score of the outlaws arrive to "shoot up" Tom Mix and his latest partner, but they do it in a very thorough manner, and the sheriff, played by the star, is killed, but manages to leave behind him a list of the bandits' names and a baby son. The latter grows up and in the course of twenty-five years, following his father's footsteps, is elected sheriff, and Tom Mix is brought back to life. He then procures a job as a riding cowboy. We only see three of the outlaws receiving their just punishment, but this is enough to allow the star to get in some thrilling action. Of course there is love interest, and in the final climax there is a lovely maiden to be rescued as well as a father to be revenge.

There are sets of stirring improbable stunts if you want to look for them. The father's misjudging the innocent daughter for the guilty man is crude. So is the existence of a second band of outlaws when we are led to believe that there were no more. One character ages about ten years in the twenty-year-old period. Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Once more Tom Mix, the daredevil of the screen, is in town. The well liked cowboy star will be seen in "Desert Love." This marks the third time that Mix has played the part of Buck Marston, sheriff of an Arizona county. Twenty-five years before his father's death, Mix was killed by a band of outlaws, whose names have come into the possession of the son. With endless vigor and energy he takes up the game, and finally captures the chief, who on a thrilling chase. Only one is left, the Whelp, who steals away with the girl loved by Mix. In a scene that is fraught with dangerous stunts the young sheriff rescues the girl and revenges his murdered father.

The scenes in which the daring star thrills his audience are too many to be named. The most thrilling is when Tom Mix is received in a window of a house, with a clear drop of a hundred feet below.

PROGRAM READER

No picture is more pure than the thrilling western. No picture is more picturesque than a brave and brawny sheriff of these counties in the Southwest, who, by any means, try to stop crime by last and vigorous action. Mix is in his latest production, "Desert Love," which will be seen at this theatre tomorrow. In "Desert Love," the hero, Tom Mix, plays the part of Buck Marston, sheriff of an Arizona county. Twenty-five years before his father, the sheriff, was killed by a band of outlaws, whose names have come into the possession of the son. With endless vigor and energy he takes up the game, and finally captures the chief, who on a thrilling chase. Only one is left, the Whelp, who steals away with the girl loved by Mix. “NEGLECTED WIVES”

(Alternate Title—"Why Women Sin"

Careful Production Overcomes Trite Theme

This is a political and society drama, with an average cast, some lavish sets, and a theme that is a relic of bygone days. It will be known in some territories already as "Why Women Sin." Before the title, there is only one neglected wife in the picture, but she is so pitiously neglected that she weeps through most of the six reels. Her husband is seeking the nomination for governor and can't find time to come home to dinner, so his wife passes the time by weaving and hanging her laundry. But too many close-ups are shown of the wife and father inspiring her with the love of God and the love of country. And when the women, who have been painted as a top, turn out to be an Apache chief, it doesn't work.

The story, "Neglected Wives" is an exploitation of the overworking wife, and the little child who brings paper and mamma together, may avert a bit of old-burlesque melodrama. Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Neglected Wives" ("Why Women Sin"), a powerful drama of modern American life, will be the attraction at the theatre tomorrow. This is a society and political story laid in a large city in the United States. It tells the tale of a little neglected wife, who, through the handicap that he can find no time for wife and little daughter.

Pemberton, the politician, has a bitter opponent in Horton, a corrupt political boss. Horton, when he finds that Pemberton's record is clear, endeavors to trick his wife of that story, through her, and tricks her politically. Mrs. Pemberton is an uncompromising woman. Again she is tricked by one of Horton's spies into a compromising situation, which Horton promises to keep a secret if Pemberton will renounce his candidacy. But the spies also have a past, and they make the story a much more exciting one for the picture. Rather than to the story of Pemberton's death, the story is told of Pemberton's wife, who, through her, and tricks her politically.

PROGRAM READER

A powerful lesson, clothed in a thrilling and exciting drama, is contained in "Neglected Wives" ("Why Women Sin"), which will be seen at this theatre tomorrow. There is a scene in a fashionable lady's gambling room, that is one of the exciting points. Among the entire six reels runs an entertaining story of a man who devotes his entire time to politics. Such a character in a woman's life is much more thrilling in the Spanish-American war under Roosevelt, and his life among the cowboys.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture will be known in some territories as "Neglected Wives" and in others "Why Women Sin," which is given by the producers as an alternate title. The former is the better title and more appropriate for the picture. Rather than show any close-ups of the cast, it would be better to feature long shots of some of the exciting scenes. By this way you will show your characterizations. A poster showing the fact that it is a stirring political play, and is also a strong condemnation of the man who places his duties before his home. You are reading Pemberton's nomination for Governor, in doing so he neglects his lonely wife. Such is the thrilling plot of "Neglected Wives." You cannot avoid the "lesson" angle of this picture too much. For a teaser campaign try the slogan, "Do You Neglect Your Wife?"

CATCH LINES

He placed his political advancement above his domestic happiness, but in the end he realized his relative position.

The story of a politician husband and the wife he neglected.

She had gained wealth and honor, but she had lost her husband's affection.

THERE is very little entertainment value in this picture, since it presents a theme which is passe and the director has not shown any imagination which might have given it some points of interest. The story goes back to war days when the German spies were sneaking around with bombs and concis. To give this story a note of heart interest, Mr. Hughes has written the idea around a girl who is under a cloud of suspicion because of her association with Germans. Suspense is aimed at in keeping under this cloud, but it falls quite short of the mark.

The moment value lies in the considerable flag-waving of the long-drawn-out, obvious story comes to an end. Most of the action transpires in a shipyard and it is so slow moving, so filled with unimportant scenes of interminable length, that if the subject carried any original punch it would be lost. Certain crude touches don't help matters much. For instance, the British authorities would have their heroine to leave England under suspicion and still they would go to the expense of watching her activities in America. Again, an I. W. W. character is seen haranguing the mob of workers in the same old way. The German spy comes over to get in touch with the girl, who is really of no importance to the story.

Then the crunch of all, Mr. SpY puts his bombs in a huge suitcase, walks through the supposed guard in broad daylight, and throws one (maybe two) into the "works." But it makes no more fun than a firecracker. Rest assured he is killed. Ditto the I. W. W. The director has made error after error in this grossly over-long and lighting faulty. And the title editor goes to extremes in flag-waving editorials and dialect. The players succeed in appearing genuine, which is remarkable considering the untruths that creep forth. The shipyard atmosphere is good.—Length 6 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An eminent author's production is "The Cup of Fury," which comes to the theatre on May 17th—next week with a cast that includes Helen Chadwick, Rockcliffe Fellows, Kate Lester, Florence Deshon and Sydney Aimsworth. Rupert Hughes is the author of this story and he has concocted a tale which is rich in action and suspense. The picture goes like a shot and delivers its quota of thrills. The combine were working over to supply ships to carry troops and provisions abroad. A time comes when she vindicates her honor and shows her patriotism and it is in this moment which presents a climax of undeniable strength. The picture carries an abundance of atmosphere, the shipyard scenes being genuine and dramatic. T. Hayes Hunter directed the picture.

PROGRAM READER

Rupert Hughes, one of the most vivid writers of the day, is the author of "The Cup of Fury," which will be shown at the Theatre in the near future. This is a German spy picture and details the shipyard industry and while it was written to wrack a shipyard and the struggle of a girl who is under suspicion because of her German associations. Sufficient to state that she vindicates herself. The picture carries a pleasant romance which develops to final conclusion and gives the offering a perfect balance. The cast includes such adequate players as Helen Chadwick, Rockcliffe Fellows and Florence Deshon.

SUGGESTIONS

In advertising this picture it would be advisable not to mention the theme unless you are sure of your crowd. The fact that it is a German spy picture probably at a certain patron among your audience. As the director has not shown any imagination, he probably would turn to his German associations. Sufficient to state that he vindicates himself. The picture carries a pleasant romance which develops to final conclusion and gives the offering a perfect balance. The cast includes such adequate players as Helen Chadwick, Rockcliffe Fellows and Florence Deshon.

Interesting Picture Made from Stevenson's Famous Story

NOTHER Classic from the realm of literature has reached the screen in Maurice Tourneur's production of Stevenson's “Treasure Island.” It is to the credit of this director's artistic perceptions that he has been able to catch the charm and atmosphere of the memorable story even though the scenario is a simple adaptation. What if the character of Jim Hawkins, the boy hero, is deprived of his initiative and spirit—what if some of the lesser figures are given more prominence than they deserve? These variations do not destroy the fabric of the tale. Rather are they permissible, to get every ounce of action from the translation.

In order to visualize the outstanding details, the scenario has taken liberties with Stevenson and he may be excused upon the ground that even the screen has its limitations. However, the flavor, the atmosphere, the color, the fancy of the printed page, are brought out effectively. In our opinion the children will respond enthusiastically to its stinging adventure scenes and also those grown-ups who haven't forgotten their youth, because Mr. Tourneur's action is graphic and the picturesque characters, Jim Hawkins, Bill Bones, Long John Silver, Black Dog and the blood-thirsty pirates—these figures, with the exception of the first mentioned, are just as vivid as Stevenson himself.

The action on the pirate ship, the conflict on the island, the incidents which lead up to Jim's adventure—all these points are what make the picture retain the vital quality of the story. Mr. Tourneur, a stickler for atmosphere, has caught some marvelous shots and his details fit Stevenson's descriptions. The adaptation of the story is by Shirley Mason, who, try as she might, is unable to make the characters convincing because of her sex. Charles Ogle is as immense as the seas-kept John Silver and Lon Chaney gives another of his vivid character studies as one of the pirate cutthroats or two. The heroine pictures the type of the woman of the same. Jim's ship, as long as the notions succeed there is no need of worrying over the traditions of the story.—Length, 5 reels. —Lawrence Reid.

“SLAM BANG JIM”
(America, "Flying A")

Good Laughs in Mixture of Farce and Western.

"SLAM BANG JIM" is somewhat of a hybrid. It is part farce and part western with a few burlesque characteristics thrown in. And although most of the picture is taken up with a bandit pursuit, the picture on the whole is pleasing, for in some spots it shows the merits of its type. The story is told in a straightforward manner and is amusing to watch. The various characters are fully developed and strong enough to make the picture a good one. Jim, the hero of the story, is a well-developed character. It is filled with amusing situations, and with William Russell, the star, instills his zestful personality throughout. He has a dual role, and the gleams, sun-shining chase is developed through mistaken identity. Jim gets into a tight before his wedding, and his wraithful bride-to-be and dispossessed father allow him to go to Arizona with a new found friend, and is there mistaken for a notorious bandit. He is arrested and escapes through the aid of the bandit's sweetheart. From then on he leads the Arizona's posse a merry chase. His fiancée and her father are brought on from the cast, with more mistaken identity as the result. But he proves to be a man, begins to stop and votes become too bewildered, the plot-timeless clear. The star appears too kindly to be a bandit, and refuses to be the tenderfoot. He does some good riding and fighting in both roles, and the only action slows up when the second set of characters are being introduced. However, his support to his character is good. Clark overdoes it a bit. Sets and photography are very good.

Length, 5 reels. —Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the most delightful light comedies of the season is offered in the picture for: —“Slim Bang Jim.” It is its title, and it's up to its name, being just one rapid fire piece of action succeeding another with lightning speed. William Russell is in his element here as the man of action, and his comedy is as splendid a horseman as ever set foot on a horse. Jim Page is so unorthodox as to be presented a few minutes before his wedding with a bandit, and Jim is to be the one to do it. His fiancée and her father will never again hear a word about his fate. He escapes, however, and with the help of a bandit and his sweetheart, who escape together. The the picture ends with Jim's marriage and the wedding. The story is simple, but well told. Hundreds of scenes in the camera in a thrilling scene when the bandit 'sticks up' for the couple, carefully and elaborately produced, and the many humorous situations and the star see in it that there is plenty of laughs.

PROGRAM READER

Don't some people just fall into bad luck? Jim proposed to a girl Seventy-five times before he accepted her. And then, on his way to the wedding, he tried to prevent a hold-up and was not permitted for arresting an officer! Of course his sweetheart would listen to no explanations. Such is the sad tale of "Slim Bang Jim," the amusing comedy feature. This has run very long. William Russell, the star, helps to turn it into a side-splitting comedy. It is just five reels of laughter, a genuine comedy situation to crowd into half a dozen pictures. And William Russell's name is enough to tell you how much action there is in it.

SUGGESTIONS

The star, good program readers, and pointed catch lines, will be your best tools in putting across the comedy. These photographs as well as stills of William Russell, Harold Land, and recall his past performances. In your program tell of the unhappy plight of the groom, who also describes the "stick-up" scene in the western saloon. Use the lines below.

“Slim Bang Jim,” you say? Were you ever mistaken for a bandit?”

“None of the bandits here know. Those bandit faces—there are plenty of those who are always looking for something to make them laugh instead of crying. The bandit scenes in the film allow some opportunities for stunts, such as a masked rider through the streets.

CATCH LINES

Don't ever get into a fight on your way to the wedding. Jim did and not even the avenging of a robbery would cause his pretty fiancée to forgive the humiliation.

"LOCKED LIPS" (Universal)

Antique Story and Crude Touches Provide Weak Entertainment

SINCE the featured player of this picture is a Japanese actress, the wife of Susse Hayakawa, it is perfectly obvious that the scenario written for her would be based on the "Madame Butterfly," formula which can be pigeonholed as number (6) among screen productions. There is a deal of coincidence and very little logic in the plot, although it would be less theatrical if more attention had been paid to the editing. The idea becomes rather vague as one advances through the subplots which clearly matter more by their absence.

The only variation on the three-board story is found in the locale. The Hawaiian Islands provide the locale of Lotus Blossom's fall from grace. And the guilty culprit is not a lieutenant of the navy but a dervish, who is washed up on the white sands.

One can understand that a marriage ceremony is performed between them. The action on the island only discloses a few close-ups of the "actor" derelict, a few cross words which he utters, a view of a native hut and a marine shot. The culprit leaves his Jap wife vowing that he won't come back "till he's good and ready." His latest photograph is published in Life just prior to her departure to Honolulu, and there is no wedding ceremony or a caption which would inform us of the facts. Not having one redeeming quality he leaves her to satisfy his lustful desires in New York. Returning he finds that his is a father.

Which introduces the very long and very torturous arm of coincidence. For the nurse is none other than Lotus Blossom. A man who doesn't have any scruples whatsoever would not worry over the anguish he might cause his wife. Yet he professes to believe that Blossom will reveal the facts. But she maintains a silence (hence the title, "Locked Lips"). In order to get her out of the way he attempts to poison her with incestuous fumes, but he fails a vote of confidence.

This is a crude scene to say the least. The picture is so clumsily constructed, so palpably manufactured that it earns very little quality. —Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY
The piquant Japanese actress, Tsuru Ajiki, who is the wife of Susse Hayakawa, will be seen on the screen in a new production of "Locked Lips," in which she plays the part of a dervish. The story is modeled somewhat upon the "Madame Butterfly" pattern and presents the idea of a Jap, male or female, as highly endearing in Hawaii, and the actress has a chance to prove her worth in a claxon of genuine dramatic strength. How she shoves her way up to an American —how she wins over her romance in shallow —how she breaks her sorrow in order not to bring anguish to another in a claxon which reveals deep paths and heart interest. The picture is cut upon a sound theme and patient upon a sound premise and patience —should be highly pleaded.

SUGGESTIONS
Here is your chance to bell the star as the wife of Susse Hayakawa. And make the most of your opportunity. Since he has a big following it is natural that screenwriters would have an interest in his wife. So feature her more prominently. Play up the picture as something similar to "Madame Butterfly." This should arouse interest because of the similarity of a Jap wife vowing that she will never come back unless he is good and ready. But why stop there? Make it a claxon. The Japanese race is without a doubt the most important of its type. And the picture promises to have its interest. Who can forget the Japanese rice fields and their beauty? Your musical program should be appropriate. Give your audience a real emotional food through atmospheric touches helps a lot in putting a picture over.

CAPTAIN SWIFT (Vitagraph)

A Pleasing Picture Which Should Interest

ALTHOUGH this feature has nothing in its makeup which would startle an audience, still it has enough "life" to make it pleasant as a great deal sticks in the fact that the story is true to life, there being no decided action in any of its reels and no strong love interest which would tend to keep an audience in suspense until the final scene.

Earle Williams is seen in the role of a trusty in both country and town. English drawing rooms with the same set expression of requisite which seems to give him a certain airlessness throughout the length of the feature.

But it is not his fault, for the story does not go into the details of Captain Swift's adventurous life, showing him as a man of honor and true but rather makes him out a man of goodness and kindness of heart.

This may be all right provided there is enough "life" left in the story to give it the proper interest.

However, the object aimed at in this production has been attained in many scenes. "Swift" is a general good film through and through of which there is quite a certain grace throughout the sequence of scenes.

The cast
From top by Earle Williams. Directed by Tum Terreis.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY
Earle Williams' latest Vitagraph production, "Captain Swift," will be the attraction at this house next —

In this picture, Mr. Williams gives a unique performance of the bold and daring adventurer only he can portray. He introduces the character "Swift," who offers to assist the American who is driven into the desert, in order to get his return to a place of safety.

The story opens with a famous property "Swift" making his escape across the hot sandy deserts after a bank robbery has been committed. He stops long enough to purchase a camel, which he then uses in order to get himself out of the difficulty.

Next he secures a camel, which he uses to escape the desert. He then has to face the task of crossing the desert.

"Swift" refuses to comply with his request, whereupon Earle Williams based on a true story to make his escape.

At the top of the screen, Earle Williams is the leader of a band of outlaws, who are ready to assist the American who is driven into the desert.

He is a man of honor and true, but rather makes him out a man of goodness and kindness of heart, that is hot upon his trail.

Fortune favours the swift, however, for a band of outlaws who have spied on the stage coach and who know him to be a good man at heart, decides to drop the charge and allow Swift to go free, thus bringing a pretty love affine between the hero and his sweetheart to a close.

PROGRAM READER
Earle Williams in "Captain Swift," his latest Vitagraph production, will be the attraction at this house next —

In this picture Mr. Williams gives preference to the finer qualities of the adventurous captain, evoking those of the robber and bandit. And in doing this he brings to the screen a story of a man of honor and one that is sure to make a lasting impression on the minds of those who witness his latest portrayal.

The story is taken from the famous stage play by C. Hamburg and E. O'Neill. Earle Williams is the leader of a band of outlaws, who are ready to assist the American who is driven into the desert.

In the opening scene "Swift" is seen riding his horse across the hot sandy deserts after a bank robbery has been committed. He stops long enough to purchase a camel, which he then uses in order to get himself out of the difficulty.

"Swift" refuses to comply with his request, whereupon Earle Williams based on a true story to make his escape.

At the top of the screen, Earle Williams is the leader of a band of outlaws, who are ready to assist the American who is driven into the desert.

He is a man of honor and true, but rather makes him out a man of goodness and kindness of heart, that is hot upon his trail.

Fortune favours the swift, however, for a band of outlaws who have spied on the stage coach and who know him to be a good man at heart, decides to drop the charge and allow Swift to go free, thus bringing a pretty love affine between the hero and his sweetheart to a close.

SUGGESTIONS
When you book this picture your one best bet is to feature the story, which is taken from the life of the famous Captain Swift, who lived a good many years ago and whose life is well known to all. It would be a good idea to run teaser liners in your advertising such as: "Who was the famous Captain Swift?" and "Have you heard his life?" Do you know that he was one of the most successful men of his time? and: "Who was the famous Captain Swift?" and "Do you know that he was one of the most successful men of his time?"

You might mention that this is a new type of role for Earle Williams and that he makes the character of "Captain Swift," a likable one.

CATCH LINE
She had great faith in mankind and when romance beckoned she responded. What came of it? See "Locked Lips" with Tsuru Ajiki.

She had a high sense of honor and vowed to keep silent about her tragedy. Why? See Tsuru Ajiki (Mrs. Susse Hayakawa) in the appealing picture, "Locked Lips."
"RIO GRANDE"
(Carewe-Pathe)

Should Give Satisfaction Where Shown

This is Edwin Carewe's first production to be released under the Pathe banner, and we must say that he has made a picture which should interest any audience. The story is shown.
"The Rio Grande" is taken from the stage production of that name and was written by one of our greatest playwrights, Augustus Thomas, whose recent film, "The Copperhead," is only one of this remarkable author's contributions to entertainment. The success with which the author has been able to present the screen version of his work is an indication of the care and effort which have gone into the making of this film. The author, however, is not new, and when nothing is provided in the way of incident for constant scenes, a picture based on one becomes tedious. Even Miss Talmadge fails to make an impression, and indeed, for a cast as a model and artist who through gratitude is led to attempt the transformation of another artist who is well along on the down grade. Just how this is accomplished is not explained. She rescues the man from a "hop joint" and then a subtitle informs that he is regenerated.

Complications to the romance is provided by the jealous lover, who minks in every particular. The star appears in the role of Soledad, a model. She poses for her betrothed—well, that is another matter.

She follows him into the street of a Thousand Sorrows—to undergo an experience that tests the heart of a man. Miss Talmadge has courage and wins out her salvation. The dramatic intensity of her experiences keeps the spectator at the edge of his seat. The scenes in which T. O'Neil is shown and makes it ring with sincerity. To see Miss Talmadge in the part is to see acting at its highest development. She has captured one of the strongest vehicles of her career. Miss Talmadge has risen to such emotional heights that she demands photoplay of the best quality. "The Woman Gives" measures up to requiring the role provided for it. Miss Talmadge is supported by a cast which includes John Haliday, Edward Keeler, Lucile Stuart and John Owen Johnson.

PROGRAM READER
"The Woman Gives" is the title of the first National picture which comes to the Pathe theatre next week, starring Norma Talmadge. This story by Owen Johnson shows how supreme is regarded as the greatest truth of love, but which is apt to cause mischief if it is presented in too far a work. It is not easy to say that she takes full advantage of her strengths. Miss Talmadge is shown to be the most entertaining productions which has appeared at the Pathe house in a long time.

SUGGESTIONS
Of course the star is the best medium to exploit this feature and prominence should be given her in every way. She has a star quality and the picture will show her to advantage. Miss Talmadge is a woman of considerable heart appeal in the story. Use your circular letter here, announcing that Norma Talmadge is the star of the picture, and that the audience will be the next to see it. This is sufficient to attract the crowds.

CATCH LINES
Should be redeemed who is responsible for her success and tip the audience off to the fact that Miss Talmadge is taking advantage of her opportunity to show her public what she can do. After all, the public will be interested in the hard work that went into the making of this picture. Miss Talmadge has a chance to show her public what she can do.

Box Office Reports will appear next week, and thereafter every other week until the white paper stringency is abated.

SAW Maud straining and struggling, crushed in the embrace of Wolf Larsen's arms. I could see the vain beat and flutter of her as she strove to escape from him. I sprang forward—I struck him in the face—"

And in that moment—one of the greatest moments in all fiction—a man as proud as Lucifer was overthrown and a coward became a man.

This is only one of the big moments in Jack London's mighty story—a story that crashes against the emotions like the raging surf.

It's all in the picture—all the primitive conflict, the bared heart of life, the rush and clamor of the waves. A marvellous and spectacular production of a story that has thrilled millions.

When Grover Cleveland Acted For the Screen

SOUNDS amazing, doesn’t it? And interesting?

It happened in the first motion picture play ever made. It was in 1894. Cleveland gladly cooperated, and the scenes were taken in the White House.

Others appearing in it were William Courtenay and Blanche Bayliss.

This photoplay, just as it was made twenty-six years ago, is included in a recent issue of the Paramount Magazine! It’s crude—funny—and vastly interesting.

It is one of the many unusual features of the Paramount Magazine, the best one reel for any program.

Besides features of exceptional interest, every issue contains animated cartoons—the best on the market—and the cleverest epigrams in the world.

It’s not a filler, but a feature in itself!

THE BIG SPECIAL PRODUCTION by VITAGRAPH made from the great story by

The greatest living author of tales of romance and adventure in the frozen North.
It is a master story made into a masterly photoplay production with strong men and plucky women, half-breeds and wolf-dogs, mystery and breathless suspense.

With a cast of star players, headed by NILES WELCH and PAULINE STARKE.
Directed by——
DAVID SMITH.
Rosalie Ray was vaudeville's favorite. Rich men, poor men, young and old, fought for the garter she kicked to them off her shapely limb each night as she swung out over their heads. But Rosalie was disgusted with it all. Then she gave it up. In the small town where she sought to escape from the glare and glamour of the stage and the sordidness of its people she met her ideal young man. And with the meeting came happiness until—

She learned that he worshipped some secret memento—something he kept hidden from all eyes but his own—a memory of some bygone romance. Then one day, in an unguarded moment she saw it! It was—

That's the lure of this splendid picture and we won't spoil it for you—the smashing surprise climax that comes, unguessed at, unthought of to break the breathless spell of the story.

"As guaranteed a success as can be made. A story of Dixie always advertises well. It is clean, of a fast tempo and is one of those good reliable pictures that is bound to make your patrons feel at home."
—H. M. Thomas, Mgr., Rialto Theatre, Omaha, Neb.

"If you want to make a host of friends for your theatre play this one. You can't go wrong because it's THERE. It is really a big production with wonderful characterizations."

"One of the most finished productions I ever saw. Pleased my patrons in EVERY CITY."—Edward C. Beatty, General Manager, Butterfield Circuit, Michigan Theatres.

And read what the critics say:

"An all star cast is employed in 'The Family Honor,' a film drama of the American home. A finished presentation and very pleasing. Acting, photography and direction is of great merit."—Detroit Free Press.

"Plenitude of action. All the rugged thrills and ample vigor. Rich in atmosphere."—Los Angeles Times.

"A compelling drama, wholesome and with the sunshine of life. The human touches give the impression of the real, so natural, so simple that one is refreshed, revitalized."—Los Angeles Evening Herald.

"A fine play and a human element throughout that is pleasing. Excellent performance."—Los Angeles Evening Express.

Your Patrons Can Learn
Strand With Laughter"

Jack Eaton, manager of the great New York theatre, says the vast throngs simply shook with laughter—and the critics say nothing better has been seen in any sort of theatre. It will pay you to read the reviews:

NOTHING BETTER SEEN
"Nothing better of the sort has been seen in any sort of theatre in New York in some time. It gives Constance Talmadge plenty of chances for the display of her real gifts as a comedienne. The touch of the star is so deft that she lifts the whole piece to a very high plane. Her 'Babs' is, in fact, a real and delightful bit of character acting. Whoever made the play had an excellent idea of what was needed to bring out the fascinating qualities of Miss Talmadge. This actress shows very clearly what delicate effects can be got in the moving picture drama, without over emphasis and through the use of real intelligence."—New York Evening Telegram.

PACKED WITH FUN
"Packed with humorous situations and both the acting of Miss Talmadge and the titling of John Emerson and Anita Loos are up to the standard set by this capable team. The story allows the star a wide field for the exercise of her whimsy and temperament."—New York Tribune.

BIG LAUGHS AT STRAND
"Constance Talmadge was the cause of much amusement at the Strand theatre in 'The Love Expert.'"—New York Evening Post.

A RIOT OF FUN
"Runs riot with theories of romance—a romantic love research with diverting results."—New York Sun and Herald.

A CLEVER IDEA
"Entertaining, with a clever idea of pantomime in connection with novel lighting effects thrown in for good measure. As an expert in affairs of the heart, Miss Talmadge gives a very competent performance."—New York Evening Sun.

Our Articles of Faith

HERE follow those things for which the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. stands;—

The elimination of that easy originality achieved by cheap and bizarre mannerisms practiced by ignorant and untrained amateurs.

The substitution therefore of a finished artistry that makes of every poster handled a thing of exquisite beauty and a finished work of art.

The permeation of our posters with that spirit of sincerity that will attract, and appeal, and convince the great mass of the observing public.

The putting into a poster of the very essence of the photo-play,—and to so colorfully depict it,—and to so finely render it, as to make it seem like a jewelled condensation of the play itself. And to do these things in such a sure and realistic way that the observer will of necessity become unconsciously convinced.

These are the ideals that the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. strives for, and attains. Their sum total make our declaration of faith!

Thoughts at Random

That “25 Per Cent Stuff”

o you know," said an exhibitor to us the other day, "I didn't think much of that percentage argument of yours at first but now you are beginning to win me around.

That twenty-five per cent stuff sounds just right."

Others have said much the same thing in differing words since the appearance of our editorial, "The Problem of 1920."

Throughout the discussion on percentage we have tried heroically, almost painfully, to make our position clear. But until recently, it has seemed impossible to exhibitors that we could eventually state where percentage would be the rule with all the bigger productions without advocating the present percentage systems or any particular proposed method.

We are not even certain about "that twenty-five per cent stuff." For there will be more factors, and more important ones, than the "split" in the ultimate percentage plan. Exploitation, presentation, etc., must have their place.

But we are certain that discussion is the real need; that percentage cannot, ipse factum, be condemned and become taboo as an editorial and conversational discussion.

And insofar as we have aimed to conceive and develop that discussion we know we have carried out our duty as an industry’s trade journal.

Church and Theatre

The problem of competition between theatres and churches—as well as other semi-civic institutions—is gaining in importance. Our mail has shown it a popular topic; reports of exhibitors such as Harry Crandall, who have recently toured the country, confirm our impressions.

It is a subject that we are glad to see on the schedule of topics at the coming June convention of exhibitors in Cleveland.

We cannot blindly shut our eyes to the fact that logical developments are going to increase such competition, that it cannot be legislated out of existence.

But producers, if they are to show some semblance of foresight, must admit that in their hands remains the decision as to whether that quasi-public competition is to kill off the small town exhibitor,

Where a distributor books to a church at purely nominal sums pictures which offer a direct competition with his theatre customers in the same village he is using his left hand to dismember his right.

It is a problem with serious thought. The thousand dollar rental of the big fellows may "pay production costs" but we know of no distributor ready to give up smilingly his share of the "eighty per center's" dollars.

And on the other hand, the proper thought directed to the subject can retain the advantages the church offers to the screen both financially and in strengthening its moral position in the community.

Who Wants This Job?

New York’s exhibitors have succeeded in devising a bill curbing the advance deposit evil which has been passed by the Legislature and seems assured of Governor Smith’s signature.

We have two jobs open for ambitious promoters of legislation. Who wants to tackle Fate by erasing:

The salesman—and his manager—who sells you the picture at one price in the morning, jacks a higher price out of your competitor in the afternoon, and then cancels on you the following day.

Here’s a husky job. Where is a Samson?

EXHIBITORS CONVENE IN CHICAGO-

Plan for Cleveland Meet

Committee of Fifteen to Study the Question of Producer-Owned Theatres

Robertson-Cole Wires Willard C. Patterson

FULL, sincere outline of the aims, purpose and hopes of the Robertson-Cole Corporation is contained in the following wire, sent to Willard C. Patterson, at the Independent Exhibitors' Convention in Chicago.

The wire reads as follows:

"I desire to place on record the position of Robertson-Cole in this industry. Our company has been concerned with the sale of the railroad for the release of nothing but the biggest of special productions. Robertson-Cole is now committed to the independent exhibitors a product worthy of their support to continue to deliver bigger and better pictures. Our definite need policy is to remain independent of all entanglements, and we are absolutely against the acquisition of theatres. Robertson-Cole has no desire to enter the theatrical field. But we feel that with the quality of productions that we are offering we have the right to be represented in the theatre the astes everywhere, and if this right is absolutely denied us, we must, in justice to ourselves and to the public, take steps for the exhibition of our pictures everywhere proper audiences in all of the big centers of population. We feel that our productions merit recognition of this kind, and we are determined to have this recognition, but we earnestly hope that it can be accomplished without the acquisition of theatres. We are independent distributors and we desire to be business on an honesty of purpose basis, and we will never be satisfied until our productions, standing as they do on merit alone, are absolutely at the pinnacle in the motion picture industry, and if exhibitors appreciate our efforts in this direction we will feel justified in making whatever investments are necessary to insure success for all. If properly supported in our efforts we will go the limit in the acquisition of stars and productions of the highest standard of excellence. We are in the business of distributing motion pictures and we repeat we have no desire to trespass on the premises of the exhibitor unless we are forced to do so in justice to ourselves and to the public, who have the right to enjoy productions we are furnishing."

R. S. Cole.

First National Convention Brings Up Important Subjects

Sennett is Signed for Five Reelers and Present Officers are Re-elected

Universal Will Support Independent Exhibitor

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has definitely taken its stand on the side of the independent exhibitor. Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has even offered financial backing to the Independent Exhibitors' Association, now in convention in the Congress Hotel, Chicago.

Through his representatives, H. M. Berman and Harry Levey, of the Universal Company, Mr. Laemmle wholeheartedly assured the independents that they can count on Universal to take a leading stand in the fight for open bookings and the rights of the independent exhibitor.

Following the session at which the Universal offer was made, Frank Rembush, Chairman of the Independent Exhibitors' Association, announced the following telegram of thanks and acceptance to R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal:

"The convention of independent exhibitors, in session at Congress Hotel, today formed a permanent national association and greatly appreciate the offer of the Universal Film Mfg. Company for their clear-cut and straightforward statement made by your representatives, Berman and Levey, in furthering the line. We are informed that the enforced that the independent exhibitors shall cancel and refrain from buying service from any producer who has not declared the offer of the First National to be the effect that he will not buy or operate theatres in competition with the independent exhibitors."

First National Will Make "Twin Beds," Says Rumor

From Chicago comes news of a rumor that has gotten about to the effect that First National has closed contacts for "Twin Beds," to star Mrs. Carter De Haven. Also, according to the tales that emanate from the convention city, there is a possibility that Marshall Neilan will direct the picture. "Twin Beds," a feature, proved highly successful as a legitimate stage play on Broadway several seasons ago.

Exhibitors from Forty-Five States to Meet

Indications now point to at least forty-five states being represented at the convention in June in Cleveland of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. This statement was made here today by Sydney S. Cohen of New York, temporary president of coming National Convention, S. I. Berman, who was in Albany recently with Mr. Cohen, left last night for Chicago and on the present trip will arrange other details.

"The Cleveland Convention," said Mr. Cohen today, "will undoubtedly result in a nationwide organization concentrating its efforts at Washington for relief from the 5 per cent film tax. There will be formed in Cleveland a national organization that will be entirely uncontrolled and uninfluenced by any of the special representatives of film manufacturing companies and distributing agencies."

Arthur W. Blankmeyer Dies in Michigan

Arthur W. Blankmeyer, one of the pioneers of Michigan in the motion picture field, passed away suddenly on April 20th of heart disease. Funeral services were held in Toledo. Mr. Blankmeyer operated the General Display and Film Company and owned a half interest in the Gratiot theatre.

Distributing Company is Organized

A NEW national distributing organization to be known as "National Exchanges, Inc." has just been formed and is financed by the Johnson and Hopkins Company, 398 Fifth Avenue, New York City, Finance Construction, Capital Management.

Hunter Bennett, well-known to the industry at large as general sales manager for large distributing corporations, has been elected vice-president and general manager. Mr. Bennett until recently was a special representative for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. He was sales manager of the Mutual Film Corporation when that company was maintaining sixty-eight offices throughout the country. He also at one time was assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation.
Convention High Lights From Two Big Gatherings

By Robert E. Welsh.

TOOT! Toot! We're off! On board the good Pullman ship Schaeffer. It must have been named after Peter Schaeffer. Which should be enough for any exhibitor convention.

Let's see. We thought this was a First National Convention and an Independent Exhibitors Convention. And isn't that Universal, Berman and Harry Levy we are going down the aisle? Maybe we're mixed in our dates.

Gosh, we must be twisted. There goes Joe Brandt. But then, Joe has become a Chicago convention committee. Whenever no one else is holding a convention he organizes one himself in the Windy City.

Joe Larr comes in sight. Force of habit almost made us ask where Louis Mayer was. But Earl Hammons looked up behind the irrepressible Joe and we were saved the trip. Earl looks his usual trim self. Must be great to be born with that Beau Brummel instinct.

Feel a lot better. Yo, ho, boys! Sailing the seven seas to Chicago. The seven being named Straight, Flinch, Threes, a Pair, Fours, Openers and—Oh, I didn't have anything but I thought I might scare you out.

Someone just saw a wonderful cherry tree in bloom and everyone was looking out the window when Jimmie Grafton reported with a pat thumb King High. If some of Jimmie's remarks get into the next Neilian picture it will be a knock-out.

Well, there's some class in the party. Norma Talmadge is aboard the ship, along with Joe Schenck and Beulah Livingston. And yes, Constance is here, too.

Was that a parade that just passed? No, only L. J. and staff. Calm once more.

Harry Schwalbe and Mrs. Schwalbe are reported as having boarded ship at Philadelphia. Mysterious rumblings commence. Someone has previously discovered Mrs. Carter DeHaven and the whispers say "million dollar deal."

Mrs. DeHaven—Oh, yes, Flora Parker—leaves the train at Altoona and every First National man wears a mile-wide smile. We take it that the papers have been signed. The whispering increases in intensity. Sigh, here comes a trade paper man!

More arrivals to report. Mr. and Mrs. Tom Moore made the junction on the Washington train. Tom North is along.

Dave Howells is with us, which gives First National's gathering an international touch. One of the first to ordinary nearest to goodness time and then to Central time would give any watch the feeling of a ninety-day print.

Well, well! Earl Gullick is here. "No convention is complete without one."

More arrivals. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Meehan, Universal. We're glad to learn that William A. Johnston, following an operation for appendixitis, has rallied rapidly and is now on the high road to recovery.

Sitting opposite J. D. Williams at dinner. Every time that man talks First National to us he sells us up to the hilt. Just whispered some big news to us. Can't spring it yet. But maybe it will break before the week is over.

Well, if this isn't Chicago! What did we bother to buy a berth for? Le Mear H. Mason meets us with a Chicago welcome: Three cheers and a wink. The wink worked.

The Congress Hotel thinks a cyclone has struck it. If they have enough rooms to meet all the reservations that have been made they must have built another Annex last night.

Let's slip a word in here for Jane Stanford Johnson and the efficient way she is setting the tangle straight and making everybody happy.

Al Lichtman is on the job. He says this is just a hold-over from the Paramount convention. He's good enough salesman to sell us that idea if we give him half a chance.

Earl Hudson and Colvin Brown are two others waiting in Chicago to meet us. The place seems like home to these Elgin boys. They are even starting to apologize to us for the rain. That's native son stuff.

Gosh, that fellow Robert Lieber has a genial personality. Just see him there giving the boys the glad hand. First National uses the same judgment picking a president that it exercises choosing a star.

John Kunskey, Minneapolis Finkelstein, Al Blank and Moe Marks add to the exhibitor touch.

Save us, boys. The ship is sinking. There's Frank Rembush. It looks like the good old free-for-all exhibitor conventions.

Frank reports that he is just five weeks away from an attack of "flu." Doesn't look it. Looks in "the pink."

Cheering news. Don Barton has just told us what wonderful things Motion Picture News advertising is doing for Barton organ. We're willing to listen to that talk all day. But Barton has just been pulled away from us by Exhibitor Barton—the Akron, Ohio, live wire—who wants to talk business on his next new house. Yes, he saw the ad in the News.

Fred Quimby has arrived. We're not sure whether to change the name of the hotel to Alexandria or Astor. One by one they are arriving. Wonder if there is anybody left back in New York.

Lieutenant Jim Anderson is boasting to everyone that his picture broke on the front pages of all the Chicago papers. The first press agent coup we have heard about. Bought a paper and read the heading: "U. S. Asked to Take Over Armenia."

Wonder if the Allies will insist on Uncle Sam taking over the Lieutenant too? Aurora Mard-rid-spell it yourself—mighty term this another Armenian atrocity.

Who's this Mysterious Stranger buzzing around the lobby? Why, Fred Warren, as I live. Must have something interesting to say the way his listeners brighten up.

Just heard the Warren news myself. Big? I should say a mouthful. Guess the story will break from New York so we won't bother with it here.

Fred Beecroft wants to know what it's all about. He's getting tired of having the question popped at him. Ninety-nine producers are here and up till ten Pithy ‘Close-ups’ of Industry’s Great and Near Great

From the Vantage Point of a Lone Scribe in a Sea of Exhibitors

1920 o’clock Tuesday morning ninety-eight have asked us, “Just what is this exhibitors’ convention aiming at?”

Search us! You’re welcome. Try the hip pocket, too.

A. H. Sawyer has arrived. And with him the news that a telegram from Ira Lubin declares that five producers in New York have already shown interest in his new proposition advertised exclusively in last week’s News. We’ll say we’re feeling good.

The Sawyer and Lubin boys certainly have a good idea. “The story’s the thing,” and for the first time on record two real all-wool picture men are going to tackle the story and play proposition for the best interests of producers and authors.

Have just met St. Grieve and Lee Herz. Likeable chaps, and they certainly know the independent field and this territory.

All these Chicago boys give us a good word for L. H. Mason, who handles the fate of the News in this belt. Must be great to be boosted that way. Go to it, Lee.

Tuesday morning and Ralph Proctor has just arrived. Two of the Three Musketeers are now here. But neither Fred Quimby nor Ralph can explain Jack Woody’s absence.

This trip gave us our first real chance to get acquainted with J. C. Ragland, who is representing Arthur Kane and Charles Ray’s interests. Clean cut, regular sort of chap that you’d expect to find hanging his hat on the same rack with Arthur Kane and Charles Ray.

Sol Lessey made the hit of the convention with his ‘daily newspaper extra.’ Harry Beal succeeded in covering the news and giving attention to Annette Kellerman in impartial and clever manner.

Tuesday afternoon and all is well. Charlie Pettijohn has just invited us into the camp of the friendly enemies. We beg to report surrender without a struggle.

Someone reports an enforcement officer snooping around the rooms this morning and jotting down the names of the possessors of empty bottles. If they were empty before we’d bet they were a vacuum when he got through.

Joe Lee must have put something over. He can wear that smile and fool you. A birdie has just flown in from the Alley with the tip to watch Chicago’s Saturday and Sunday papers. We knew it.

Now we know it is Chicago. Just spoke to Watertown Rothacker. The keys of the city have been given us. “Watt” doesn’t expect to see them himself for some time with plans for his big English laboratory buzzing around.

Speaking of one regular fellow reminds us—here is Jimmie Quirk. “Photoplay” owns the Congress newspaper display space but we can’t find Jimmie Quirk.

Bill Huffman has been here for a week and we haven’t heard him mention engraving once.

Just shook the Congress long enough to learn why Capital is now getting solidly on the map. The same information being given us through the simple act of meeting J. Herbert Milligan. A man who sits in front of the big desk with all the air of knowing what he is doing and how to do it.

We knew that New York liked Fred Warren, but we didn’t imagine any sales manager could be as popular with exhibitors as we find Fred Warren to be since the Associated News began buzzing around. There’s something radically right when you find the customer liking the seller.

Harry Sherman has been holding court for the two days with appreciative audiences. Harry has a simple gospel. “Let’s make pictures,” he says, “and stop making speeches.”

Emanuel Mandelbaum, the original sub-franchise man, has an “I told you so” smile. We don’t blame him.

J. D. Williams’ speech to the exhibitors seems to have made some hit—judging from remarks. J. D. talked cold turkey, hardening back to the old days to tell what unified exhibitor action made General Film do when Lubin tried to buy theatres, and being frank enough to say that even should a sub-franchise holder need protection from a First National member he’ll get it.

Ernie Shipman leaves us on Wednesday for the Canadian country to work on a Ralph Connor story. A little item like a stampede of ‘steen thousand buffalo is one of the tasks that faces Ernie. We didn’t know there were so many left. Ernie must have been holding them out all these years waiting for the picture.

H. M. Thomas and “Jazz Band” Holland have voted the convention a success—albeit seconded by H. W. West, of Piqua, “Doo” Burbud, Eltinge Warner, Joe Lee, Fred Warren and Yours Truly.

First time we’ve had the good luck to meet Bier Warner. Have to see more of this boy in New York.

Mrs. Sydney Drew and John Chamberlain have reported at the city gate preparatory to starting work at the Essanay plant.

Which reminds us that George Spoo whispered to us, ‘Have you heard?’ He only takes four lines to say it here, but there’s a tip that it will take as many pages to back it up in the near future. We’ll say so. And repeat it.

Harry Scott tells us a new Ringling story every time we meet him, and he hasn’t repeated on himself yet. We’re beginning to suspect him. Aaron Hoffman must be supplying him with new material weekly.

Lot Blumenthal is enjoying his first convention in years. No expense accounts to O. K., but his own.

That must be Billy Brandt who’s paging Lee Ochis just now. Billy seems to be having a good time, but we are beginning to believe that he was born with that smile. It’s good to look at.

Harry Rice just appeared with a shame-faced look. Harry confesses that after all these years of publicity crime he pulled his first pure “Hokum” stunt last week. Yes, it stole The Examiner for “The Virgin of Sambour.”

Well, it’s all over. The boys are scattering East, West, North and South. Back to lil old New York—with pleasant memories. Quite a convention. Yes, we are a little tired—and poorer—but we surely met a bunch of real fellows this time.
"Big Six" Organizes Distributing Company for Product

Oscar A. Price named President; F. B. Warren, General Manager

It has been officially announced that the Associated Producers, Inc., have organized their own distributing company to handle the pictures that will be made by the prominent directors that allied themselves about two months ago under the corporate title of the Associated Producers. By virtue of this newly organized distributing company, the Associated Producers will be enabled to deal directly with American exhibitors instead of through a sales organization controlled by other interests. Oscar A. Price has been made president of the distributing company, and F. B. Warren has been appointed general manager.

Contracts pertaining to the new organization were signed last week by Thomas H. Ince, Mark Sennett, Marshall Neilan, Allen Dwan, George Loane Tucker and Maurice Tourneur. All these directors will complete their contracts at present in force with other organizations, it is stated, and at least two more prominent directors will join the Associated Producers.

The following statement has been issued by the Associated Producers, Inc., regarding their distribution plans:

"The Associated Producers, Inc., distribution will not utilize the facilities of any other organization. It will own and operate its own newly opened exchanges in all the important sales zones of the country, completely manned and managed by its own exclusive employees. Production plans of the members of the Associated Producers, Inc., are well developed and their new organization will be actively releasing their first powerful productions at the opening of the next motion-picture year."

"Both Oscar A. Price and F. B. Warren, operating executives of this new distribution are men trained in other business outside of the motion picture industry. They are both characteristically independent and have always shown little or no regard for film industry precedents, being organizers of wide experience and with the mental independence of the newspaper publishing profession from which they were recruited into pictures. Mr. Price has been active in editorial and political circles for many years and served his government throughout the World War as Wm. C. McAdoo's strong right arm in the Railroad Administration. Mr. Price has been president of the United Artists' Corporation from the date of its formation a year ago, retiring two weeks ago for this expansion of his activities in the motion picture industry.

"Mr. Warren was one of the founders of the Goldwyn organization in association Samuel Goldwyn, and Edgar and Archibald Selwyn. He was vice-president and a director of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation from the day of its formation, with control over sales. For a year, following his retirement in 1919, he was vice-president in charge of sales of the Hodkinson organization from which he retired ten days ago for his new alliance with the Associated Producers, Inc."

Hallmark Takes Over Triangle Exchanges

Frank Hall: Closes Deal Acquiring Big System of Exchanges and Many Pictures

Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark, and Percy F. Waters, president of Triangle, have just closed another big deal which is of mutual interest to the industry, as it not only involves the taking over of a complete distributing organization with eighteen branches, but also includes control of many big productions of some of the screen's famous stars.

Mr. Hall has acquired for Hallmark Pictures Corporation the complete system of Triangle Exchanges from the Triangle Distributing Corporation and also control of the pictures of Triangle Film Corporation which gives Hallmark exchanges in Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Denver, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, Seattle, Detroit, Salt Lake City, Washington, New Haven and Milwaukee, all of which have been handling the physical distribution of Hallmark pictures for some time.

This move by Frank Hall is said to be the opening gun of an offensive campaign to place Hallmark at the very top of the list of independent producers and distributors. Preparations for large expansion have been going on quietly for several months and with the announcement of the closing of the Hall-Waters deal comes the news of four special pictures completed and ready for immediate release with eight more to follow at short intervals; two of which are already in preparation.

The finished specials are: "The Discarded Woman" and "For Love Or Money," both Burton King productions; and "Should a Wife Work?" and "What Children Will Do," staged by Horace Plimpton. "The Common Sin," another Burton King production is in preparation as is also a new Plimpton production, the title of which has not been decided upon.

The former Triangle distributing organization, now Hallmark, will be kept intact and the personnel of each office will remain the same with George N. Montgomery, general sales manager for Hallmark, in charge. Mr. Montgomery recently completed an extended trip which took in all of the branches and was greatly pleased with the marked spirit of co-operation he found, a spirit which is very much in keeping with Frank Hall's ideas. The productions controlled by Hallmark through the purchase include some of the pictures of many of the screen's biggest stars and by the world's foremost directors. Frank Keenan, William S. Hart, Douglas Fairbanks and Norma Talmadge are among the most prominent stars in the Triangle Film Corporation's list which contains nine Keenan pictures, thirteen Fairbanks pictures, seven Talmadge pictures in addition to sixteen elaborate Keystone comedies and other interesting productions.

Midnight Picture Show for Newspapermen

On the occasion of the convening of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association in New York this week a monster "midnight matinee" was given on last Wednesday evening, April 21st, at the Rivoli by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc. An entertaining program was presented, including special and timely topical features designed to be of particular interest to the newspapermen invited. The arrangements for the evening's performance were conducted by a committee of the advertisers under the chairmanship of Paul Gulick, who is also president of the A. M. P. A.
Carl Laemmle Buys Out Interests of P. A. Powers in Universal

President Now has Practical Control; Powers Resigns as Treasurer Too

P. A. POWERS has sold out his interests in the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to its president, Carl Laemmle, and has resigned as the treasurer of that organization. This transaction and the resultant readjustment of Universal's holdings several days ago has been made the occasion of the publication of a lengthy statement by President Laemmle. The statement as submitted, follows:

"In buying out Mr. P. A. Powers' interest in the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, I have achieved the ambition of my life. I organized the Universal company eight years ago and it was always my ambition to have complete control of the company. I have only consented to sell out to me. The deal was consummated in all friendliness and without regard for the mutual interests of both of us. Although he no longer is connected with Universal, he has my good will and I have his.

"Universal has had its ups and downs, but today it is stronger than ever before, and with a promise for the future which gives me the confidence to go to every possible extreme to make Universal greater.

"It has been a hard struggle most of the time, building Universal. I wouldn't go through it again for all the money in the United States. We have taken the smallest; but likewise the surest, way of building it into a tower of strength. Our basis has been—fair treatment of exhibitors plus fair treatment of competitors. I do not believe that there is an exhibitor in the world who denies that the Universal has tried to right every wrong in the business, and I know that no producing company can honestly accuse us of any of the tricks that have been a blight on the industry.

"It looks like fair weather for Universal from now on. In the past year there has been a marvelous improvement in the quality of Universal pictures. We are prepared to show a more astonishing improvement this year and in the years to come. Never in the history of the company have we been in such excellent shape to produce and market the kind of pictures the public seems to like best. Already, we have on hand for next fall a huge supply of the very best productions the trade has ever known.

"I know whereof I speak. Our latest successes, 'The Virgin of Stamboul' is proving itself one of the most popular pictures of the year. It is a huge money-maker for us and for exhibitors. And it is only the beginning of a succession of master productions, many of which are already completed, which we will release in the near future.

"'The Devil's Pass Key,' Erich von Stroheim's latest Jewell production, will cause a sensation in the film world. It makes you think you're set right down in Paris, so realistic is the Parisian atmosphere. We have five of these big pictures ready now, including 'The Virgin of Stamboul' and 'The Devil's Pass Key.' The others are 'Ambition,' with Dorothy Phillips; 'The Death of the Gods,' with Tsuru Aoki, and 'The Beach Comber,' with Elmo Lincoln.

"For its special pictures, to be released approximately every week, beginning next July, Universal has selected six popular stars, each star to make a series of eight pictures during the ensuing year. This plan has already met with hearty commendation on the part of exhibitors. It will assure them a steady output of excellent pictures starring players of first rate ability and prestige.

"In the serial field Universal is far ahead of its competitors. Our five great 1920 serials are taking like hot-cakes. 'The Lion Man,' 'Elmo the Fearless,' 'The Moon Riders,' 'The Vanishing Digger' and 'The Dragon's Net,' taken either individually or together, form a distinct stride in chaptered photo-drama. That is because Universal has put unlimited care and money into their production. Two of them are the results of foreign expeditions, one to Europe and the other to Asia, so that the proper settings and foreign atmosphere for these various episodes might be absolutely correct.

"Universal is breaking new paths in other directions. Two exploring expeditions are now in the hearts of Africa and Borneo, getting pictures never before shown on the screen, pictures of native life, of the scene wonders, and of the strange animals of those two untraveled sections of the world.

"Other new and recent ventures by Universal include the turning out of high-class five-reel comedies based on farcical stories by popular writers, a new brand of high-class two-reel comedies, and a weekly novelty reel of strange and curious things in nature and in the works of mankind.

"Universal is rapidly expanding its great sales and distribution force. An expedition has been made to Australia to set up the first Universal branch in that country.

"I believe these and other awakenings of activity I see have made an Universal give me great hopes for the future. The more I make comparisons between the methods the Universal has used to arrive at its present position of prosperity and popularity and the various methods others have employed, the more I realize that any man or company which bases its efforts on high principles is bound to come out on top.

"Keep your eye on Universal. We've just begun to fight."

Indiana Exhibitors Form Production Concern

FORMATION of the United Exhibitors Productions Corporation, organization of which was revealed a few weeks ago when articles of incorporation were filed in Indianapolis, constitutes a protest of a league of Indiana exhibitors against what they consider to be exorbitant prices of producers, directors said this week. The leaders declined to divulge the names of the theatres which are to be included in the circuit, but stated that it is their intention to book co-operatively and eventually form their own producing company in California.

The organization is incorporated with $1,000,000 capital. Original incorporators are Robert W. McClaskey, G. L. Pugh and Frank Fitzgibbon, of Indianapolis; Merrill Moore, of Kokomo, and Herbert Williams, of Los Angeles, California. Headquarters of the corporation for the time being will be located in Indianapolis.

Musicians' Demands May Boost Admission Rates

Admission prices in nine large motion picture houses and theatres of St. Louis will be increased, beginning next season, if the demands presented by union musicians employed by members of the Theatre Managers' Association of St. Louis, amounting to an increase in salaries of forty per cent, are granted. This statement was made last night by E. J. Sullivan, manager of the St. Louis Orpheum and chairman of the managers' association.

At a conference of musicians and managers of the Shubert-Jefferson, Orpheum, Grand Opera House, Loew's Garick, Empress, Gayety, Standard, Rialto, and Columbia held recently, the union musicians presented their demands for increased salaries. The managers offered to concede to an increase of fifteen per cent in salaries, but the union refused to accept this, Mr. Sullivan said.
Schulberg Heads Distributing Company
Corporation Distributing Katherine MacDonald
Pictures Plans Wider Field of Activities

B. P. SCHULBERG, one of the oldest executives, in point of service, in the motion picture industry, has acquired an interest in and been elected president of the Attractions Distributing Corporation, which releases the Katherine MacDonald productions through the First National Exhibitors Circuit. B. P. Em-man, who has been president of Attracstions since its inception a year ago, becomes vice-president and will remain in Los Angeles to cooperate with Sam L.

Rork, president of the Katherine Mac-

Donald Pictures Corporation, on the productions of this star and others whom Attractions plans soon to present on the screen. Mr. Schulberg's headquarters will be in New York, and he will move the offices of Attraction Distributing Corporation to those he has occupied for some time in the Longacre Bldg.

The assumption of this office restores to activity in American film circles one who has steadfastly endeavored to advance the standards both of production and distribution. For the past year, since leaving Famous Players-Lasky and the United Artists Corporation, after aiding T. Irabams in its formation, Mr. Schulberg has been identified with the export end of the business, through an affiliation with one of the largest distributing concerns of Europe, who entrusted him with the purchase, to the extent of many hundreds of thousands of dollars, of American film product. This association supplemented a film education dating back over twelve years, a period during which Mr. Schul-berg has been identified with every progressive development of the industry, and seven years of which were served with Famous Players-Lasky, starting with Adolph Zukor's formation of the Famous

Players Film Co., in 1912, and culminating as General Manager of the combined Paramount and Artcraft.

Under the new regime, Attractions Distributing intends to offer specialized representation to stars, directors and other factors in the business, besides producing big special features from time to time.

In a statement regarding the new plans of the company, Mr. Schulberg said:

"Although I have thought so for a long time, I have never felt with more conviction that the time has come when individual initiative and original thought and action are at last to bring their fullest reward in the film industry. Whether in the case of star, director, or sales or exploitation executive, the independent worker in the industry who really serves the screen by conscientious effort and serious purpose can accomplish more than was ever before possible because the industry has fortunately reached that stage where personal and specialized methods of production or exploitation transcend in value and in effect all the machinery of unwieldy organizations lacking the same degree of personal inspiration and zeal, without which all creative art is futile.

"The big successes of the screen have emanated from this spirit and from these independent sources, and from them will spring the future masterpieces of the screen.

"It is our purpose to maintain such a policy as will enable us to bring the most readily and with the least hardship to the open market all such pictures as we may be selected to sell or exploit, and to bring to independent producers and distributors all stars and directors who wish to establish independent units of production."

Legislature Passes Motion Picture Laws
Session Ends in New York with Passage of Three Statutes, Including Cotillo Bill

THREE years of legislative effort, tried and rejected, went to naught

when the New York State Legislature came to a close at 2 o'clock on the morning of April 25th with the passage of three bills of interest to the motion picture industry, the Cotillo deposit bill, the Kelly guardianship bill and the waiver bill to protect the exhibitor from any effect on the part of the manufacturer towards circumventing the provisions of the Cotillo measure.

The three bills are now in the hands of Governor Smith for action during the next thirty days.

Three bills to which the New York State

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League offered strenuous opposition, died by remaining in committee, these being the Hunter bill, seeking to repeal the present law under which motion picture theatres are operating in this State on Sundays, the Davenport bill, raising the age of admission to theatres, from 16 to 18 years, and the Flynn bill which sought to force upon the exhibitor the necessity of employing in addition to the regular operator, an apprentice.

In passing the three bills and blocking the others, the New York State Exhibitors' League secured what might be termed a 100 per cent victory, for every bill they supported was passed and on the other hand every bill opposed was downed.

The victory belongs to Sydney S. Cohen, president of the League; S. L. Berman,

Charles L. O'Reilly and Irvin Salyers, who not only spent the entire week here but remained through the session, which lasted until 6 o'clock in the morning, returning at 11 o'clock and sticking to their pillots until 2 o'clock the following morning, when the session ended.

The chief interest, of course, centered around the Cotillo bill, the opposition coming from the manufacturers, who sent telegram after telegram to the ses-sors and assemblymen in the vain hope of keeping the bill in committee. The bill passed both houses, however, and it is understood, stands a fair chance in being signed by the Governor. The bill prevents the use of money exacted on film contracts for deposit by manufacturers or producers, in the producing of films or in other ways carrying on his business.

In a motion picture way, this session of the New York Legislature has been a most interesting one. Almost at the start

Assemblyman Hunter introduced a bill seeking to close all motion picture theatres in the State on Sunday. The League took up the cudgels and as a result when the session closed last night the bill was still in the Assembly rules committee. The Flynn bill, pertaining to operators, was also held in committee. The Davenport bill met a like fate.

The Kelly bill, which really defines what constitutes a guardian in accompanying children under 16 years of age to the motion picture theatre, had rather a hard time of it in the Assembly. In fact, the bill was defeated Friday night by a vote of 76 to 50 after a thirty-minute discussion. It was apparent that many of the Assemblymen did not fully understand the meaning and intent of the bill. Efforts to bring about its reconsideration and vote were successful and at 9 o'clock last night the bill was passed by a vote of 130 to 12 and went to the Governor.

According to word which came from the Executive Chamber last Monday, there is a probability that Governor Smith, desirous of becoming better acquainted, not only with the Cotillo bill but with the other measures for a hearing during the next thirty days, at which time both sides will be heard. There has been so much opposition on the part of manufacturers and producers to the Cotillo bill that it is said, the Governor, wishing to be fair and square to each side, wishes to learn the merits first hand.

Fox International Convention to Open May 24th

Branch Managers from Foreign and local Offices Will Meet in New York

A n announcement from Fox Film Corporation heralds the sixth annual convention of the Fox sales forces, which will be held at the Commodore Hotel, New York City, and will bring together the Fox branch managers, district superintendents, special representatives and sales heads from every Fox office in the world. It will be held from May 24th to 29th.

Herman Robbins, general sales manager of Fox Film Corporation, has sent out a call to all branch offices of the firm—including all foreign exchanges of the organization, which now encircles the earth. Representatives of the firm will come from all the principal cities of the United States and from the various branches located in the Dominion of Canada. London, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle, Glasgow, Cardiff, Leeds, Birmingham and Dublin will furnish the quota of Fox officials from Great Britain. The Australasian field will send managers from Sydney, Melbourne, Brisbane, Adelaide and Wellington, New Zealand, and the South American field will contribute its share from the Fox exchanges in Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo, Buenos Aires, Rosario, Montevideo and Lima.

Fox Film Corporation for some time has maintained offices in France at Paris, Marseilles, Strassbourg, Lyons, Lille and Bordeaux. Additional branches have recently been established in Treves, Nancy and Toulouse. The managers of these new branches are not expected to attend the convention, in view of the fact that these are subdivisions of the territory covered by the Paris branch.

The other Fox foreign branches which will be represented include the Brussels office in Belgium, the Amsterdam branch in Holland and the Italian exchanges in Rome and Turin.

William Fox, one of the pioneers among film producers to gather together in convention the heads of his exchanges, brings his sales force together this year for the most important business meeting in the history of the corporation. Six years ago William Fox issued a nation-wide call to his managers which is said to have marked the beginning of sales conventions in the film industry.

Winfred R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, who is in Europe, will return in time to take charge of the convention, as he did in the past. According to the most recent advices from Mr. Sheehan, he will be in the United States about the middle of May to perfect plans for the meeting and the subjects which are to come up for discussion.

Mr. Sheehan, upon his return, will be thoroughly equipped for an exhaustive conference with Mr. Fox regarding the results of his tour and the conditions of the foreign market with relation to Fox Films. Thus far, the reports received from him have been most encouraging.

William Fox himself will open the convention, and will outline to his sales organization the policy to be adopted by the corporation for the ensuing year as regards the distribution of Fox Specials, Sunshine Comedies, Mutt and Jeff, Animated Cartoons and other Fox entertainment. It is expected that the plans to be laid before the salesmen will show a notable development in the entire system from both the producing and distributing view points.

Those who will attend the convention from various sections of the United States and Canada are listed below and will represent thirty-five or more branches of the Fox organization in this country, and at least a half dozen in the Dominion of Canada.

District superintendents with headquarters are as follows: Harry E. Campbell, Boston; Clayton B. Sheehan, Buffalo; George Allison, Atlanta; E. H. Wachter, Kansas City; Howard J. Sheehan, Los Angeles; Vincent J. McCabe, Toronto.

Dominion branch managers: Maurice West, Montreal; L. M. Devaney, Toronto; Jos. Lieberman, St. John, N. B.; R. A. Scott, Vancouver; William Spencer Jones, Winnipeg; Mitchell Rose, Calgary.

United States branch managers: George Allison, Atlanta; H. E. Campbell, Boston; M. H. Greenwald, Buffalo; C. W. Eckhardt, Chicago; Rudolph Knoepfle, Cincinnati; William Shapiro, Cleveland; L. E. Harrington, Dallas; Joseph Kalbki, Denver; W. C. Barnes, Detroit; C. E. Pecky, Indianapolis; E. H. Wachter, Kansas City; B. E. Loop, Los Angeles; M. J. Weisfeld, Minneapolis; B. L. Dudenhofer, New Orleans; Sidney Meyer.

President Townshend, Commander of the British forces in Asia Minor, was the guest of honor, and occupied a box with Daniel Frohman, upon whose personal invitation he was present. Other boxes were occupied by prominent film magnates.

Ascher Bros. Acquire Big Theatre in Milwaukee

Ascher Brothers of Chicago, through Nathan Ascher, have acquired the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, one of that city's leading downtown houses, and expects to take it over on May 1st. No immediate change in policy of operating the Merrill is contemplated, according to Mr. Ascher, as the theatre already is one of the most successful in the Middle West.

The Ascher Brothers already control many of the biggest houses in Chicago and are building large theatres in several other important cities of the Central West.

No United Artists Head Named by Directors

No president was elected by the directors of United Artists Corporation at their recent meeting to succeed Oscar A. Price, who resigned as head of the company. Dennis F. O'Brien, attorney for Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, was elected vice-president, and it is expected that the president will be chosen at some future meeting, the date of which is undecided.

Graman Denies Rumor of Friction

In a telegram from Los Angeles on April 29, Sid Grauman made unqualified denial of rumors he said had spread to the effect that there were strained relations existing between himself and Famous Players-Lasky.

Many New Companies in New York State

A unusually large number of concerns were incorporated during the past week or ten days in New York State for the purpose of embarking in the motion picture business. The list includes the Independent Movie Supply Co., $250,000; William H. Rebell, C. F. Reibel and James J. Wilkinson, New York; the Ultimate Productions, Inc., $200,000; Harry Rosenberg, Nan Esterman and Almon C. Kellogg, New York; Kellerste Films, Inc., $100,000; James A. Rafferty, John J. Rooney and Robert D. Ireland, New York; Wilpak Amusement Company, $50,000; J. Victor Wilson of Brooklyn and Olav K. Pacic and Emile E. Larkin of New York City; Brunswick Film Corporation, $100,000; James Currie, Jr., H. F. Parmalee and Edward L. Parker, New York; Sunner Charles Britton, Inc., $100,000; Orpha Emily and William A. Britton and Julius Goldsmith of New York; New York Exchange for Educational Film, $100,000; Earl W. Hammond, George A. Stimmer and Harry G. Kosch of New York; Cimex Film Corporation, $9,000; Morris E. Velbergh, Jacob H. Feigenwald and Aaron H. Schwarz, New York; the Civic Theatre, $100,000; Florence Lipnicken, David K. Shaprio, Harry Wolfe, New York; New York Film Exchange of America, $50,000; Louis J. Rosset, Henry Margoshes and Nancy Katz, New York; Ward & Glynne, James H. Ward, Michael Glynne, Joseph F. dailies gave a great deal of space to the next morning to reporting the first impressions which they have been able to obtain of the coming heavyweight contender. And Carpentier, although the studio lights did not allow him to forget that he was only "play-acting," gave the fight fans plenty of thrills and the sporting editors enough material to judge his ability. His reputed fast footwork was very much in evidence and in the knock-out picture, he evinced an honest-to-goodness right-hand cross that laid Barrett out on the mat in a realistic manner.

Of course M. Georges pulled his punches a bit. Barrett after all was only a movie actor, and was not there to be knocked entirely dead. But in the final scene in was a "no-fooling" punch that made the actor take the count. Snuffling sallies were necessary to bring him back, and it was not in the picture either.

Carpentier proved also that Robertson Cole has also acquired an actor as well as a fighter. In the third round he fended grogginess. He made for the wrong corner and then staggered to his haven of rest. It was a pretty bit of acting, and the cameraman ground feverishly, while Director Adolli bawled forth instructions.

Mrs. Carpentier sat in the gallery and applauded her Georges. As the scene in the film called for men only as extras, Mrs. Carpentier will be obliged to wait for another opportunity to get closer to the camera.

Doyle & Winans have opened the Majestic theatre, which formerly was a vaudeville house, as a high-class moving picture theatre. "Male & Female" is the current program, and is shown as the premier feature and Messrs. Doyle and Winans' policy will be to show super specials exclusively. Publicity Director Peter Color, famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Chicago office, went to Peoria to take charge of the exploitation in connection with the showing of "Male & Female," and found himself confronted with a paper shortage which prevented him from getting newspaper advertising space.

The Redleaf Exchanges located at Chicago, Indianapolis and Milwaukee are now releasing the Helen Gibson mystery, "The Window of Death," by the Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. Manager Harthill reports that they are going strong.

Manager Jack Graumont of Meto's Chicago Exchange has returned from a trip to Coral Gables and jumped into one of the busiest booking seasons ever experienced at the Metro exchange.

R. T. Smith, formerly manager of the Triangle Chicago office and later sales manager of United's Chicago exchange is now associated with Superior Screen Service, the distribution firm recently organized by Harry Weiss.

Among the Illinois exhibitors seen around Chicago exchanges this week were Pete Wales, who runs a string of houses in Lanark, Illinois; Martin Aiken, owner of the Aiken towns; D. S. Smith of the Opera House, Hoopetown, Ill., and W. H. Cadon of La Petite theatre, Kankakee.

J. M. Jacobs of the First National, Indianapolis, Ind., was in Chicago last week on business connected with the new office of F. S. Cubberly of the Minneapolis office of First National also was a Chicago visitor and spent Sunday with Harry Weiss, leaving Monday for New York where he expected to remain for a week.

The engagement of "Sex" at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, was marked by an exploitation campaign that left nothing undone to make the picture a success. Among the exploitation stunts employed was the placing of large oil paintings of Miss Glaum mounted in expensive frames in the leading hotels of Los Angeles and in the lobby of the theatre.

A colorful prologue, accompanying the picture, was arranged by Producer Read and Manager Calicott of the Kinema theatre. A reproduction on the stage of the famous "Spider Dance" which was one of the sensations of the picture was used as the prologue. The original "Spider gown" worn by Miss Glaum in "Sex" and which has been displayed in nearly all the newspaper rotogravure sections in the country was worn by a Denishawn dancer in the prologue.

The results of the entire exploitation campaign were registered at the Kinema Box Office in a way that pleased both the producer and the Kinema Management.

Newspaper Prints Story of Feature for Pittsburgh Exhibitors

WHAT is declared to be one of the most unique and enterprising bits of exploitation ever accomplished in Pennsylvania has been recently brought to a close with gratifying success for the Pittsburgh Sun and the Rowland and Clark theatres.

The genuine and definite box office results which Samuel Switz, director of advertising for the Rowland and Clark houses, obtained for "A Daughter of Two Worlds," is important and interesting in its possibilities for other exhibitors.

The arrangement worked out harmoniously both for the newspaper and for the theatre interests and to such an extent that an explanation of this promotion is justified in view of the fact that its very plausibility makes it extremely desirable for other exhibitors to undertake.

Several weeks before "The Daughter of Two Worlds" was scheduled for release in Pittsburgh, the Sun, approached by Mr. Switz, agreed to print a four-page section carrying ten chapters of "The Daughter of Two Worlds." This section was amply illustrated with scenes from Miss Tallmadge's production. The ten chapters and the special edition were brought forth on a Sunday, calling attention to the fact that the screen version of the story would soon be ready for release and asking those who read the special ten chapter installment to begin following the remaining chapters as they would appear in the Pittsburgh Sun beginning the Monday thereafter.

Hy Mayer's Travelaugh Worth Showing

THE Capitol theatre is showing a hitherto made especially for this theatre under the title of "Hy Mayer's Capitol Travelaugh" which brings so much merit that it seems a shame that it is not released for showing in other theatres.

The offering on the bill this week is titled "Such Is Life in The Great Melting Pot." It is the best thing of its kind we ever saw, when the novelty of the idea, the combination of the cartoon and current events number is considered.

Enterprise managers in other cities who are on the lookout for short stuff which is different will do well to inquire of the Capitol management if these reels could not be secured for showing in their houses.

This special edition was printed in a lot of 100,000 and distributed by the Pittsburgh First National Exchange. The natural advantage to the Sun was the fact that in the edition of 100,000 many people readers of the Sun, would be reached. The number allotted to Pittsburgh was 30,000 of which 15,000 were distributed among the Grand and Liberty theatres. The balance of 70,000 was distributed in towns in Western Pennsylvania.

On the Monday following the ten chapter installment, the Sun, true to promise, carried the next chapter of the story of "The Daughter of Two Worlds." And just at the time the concluding chapters of the story were being published the picture was ready for release.

New Angle For Exploiting "Pollyanna"

H. T. Moore Makes Some Observations on the Psychology of Exploitation

"THE psychology of the exploitation of a big feature is to follow in its every degree the spirit of the production, not only in the dress of your house, your bill-board, your newspaper advertising and publicity, but also in the dress and actions of your ushers and attendants.

That's the final analysis of the exploiting of big features, according to H. T. Moore, General Manager for Jensen-Von Herberg's Colonial theatre, of Tacoma, Wash., who has given the subject considerable study during the past few years, since exploitation has become one of the paramount requirements in the successful management of the theatre he has had under his supervision.

"The 'keeping in the spirit' idea was excellently exemplified recently when we presented 'Pollyanna,' in which production the spirit is that of being glad. No one can exploit gladness unless they themselves are glad, and it was this fact that I impressed upon each and every member of our theatre staff during the staff meetings that are regularly held every few days prior to the opening of a new production.

"It was pointed out to them that all around us were people sorely in need of the glad girl's medicine, for there were in our very community the prim and crabbit and loveless people who needed the glad heart to bring to the fore a heart fully as glad and loving, the lengths who need the persistent rays of affection's sunshine for the layers of ice about their hearts to melt away; the jealous and hopeless invalids, who need but the sunny eye and heart about them to reopen their own eyes and hearts to the sunshine of life; and in pointing out these facts I made it very plain that it was to be part of their province about the theatre during the week of 'Pollyanna' that they help the 'glad game' along.

"And this is what we did. Every employee was taught how to smile and keep on smiling. To see the bright side of everything, that, when the crowds started to push, they were not to get mad, but to remember that it could have been worse if we were a riot, and so on and on. They soon got the idea, and after they started to do the glad thing, they were happier themselves than ever before, and it was the easiest thing in the world. It worked admirably, and it certainly did add to the atmosphere of the theatre and helped in the exploitation of the picture.

"For the picture we extended our advertising, our bill-board and got in touch with all the school children in the community. The usherettes were dressed in dresses similar to that worn by Miss Pickford in the production, and as a prologue a small lot from the town, known to all lovers of music and eloquence, did a number of characteristic songs, blending very well with the spirit of the production.

"The result of it all was that the Colonial did one of the biggest week's business in its career and the picture brought much joy and happiness to their townsfolk.

Good Idea for Exploiting "Stamboul"

SAM W. B. COHN, director of exploitation for the Allen Theatre Enterprises, of Canada, has recently turned out special stunt campaigns covering the exploitation of each production as "The Virgin of Stamboul," "Partners of the Night," and "Dangerous Days." These campaigns are first employed at the Allen theatre in Toronto, Ontario, and are then passed on to the seven suburban houses of the same circuit, in the city, and also the other fifty theatres comprising the Allen chain throughout the Dominion.

In connection with the exploitation of "The Virgin of Stamboul" a victoria carriage drawn by a team of shaggy horses, conveyed "the virgin of Stamboul" and her shiled escort on the downtown streets of Toronto. There was no advertising matter on the outfit and the only way of ascertaining the identity of the gay couple was to approach them, wherever the carriage stopped in front of one of the prominent shops, where cards which stated "Introducing Sari, the Virgin of Stamboul, at home at the Allen theatre" were distributed.

The stunt was carried out in a dignified manner. The wardrobe worn by the occupants of the victoria was of the highest order, as was the livery of the coach man. The carriage and team were spick and span and the horses were decked out in plumes and fly nets.

It is needless to state that this stunt created much comment and thereby obtained the desired results.

In the smaller circle is shown a street ballyhoo in the form of the "Turkish" girl who rode about the streets of the city on a horse. Exhibitor Must Be Diplomat Says Pittsburgh Exhibitor

Mason Cites Qualities Which Insure Real Success in the Photoplay Field

"THE man with czar instincts has no place in the show business. The well-remembered 'opry house' manager who could assume the go-to-hell-if-you-don't-like-it attitude has ruled himself into the class of deposed monarchs. The combination that unlocks the door to exhibitor success will snare itself into an indestructible and invariable object when forced by czar tactics. Time and the public have made many changes."

Such are the convictions of W. F. Mason, manager of the Grand theatre, Pittsburgh, who recently talked to the Pittsburgh Post Gazette about how an exhibitor, by making friends, could work wonders in the way of successfully putting over a special feature attraction. "No man in the world has a right to be a better diplomat than an exhibitor," says Mr. Mason. "If he is not a diplomat, he is generally a failure. There is only one course, and that is the dividing line must be drawn short and sharp. The bigger the diplomat, the more successful the exhibitor."

"Diplomacy," claims Mr. Mason, "when tempered with good judgment can help the exhibitor pack his house. The exhibitor of today is the exact paradox of the opera house manager of yesterday. The very existence of the former depends upon his friendliness for humanity in general. His exploitation is a basic ingredient in his very existence, and successful exploitation cannot be accomplished without cooperation. It takes friends to insure hearty cooperation. It takes diplomacy to make and keep friends."

"The small-town 'opry house' manager made more enemies for the show business than he did pennies for himself."

"An exhibitor must have a good standing in his city. A good standing is impossible without friends. Particularly in the smaller cities is this so. The motion picture exhibitor is looked upon in somewhat the same light as the town postmaster. It is up to him to give the town proper theatrical representation. An imported exhibitor in a town of less than 200,000 would stand about as much chance as a celluloid dog who was chased through h— by the asbestos cat. And as little as it seems probable, the same essential facts hold true for the big city exploitation. The city is an outgrowth of the village. Every city is simply an overgrown cow-pen, and the time when a cow-pen once upon a time was as gullible as modern day villagers are said to be and usually are not."

"Any business man in the world will tell you that he tries to make friends. That is why a business man will spend, so much of his valuable time at the different social clubs to insure his standing with his fellow citizens; to show them that he is one of them; and incidentally to remind them that when they need a suit of clothes or a pair of shoes or whatever the required article happens to be, he is selling that article. An exhibitor should place himself in the same position. In my opinion, the exhibitor is a business man, the same as the grocer, or the butcher. Perhaps his stock is not as entirely essential to the existence of the community—but close up all the motion picture houses in a city of 700,000 for one week and then ask the people what they think about it. It would take a very short time to ascertain the fact that the motion picture exhibitor does supply a want, a need, an status, an exigency, a demand, a requirement that no other business man fills."

"It also can be observed that the motion picture exhibitor in your city who is making the clean-up, who enjoys the patronage of the high-class citizenship, is a fellow who understands and appreciates the value of patronage—friendship—a man who goes out of his way at every opportunity to nod to or chat with his patrons. You will never find a groucho at the manager's desk of a successful motion picture house."

"I believe that this system of patronage—friendship, which I have tried to cultivate, especially since I have been at the helm of the Grand theatre is one of the big things that have built up the patronage of the theatre. There are hundreds of ways the spirit of managerial—friendship makes itself known to the patron. The usher system, the temperature and ventilation of the theatre, the prohibition of 'wants' in the performance, a clear and unhindered projection and a hundred other little things, mean volumes to the patron, who has always been the best person in the world to offend."

"A good percentage of people, whether for the purpose of viewing a theatrical attraction or buying a pair of shoes, carry their feelings on their sleeves and a chip on their shoulder. And they are paining for someone (preferably the executive of the joint) to knock the chip off. That is why the careful exhibitor would rather have one friendly patron than ten whom he has taught to hate and who do not need to be pleased."

"I'm betting on the exhibitor who has foresight enough to pin this sign on his desk: 'RIGHT OR WRONG, THE PATRON IS ALWAYS RIGHT. IF YOU CAN'T SUIT HIM THERE'S SOMETHING WRONG WITH YOU'."

Omaha Theater Gets Publicity From Local Aeroplane

The aeroplane is getting to be an old story but that does not prevent street crowds from straining their necks every time the hull of a motor is seen overhead. An aeroplane will attract more attention than a fire, any day. Perhaps people watch aeroplanes in the hope that something will happen and the machine will fall.

Even Omaha is not aeroplane proof, as the management of the Moon theatre recently proved when they exploited "The Great Air Robbery." C. E. Tuttle, an amateur aeronaut of Red Oak, Iowa, flew over Omaha for the Moon theatre. He scattered handbills, dropped 500 passes to the theatre and pulled a series of air stunts for the edification of the interested spectators below.

The Moon further capitalized the local interest in aviation. They borrowed a weird machine constructed by Guy Smith, resident of Omaha. It was a hybrid, with an automobile body and aeroplane wings. It was "driven" down to the theatre where it was "parked." Crowds continually pressed about it, thinking it was a new invention—a helicopter, a gyrocopter or some other such strange bird-machine.
Window and Lobby Displays That Merit Great Praise

Gordon Wrighter, the live wire manager of Polk’s Palace theatre, Springfield, Mass., is the originator of the exploitation idea illustrated to the left for "The Flame of the Desert."

An Egyptian hourglass strongly constructed and standing nine feet high was placed directly in front of the lobby. The upper compartment of the hourglass was filled with sand which flowed slowly into the lower glass. A large compositor board frame surrounding the glass carried the question, "How long will it take sand to pass to lower glass?" Then at the bottom of the frame, "Free tickets to nearest correct guesses." A cut-out of Geraldine Farrar was placed at the top of the stand.
Prologue Author Receives Ovation

The unique occurrence of a crowded theatre calling for the author of a prologue of a moving picture feature was witnessed at the Russell theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, at the close of the final presentation of "Pollyanna," starring Mary Pickford, on Saturday evening, April 10. The theatre was packed to the roof and the evening's show had been received with considerable enthusiasm. The climax in this respect came when the audience made repeated demands for the appearance on the stage of Will McLaughlin, Photoplay Editor of the Ottawa Journal, who had written the exceptionally clever and interesting prologue for the picture. Mr. McLaughlin eventually responded to the insistent calls by stepping out from the wings to address the gathering briefly.

Mr. McLaughlin's prologue, which was entitled "Pollyanna at the Court of Happiness," bore an important relation to the success of the engagement at the Russell during Easter Week. Many local dancers, who had been trained by Prof. Sinclair, a dancing tutor of Ottawa, participated in the sketch which was used as an introduction to the film feature. The prologue consisted of three appropriate scenes, the theme of which was a dream by a "Pollyanna" in human form in the person of an Ottawa young lady. The tiny toks who took part in the dance of the fairies were particularly effective in arousing the admiration of the crowds.

In addition to the fine prologue, the character and magnitude of which had never been seen in the Canadian capital before, the newspaper advertising for the presentation was highly creditable.

Prologues of this kind always have been and always will be a credit to the theatre producing them, and are also a stimulant to the minds of an audience and an attraction which is constantly looked for.

How Libson Killed the Holy Week Jinx

"Everywoman" and An Exploitation Campaign

Win for Cincinnati Manager

"EVEryWOMAN" was the picture Manager Libson of the Strand theatre, Cincinnati chose to buck the "Holy Week" jinx, and exploitation was the aid he gave the production to overcome the handicap of the worst show week in the year. The Strand campaign was begun several weeks in advance of the showing and was centralized in the newspapers.

Among the newspaper stunts used were: Three weeks in advance a search was started for "original movie fans"—those who saw "Miss Jerry" on the screen twenty-five years ago. A number of the "first fans" were found and were given a party at the Strand. This stunt resulted in a dozen stories covering several weeks. The idea was tied up with "Everywoman" by explaining that the "original fans" were to be shown this most lavish, up-to-the-minute photoplay in contrast with "Miss Jerry," a reproduction of which is in the Paramount Magazine released February 15. One of the original fans wrote a letter, lauding "Everywoman."

The Commercial-Tribune put on a stunt in which five questions were asked regarding several members of the "Everywoman" cast. Prizes were awarded to the best set of answers. This attracted attention and got space. The Commercial-Tribune also ran a quarter page feature, illustrated, entitled "What Becomes of the Gowns Worn Only in Moving Pictures." The supposed fate of "Everywoman" gowns was revealed.

The Cincinnati Post put on the most elaborate feature, which brought first page publicity for three days and two columns space inside for a week. It was a simple classified ad page stunt—one of the best read pages in any metropolitan newspaper. Tickets to "Everywoman" were offered for women of Cincinnati who sent in letters telling what the Post want ads had done for them. The stunt gave the newspaper many good testimonials for classified ads—and much publicity for "Everywoman."

The newspaper advertising campaign was made distinctive with hand-drawn ads and the size was about twice that used on the usual attractions at the Strand.

Window displays were secured in several of the Dow Drug Stores chain, in the finest locations in Cincinnati. The toilet accessory idea was carried out in these windows with beautiful photo-illuminated cards by Display Manager Fleshman of the Dow Company. Florist windows were tied up with cut-outs showing Everywoman looking into a vase of flowers and with stills showing the Garden of Contentment. The drug store used newspaper space with a scene cut from "Everywoman" to tie up the toilet requisites idea.

De Mille Features Presented at Criterion Theatre

"WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE?" at the Criterion Theatre for an indefinite engagement is being proceeded by a specially written prologue which adds to the entertainment of the feature. Following the screening of the scene the drapes are drawn for a moment to be seen partly when Helen Shipman and four dancers attired in short skirt gowns present a singing and dancing act, featuring the virtues of the feature to be shown and relating some lines concerning the moral it is supposed to convey. A tuneful song under the title of "Why Change Your Wife?" is sung by Miss Shipman and company. At the finish of the picture the company again appears on the stage with more of the song which admonishes the audience not to change wives under penalty of having an experience similar to that of the characters of the picture. Then leave the stage and repeat the song from the aisles of the theatre standing under spot lights in the house.

The Criterion stage has been improved for picture purposes by the installation of a pretty screen border well up center. Right and left stage is screened by drapes. The orchestra is invisible as also is the organist. For the screening of the story reels shown first, a piano is used, this being placed in view of the audience down stage right.

This is an after illustration of the successful way Hugo Reisenfeld has of featuring his programs.

Brand New Exploitation For Small Towns

A brand new method of exploitation for towns under 4,000 population and guaranteed by Lieutenant A. R. Thomas, owner and manager of the Argonne theatre, Colton, Calif., recently put over a special feature attraction with the greatest success and least cost in the history of the theatre.

This new form of promotion as used by Lieutenant Thomas had its beginning during the presentation of "Auction of Souls," starring Aurora Mardiganian.

The exhibitor explained his campaign in the following manner: "I realized that the best way to start current discussion is to just whisper something in the form of a secret. Following this procedure I apparently "tipped" off some of the local folks about the unusual scenes to be shown in 'Auction of Souls' and cautioned them not to miss seeing women sold for eighty-five cents.

"In turn those people whom I told about the production told others until, the first thing we knew, the town was talking about it. I whipped the information that America interfered in this war in time to assist in securing civilization from such atrocities as are shown in the picture. This was big news to lots of the townsfolk and it spread rapidly. I also whispered the fact that one of the girls who passed through the horrors of that terrible Armenian catastrophe was shown in the picture and that the story would tell my friends about town how girls were treated before they were made slaves and also how they were treated after they got into the hands of the Turks."

"There are a little less than 4,000 people in Colton and if I had blazed away at billboards and painted up the streets and sidewalks in a way that have got better results or aroused any more interest. It seemed that the majority of the people thought they were taking advantage of a confidential tip in seeing the picture."

Although Mr. Thomas maintains that his "whispering" stunt was largely responsible for the remarkable box office success he attained with 'Auction of Souls,' there is little doubt that his untinted billboard and newspaper exploitation aided in the final result. Unusual care in the arranging of his display matter and the featuring of interesting details was plainly evidenced.

New Idea in Inexpensive Exploitation

A/N instance of the clever showmanship that distinguishes the exploitation efforts of Harry J. Troxell, Jr., manager of the Photo Play theatre, Gettysburg, Pa., is afforded by one of his recent campaigns which with almost little or no extra expense stirruped an unprecedented amount of local comment.

At the same time Mr. Troxell's idea offers to exhibitors a new idea in inexpensive exploitation. The main idea he brought out is that it is a good idea for exhibitors to watch the cast names of the person appearing in the various screen dramas they present.

To illustrate, in Gettysburg there lives a man named Hon. John Keith, prominent for his integrity and civic interest and well known through his prominent connection with the Adams County Fair. Mr. Keith has a multitude of friends in Gettysburg.

"Free Ticket" Advertising Idea

Fred W. Postle, manager of the Victoria theatre, Columbus, Ohio, is the originator of the following bit of advertising, used in his case for "Eve in Exile," but as good for any other attraction.

A neat blue ticket which at first glance purported to be a free ticket but which wasn't extolled the merits of the film in the following manner:

"This is not a FREE TICKET, but you will be willing to ADMIT ONE thing about 'Eve in Exile,' that it is the best acted, most fascinating, dramatic and artistic picture you've seen this year."

Style Show Staged by Huntington House

Huntington, West Va., probably never saw an exploitation campaign for pictures which equalled that which Manager C. E. Tipton of the Orpheum put over for "Male and Female" and which brought the theatre record-breaking business.

The most spectacular feature of his exploitation was the staging of a style show in co-operation with the Zenner-Bradshaw Co., leading dealers in women's apparel. The store had its spring style exhibit, using live models. For the show the Zenner-Bradshaw company arranged a stage setting of wonderful beauty and effect. More than $500 was spent on this feature alone; everything on the stage being real—draperies, rugs, flowers, etc. Six models were used and each day the gowns worn were changed, causing many to return again and again to the theatre. Each day the Zenner-Bradshaw company used nearly half a page ad to announce the styles to be exhibited at the Orpheum. At the store entrance a large booth of attractive design and with a mechanical electrical device attracted attention and tied up with the theatre presentation. In the store windows—mammoth windows—oil paintings and cards announced the Orpheum "Male and Female Style Show." Across the street, in front of the theatre, Manager Tipton rigged up in cut-out letters 'Male and Female Style Show,' stretching across the thoroughfare and visible for miles in each direction. The style show was given at the theatre in conjunction with "Male and Female" three times a day. The women came to see the gowns; the men came to see the models; both came to see "Male and Female."

The style was the climax of the campaign. Leading up to it was a drive that puts Mr. Tipton in the forefront of success. He started off with an immense amount of lithographs and window cards. He augmented the latter with especially hand-painted cards, embellished with "stills." These gained entrance into windows otherwise closed to exploitation material.

The newspaper campaign reached its biggest smash with the Male and Female Section in the Sunday edition of the Herald-Dispatch. Twelve pages comprised the section and even then the publicity matter and tieup ads ran over into another section. More than 20 advertisers bucked up with "Male and Female." Interesting publicity stories filled in the section where the ads didn't crowd them out. A "missing word" contest was run through all the ads in the section, compelling the reader-interest for the entire section.

Prior to the Sunday splash, the Herald Dispatch ran a series of six illustrated stories on "A Day With Gloria Swanson," attracting keen interest.

Mr. Tipton used the traction card to carry his message to other towns and also used space in the local papers of those places.

Live News From The Producers

Polar Film in First Runs
Large Houses Book "Bottom of the World," South Pole Picture

In the engagement of the film for appearances on Broadway, and in the largest first run theatre of the country, Robertson-Cole believes it has received an endorsement of "The Bottom of the World," the film, which is unsurpassed. All indications point to this official record of the last great South Pole dash being capitalized by exhibitors of the most discriminating class as no similar picture has been taken advantage of in ten years.

Perhaps the most significant booking in the country is that by Hugo Risfeld, the managing director of the Rivoli and Radio theatres, both of which are located on Broadway, New York. San Francisco will see "The Bottom of the World" first run, in the California theatre, one of the first run houses in the city. The Stanley theatre, one of the leading houses in Philadelphia, has also booked it. In Detroit the picture is to be shown at the Madison theatre, Michigan's finest house, and a center which holds to the best ideals of pictures in the Middle West. Ohio's great theatre, the Enclid, of Cleveland, will show the Shackleton picture first run, and in Minneapolis it has invaded the Auditorium, which is owned and operated by a competing company.

Sennett Comedy Scoring United Artists Tell of Good Reports on "Down on the Farm"

EXHIBITORS from all over the country have been sending good reports to United Artists telling of the success of the new Mack Sennett five-reel comedy, "Down on the Farm," according to an announcement of the distributors.

"The picture has proved nothing less than a comedy sensation," says United Artists. "With its premiere in nearly 100 houses in the country and its general release in over fifty cities during the past week, the praise that has been heaped upon this production is unprecedented in comedy circles, for exhibitors, critics, reviewers and public alike, record it as the most attractively interesting and hilariously funny five-reeler that has ever come from the studios of Mack Sennett, who has won for himself the enviable reputation of the comedy king."

Mr. Abram's messages have come from every section of the country, from exhibitors, writers, individuals and prominent film going public, and all agree that it is the most pretentious, speedily and genuinely funny picture that has ever been screened, and one that lends itself wondrously to exploitation of a distinctive type.

Drew Comics Moved to Chicago Studios

John Cummander, starring in Sidney Drew's two-reel comedy series, has been lacking such success in his stage offering, "The Girl in the Limousine," that he has been unable to leave the stage to devote himself exclusively to picture work. Because of this, Mr. Drew has been compelled to move his production activities from New York to Chicago, where for a month Cummander will appear in his stage attraction.

Mrs. Drew took over part of the Essanoy Stable and left New York on Saturday, April 26, to resume work. After Thirty-five years as a stage performer, Mr. Cummander, who has been playing opposite Mr. Cummander.

George Kleine Resumes Picture Production

George Kleine has resumed the active field of motion picture production as president of the Koski Films, Inc. Koski Films, Inc., is producing an expensive serial, "The Hope Diamond Mystery" with studio space in Universal City, Calif. The offices of the company are in New York, the New York offices are at 110 West 48th Street.

"Tillie" Draws Crowd at Broadway Theatre

A significant precedent in showmanship was established at the Broadway theatre, New York, last week, when "Tillie's Punctured Romance" filled the bill at the Broadway theatre were two other attractions in addition to "Tillie's Punctured Romance." This comedy, however, was given no special prominence or display at the beginning.

The opening of the week brought a record crowd the first day, with nine out of every ten people, it is said, inquiring as to where they purchased their tickets when "Tillie's Punctured Romance" would be on the screen.

Charles Hutchinson Cast for Pathé Serial

Charles Hutchinson, who recently signed a contract with Pathé to star in serials, arrived in Los Angeles Thursday, April 1, and was accompanied by his wife.

A welcome planned by Gibson Williams, of the Pathé serial department, was tendered the new arrival in Palm Springs. Harold Lloyd, Robert Harron, and other Pathé players greeted Mr. Hutchinson upon his arrival in their studio.

It is expected that Mr. Hutchinson will commence work on his first serial under the new contract on April 19 at the Robert Bronson Studio.

Charles H. Hoyt Parces Praised by Comedian

Otis Harlan, the noted comedian who first became famous as star of the Charles H. Hoyt farce comedies, which were recently purchased by the Charles Ray Productions, Inc., under the management of Charles C. Burton, William W. Worthington as president, is rapidly nearing completion at the Cliftside studio, McCord interiors and important sets being filmed during the past week.

The Tracey picture is a lavishly staged offering, having cost close to $50,000, according to the announcement of Mr. Burton.

George Kleine, former head of the Players' Company, has been associated with the production. The film will be produced in a series of 16 sound pictures, each about 120 minutes long.

A. Lincoln Hart, formerly prominent as a stage director, who has become production manager for L. Parkes' Rell Jr.
Farrar Vehicle Announced

Associated Exhibitors to Present
"The Riddle: Woman"; Jose Directs

Geraldine Farrar's initial production for Associated Exhibitors, Inc., will be "The Riddle: Woman," adapted from the highly successful stage play in which Mme. Bertha Kalish starred. The picture will be directed by Edward Jose and will be given such production as to make it, from every angle, one of the biggest box-office pictures of the year, says the Associated's statement.

"The Riddle: Woman," was purchased from the Shubert theatrical interests. The play was written by T. M. Jacoby and published by Charlotte Wells and Dorothy Donnelly. It ran for more than nine months, eleven months in Chicago and five months in Boston. Since its New York premiere a little more than two years ago "Carpe Diem: Woman," road companies have been traveling the country constantly.

"The Riddle: Woman" is a present-day drama of realism and absorbing power, and the leading role has been assigned to Angela Lansbury, a full screen to blend her beauty and dramatic abilities with it to such a degree as to make the play picture a vast improvement over the spoken piece.

Concerning the forthcoming production, the following statement has been issued: "The heroine is tigerish,transfixing,uncompromising and calculatingly cool by turns. Fire turns to ice and frivolity to flames in the psychological makeup up of the woman who is the pivotal figure in a tangle complexity of emotions. The story is of the clash of traits and a thrilling run of passion, seasoned with a love interest and ultimate justification that make it the nucleus of a truly big attraction."

"The Riddle: Woman," is a play that will appeal particularly to women. It is a modern story with a society setting. The subject matter and title are ripe with exploitation possibilities. This fact, coupled with the further fact that the picture will be produced as well as it is possible for human endeavor to produce a picture with everything necessary of costume, promises to make "The Riddle: Woman" in picture form one of the biggest pictures of the season.

"The Third Eye" to Be Released May 23rd

The first three episodes of "The Third Eye" were presented at a special trade showing on Tuesday last at the Shubert Theatre, New York. "The Third Eye" was produced at the Asta studios and stars Warner Oland and Eileen Percy in a mystery story written by H. H. Van Loan, James W. Horne, who directed Ruth Roland in "Hands Up," is credited with the direction of "The Third Eye."

This is the first serial by H. H. Van Loan, whose numerous screen plays produced of late have brought him forward suddenly as one of the most prominent and successful contemporary screenwriters.

"Deep Purple" to Have New York Premiere

"The Deep Purple," adapted from Paul Armstrong and Watson Mizer's notable stage success, prepared and directed for Mayflower by R. A. Walsh and distributed by Realart, will have its premiere screen presentation at the Capitol Theatre, New York City on May 2nd. According to the Mayflower announcement, the thrilling scenes in the gilt-edged and underworld life of New York, which enabled the play to hold the stage in one metropolitan theatre for more than a year are produced on a scale for the screen that is out of reach of possible stage presentation.

Albert Cowles Holds to the Practical

Albert Cowles, director of the "Law of the Yukon," is spoken of as a practical sort of person. His studio uniform would lend support to the opinion. Mr. Cowles' working rig consists of olive drab jeans, overall and shirt snugly surrounded by a khaki-tinted cavalry collar. Mr. Cowles again shows his practical streak in the conviction that a director should at all times consult his writers, with a twofold purpose in view—to impart the spirit of the author to the picture and the same time to free and guide the production in "the critical spirit of the audience." Not only the story, but its presentation, mode of telling, and other details are scrutinized by Mr. Cowles.

Selig Serial Selling Fast

"Vanishing Trails" Arouses Interest; Several States Already Sold

Hardly had the advertising campaign been started on "Vanishing Trails," the colored Wm. N. Selig serial featuring Franklin Farmun and Mary Anderson, when the Canyon Pictures Corporation, which is now staging this production, started receiving a great many inquiries in the form of letters and long distance calls.

J. M. Goldstein, treasurer of Canyon, is handling the sales in the New York office, where Jack Weinberg, president of the concern will visit the state right buyers enroute while making a trip to the coast.

In addition to the serial, Mr. Goldstein plans to make an announcement very shortly on several other well known features which he expects to issue shortly on the open market.

Michigan Manager Confers With Kremer

W. H. Seifert, manager of Independent Masterminds, Inc., of Detroit, Mich., is in New York this week, conferring with Victor Kremer relative to the handling of various pictures which Seifers' exchange distributes for the state of Michigan.

Betty Blythe Cast for First National Role

Betty Blythe will complete work in the Lew Cody picture this week and on April 19 will commence her role in "The Sun, the Moon and the Stars,"

"The Sun, the Moon and the Stars," under the direction of David Hartford, for First National.
Lila Lee Re-Signed by Famous Players

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, was not only the renewal of Lila Lee's contract, and it is understood that she will continue to appear in roles similar in character to those which she has been doing of late.

It is not as yet announced whether her next work will lie, but in the meantime she is appearing in William D. Taylor's production, temporarily titled "The Boy."

Many Sales for "Comedydrama" Reported

Sales Manager H. J. Roberts of the Pathele Pictures Corporation reports that 3,000 contracts have been signed for the Comedydrama productions each week beginning March 22nd. These were signed by representatives throughout the United States and Canada. Over sixty of the leading first run theatres throughout the country had signed for the Special Pictures "short subject" Comedydrama production, before the organization had been in existence more than two months.

Elmer Pearson Touring Key City Exchanges

Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is on a tour around the key cities of the central Western states. In the three weeks he has arranged to be away from New York visits will be made to ten of the Pathe exchanges. He began his tour in Cleveland, and in turn will visit Indianapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis and Pittsburg. This is Mr. Pearson's first tour of the Pathe branches since his appointment as director of exchanges.

C. J. VerHalen Moves New York Offices

C. J. VerHalen, who recently established himself as advertising engineer to the motion picture industry, has moved into new offices at 116 West 39th St. Mr. VerHalen specializes in complete campaigns on pictures, press books and everything of an advertising or exploitation nature connected with motion pictures.

Lila Lee, who is at work on a feature film sponsored by Robertson-Cole, was given credit for the renewal of her contract. The company, which has handled some of the most successful pictures of recent years, is expected to score a big hit with "The Boy."
“One of the Greatest”
Says Jesse Lasky

“One of the greatest photographs I have ever seen,” is the comment of Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players Lasky Corporation, on the second special production of Lasky pictures, which he predicts will be even greater a success than the first George Melford production, “On With the Dance.”

“I firmly believe,” said Mr. Lasky, “that when this picture is shown, Mr. Melford has taken another motion picture art a long step forward. I have seldom seen a photograph which combines so excellently all the elements that go into the art of production.”

Victor Seastrom Seen
At Broadway Theatre

The Radiosound Fohn, Ltd., have come forward with the determination to make Victor Seastrom the "Bucko," as he is in Europe. And the national warm reception accorded to Seastrom, which takes full advantage of his motion picture art, which recognized him not only as a great actor but as a great director as well, is, Radiosound believes, a good start in the battle.

"A Man There Was," starring Seastrom, is now playing at the R.S. Moss Broadway theatre, New York, together with Mack Sennett's comedy, "Down on the Farm." This play by Henrik Ibsen is said to be one that can be enjoyed by those who are somewhat contemptuous of motion pictures as well as the average movie fan.

George Fitzmaurice on His Third Special

George Fitzmaurice, who recently completed a special production, as yet unnamed, has taken an entire company to Florida to take exception for his third special for Paramount-Aircraft. The title of this is "I do of Chay," an original story of Ouida Bergeon, Miss Mayray and David Powell will be the principal players in "I do of Chay."

First National Plans
Los Angeles House

As the outcome of conferences between Sol Lesser, owner of the First National franchise for Los Angeles, and J. D. Williams, manager of First National Exhibitors Circuit, a new theatre is to be built in Los Angeles for First National. The building expense, estimated approximately at $3,000,000 will be borne by First National. The outstanding feature of all First National houses throughout the country will be incorporated in the new structure, it is stated. The theatre will be used as a non-competing house, it will stage the premier showings of the First National attractions. The location, which has not been announced definitely as yet, will be in the downtown district. The new picture palace, says officials of First National, will represent a beautiful tribute to Los Angeles on the part of the franchise holders of First National, who are scattered throughout every section of the country.

Ince Special Will Be
F. P.-Lasky Release

"Home spun Folks," the new Thomas H. Ince super-special presented by Lloyd Hughes, a recent Ince discovery, as the leading masculine player of an all-star cast, will be distributed by Famous-Players Lasky Corporation through Paramount-Aircraft exchanges, it was announced this week by Thomas H. Ince.

"Home spun Folks," is an original story from the pen of the Thomas H. Ince staff author, Julien Josephson.

Rothacker Site May Be Made into City Park

Construction on the Rothacker Coast laboratory in Hollywood has been held up until the city council decides whether it wants to make a park out of the site. Mr. Rothacker has purchased a site on Sunset Boulevard, Mr. Mollis, treasurer of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, leaves for Los Angeles next week to let contracts for the laboratory construction. The contracts will be let immediately, and if the city council takes the billboard site for a park the laboratories will be erected on another site which is under option.

Shipman Has Option on
Ralph Connor's Stories

Ernest Shipman announced recently that he had secured an option on the well-known stories of Ralph Connor, the majority of which deal with woodland romance. Among stories now being considered are "Canadian Stories of the Royal Mounted," by Mr. Connor, and "The Forge in the Forest," by Charles D. Roberts. The consideration and perfecting of plans for future activities of Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., will probably occupy Mr. Shipman's attention for the next five weeks. A considerable portion of this time will be spent in Canada.

Small Town Exhibitor
Books Big Features

Once in a while the small town exhibitor, customarily referred to in a general way as "the backbone of the industry," comes in for his proper share of glory, as in the case of H. E. Rodell, owner of the Crystal Theatre in Mitchell, Neb., who gets credit as the patronizer in Realart's end-of-season campaign.

Mr. Rodell, through Realart's Denver manager, booked "Soldiers of Fortune" and "The Luck of the Irish" and other Realart features. Mitchell is a town of 840 people, and this is considered to be proportionately the biggest deal ever put through by Realart.

"Flying A" Breaks Own Business Record

"American Film broke the biggest single record the first week of the S. S. Hutchinson "Tribute"—did more business than ever before in the history of the company, and the second week we did more than the first so there's no question but we'll go over big," said C. A. Stimson, general sales manager. "There's no reason why we shouldn't put it over in good shape. There isn't anything on the screen today that has a wider appeal than the "Honey Bee," "The Story of a Woman in Revere," as told by Samuel Merwin; "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver" is without question one of the best stories ever put on the screen. "Slam Bang Jim" is selling to the best houses all over the country for extended runs. "The Dangerous Talent" received the highest praise from the critics and akes everywhere. "Eve in Exile" and "The Hellion"—two strong dramas of greater contrast could scarcely be imagined—have already proved their worth."
The combination to the richest vault of thrills the screen has ever held.

The tremendous drama of a convict who reforms through the love of a good woman. It is the story of Lee Randall, alias Jimmy Valentine, who can open steel vaults — through his highly developed sense of touch. For sheer dramatic power the picture is unsurpassed. It is the perfect filmization of Paul Armstrong's famous stage play.

Some of Mr. Lytell's best work before the camera is contained in this picture. We urge you to book it.

To Show Lumber-Piling Machine at Work

Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company announces the completion of a picture made for the national lumber association, which shows a lumber-piling machine at work. The machine, it is stated, can do the work of fifty men in moving lumber in large quantities from one point to another. The film will be shown before lumber manufacturers and wholesalers for the purpose of inducing them to put the machine in their equipment stock. Sumner Calvert directed the film.

Good Support for Miss Young in Her Next

J. Frank Glendenon will support Clara Kimball Young in the leading male role of Miss Young's next production, "Mid-Channel," Arthur Wing Pinero's famous drama in which Ethel Barrymore starred some seasons ago. Mr. Glendenon has enjoyed an interesting career both on the stage and screen.

Helene Sullivan, who played the role of the young widow in the production of "Civilian Clothes" will support Miss Young.

"Simple Souls" is Pathe's

The widespread comment caused by the appearance in the trade papers in the past few weeks of the teaser advertising on "Simple Souls" came to a denouement with the announcement that "Simple Souls" is the title of the latest Blanche Sweet production to be completed for release by Pathe. Production experts who have been permitted to see the film state that it is one of the finest productions of the West Coast studios and is undoubtedly the best of Blanche Sweet's career.

Supported in this opinion it has been determined by Pathe to back the production with an exceptional campaign of advertising and exploitation. Nothing will be spared to make clear the merits of the production to the end that the thousands of exhibitors who have been steadily building a Blanche Sweet clientele in their houses may clearly realize on this latest superb picture.

The story is from a novel by John Hastings Turner and tells the romance of Molly Shine, a show girl of lovely birth, and the Duke of Wyminating. They were two simple souls, delighting in their youth and simplicity. Their ideals and dreams made them kindred spirits but their attachment could not be understood by his rich relatives or her poor folks and scandal brought its sting into their lives.

In the direction Richard Barthelmess again distinguished himself. He has scored in all of the Blanche Sweet pictures, "The Woman of Pleasure," "Fighting Cressy," and "The Daidler Sex." In selecting a cast he showed excellent judgment in picking types and he strengthened the production with such excellent performers as Charles Meredith, Herbert Grimes, Margaret Kenbo, Herbert Standing, and Kate Lester.

The settings range from the modest home of a schoolgirl to the palace and yacht of the Duke and throughout are many beautiful exteriors scenes, London streets, a park scene in the country, an ocean trip on a yacht all give the picture that healthy atmosphere of the spotless young people sought by the exhibitors who are endeavoring to meet the public demand today.

"Master-Key" Near Ready

Earle Williams Puts Finishing Touches on Vitagraph Picture

Earle Williams is just putting the finishing touches on, "Master Key" which he has completed for Vitagraph, his picture of the famous mystery novel by H. P. Lovecraft, which was adapted by H. Thompson Rich for Vitagraph. Williams, who is the leading male in the production, has been in charge of Chester Bennett, producer of Vitagraph.

"A Master Stroke" is announced as a clever comedy drama of wit, women and Wall Street. That Williams can handle the comedy touches deftly has been proved it is said, by his work in Wincel Smith's comedy, "The Fortune Hunter," in which he portrayed the John Barrymore role, and big things are expected of him in the role of Yale Durant in "Master Stroke." A little idea of the original touches may be formed from the knowledge that the "Safe-and-money" action seen in so many pictures is here given a novel twist. The action centers not at all about taking money from a safe, but on getting the money back into the safe after it has been stolen.

Vera Vade appears as Mr Williams' leading woman, and other prominent members of the cast are H. A. Barrows, Ethel Stannett, John Elliott and Frank Cayucie.

The exteriors of the production were taken at Santa Barbara, California, where several beautiful estates and the noted country club were used.
To Continue Serial Policy
Pathé Will Release Two Serials at a Time as Decided Last Fall

PAUL Bomma, vice-president and general manager of Pathé Exchange, last week announced that the policy of releasing two serials at a time, inaugurated last fall, when the "Bound and Gagged" serial and "The Black Secret" were released, will be continued. It is stated that the success of "Bound and Gagged," released early in April, in obtaining bookings in practically every house that ran the film, and the very fact that the serials are being released at practically the same date, has been successfully established and that the plans for the balance of this year and 1921 with regard to serials were to be drawn on the same basis.

The records of Pathé's serial department show that "The Adventures of Ruth" was accepted by Pathé as far as and inclusive evidence that the scheme introduced October last has been successful, and that there is an active demand for serials, "sufficiently great to warrant the continuance of a schedule offering the network two serials per week.

June Mathis Speedy Writer Completes Four Scenarios in Four Months; Has Written Many Successes

C. W. Bell and Mark Swan, the latter in collaboration with A. P. Younger, Miss Mathis is an executive and facile writer, and it seems as if the frequently rewritten script is a new experience. Miss Mathis has written a scenario for Metro, two recently released, "The Three," and "Bound and Gagged," and one recently released, "The Black Secret," has been the subject of thousands of requests and has been ordered by newspapers, a clear indication of the immense demand for serials.

When Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the famous Spanish novelist, visited California several weeks ago, June Mathis was selected as the press agent for the screen of his world-famous novel, "The Four Feathers." The Metro's recent release, "Bound and Gagged," through which Miss Mathis has been more frequently rewritten than any other script, has been known to companies for one or two weeks, it is stated.

The picture is being made as a Louis B. Mayer-Francisco National attraction.

L. Bickel in Charge of Dallas Exchange

L. Bickel has taken over complete charge of his Dallas (Texas) exchange for Metro Pictures Corporation, under instructions from the home office. As recently announced, Metro has full ownership of the Dallas exchange, for the exclusive distribution of Metro productions in the southwestern territory. The exchange is now located in Texas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas.

Pioneer Appoints New General Manager

Last week the Pioneer general staff appointed C. A. Buck, Taylor general manager of the Buffalo district, who took up his duties immediately. Mr. Murphy still remains in charge as office manager under the direction of Mr. Taylor, who was formerly connected with Pathé exchange.

"Original Photoplay to Come Into Its Own"

Marshall Neilan believes that producers are about to revert to the practice of looking to the original photoplay for picturization material. "When a few years ago some producers sought material among past stage successes and works of famous authors, their lead was quickly followed by nearly all of the manufacturing companies," says Neilan, "with the result that competition became very keen between them for the procuring of well-known stories and plays adaptable to the screen. Now these sources have become almost depleted as the result of the heavy drain upon them for the last few years. The supply of desirable books and stage plays available can be bought only at prices prohibitive to the average independent producer. The result," says Mr. Neilan, "is that the producer will have to select his material from the fund of original scripts."
Chester Speeding Up On New Plant in West

Dispatches from Los Angeles this week announced the practical completion of the physical organization of C. L. Chester Productions, Inc., whose studio will be released through Educational Films Corporation. Only the laboratory and permanent offices remain to be finished before the entire plant will be in operation.

Mr. Chester is in personal charge of all his activities. His handsome new offices for the present at 6372 Hollywood Boulevard. Until the new Chester laboratory is completed, the exhibition and projection room will be located in the William Horsley Studios at 006 Sunset Street.

The studio, where the comedies are being produced, are located near Lamda Park, not far from the Selig Zoo. William S. Campbell is in charge of activities. Adjoining the studios is the Chester Zoological Gardens, the facilities for the production of animal scenes. Animals figure as prominently in the second of Chester productions, as they did in "Four Times Fanned," the initial production, which is to have its first release showings in New York.

Simplex Notes

In keeping with the progressive policy that has characterized the Precision Machine Company since its inception, a newly organized division is now part of the plant. The projector building plant known as the non-theatrical division.

Mr. E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, has some time been preparing an analysis of the groups included in the simplex theatrical one, and so promising does the future of Simplex installations in churches, industrial plants and other public buildings look, that it was decided to create a separate division for the cultivation of that productive future marketing place for Simplex.

Mr. Leon L. Horstman has been placed in charge of the Simplex Non-Theatrical Division.

Mr. E. M. Porter expresses himself as being particularly pleased with this latest branch of the Simplex organization, the installation of which had been planned for the new year but was rather held back manufacturing problems.

The Criterion theater, Long Aere Square, which has been devoted to legitimate drama since the Vitagraph Company last showed their productions upon the screen, has been added to the popular call for more Broadway motion picture shows.

Under the direction of Dr. Hugo Reiner, the "S" Simplex projectors were installed immediately following the close of the latest performances which were playing at this theater until Wednesday. Mr. John Krash of the Simplex factory supervised the installation, which includes two 90 ampere rheostats and a 100 ampere spot-light.

Mayflower’s Releasing Tie-Up

First National Will Handle All Future Productions

All rumors and reports concerning the distribution plans of Mayflower were definitely set at rest early this week by the announcement of President Frager, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, that a release contract has been signed with Associated First National Exhibitors whereby the bulk of Mayflower’s future productions will be distributed through the First National organization.

In summarizing these negotiations, the Associated First National Exhibitors were represented by Harry Schwab, secretary-treasurer; while President Price, General Manager John W. McKay acted for Mayflower.

Under the terms of the contract, the Associated First National will take over the distribution of the Allen Mayflower features; all future R. A. Waltah productions and the picture now being completed in Los Angeles by Sidney A. Franklin. Of the series, the first is "A Spray Hazard," from the Harold McGrath novel, has been completed and is now ready for re.

While viewed by First National officials, great enthusiasm was expressed regarding this picture and it is expected that it will be sold for a big box-office attraction. The other Mayflower pictures are “In the Heart of the Dragon Lady,” based on William Allen White’s book of the same name, and “The Screwdriver,” from a magazine story by Val Clevelad. Both of these pictures are soon ready for distribution, and preparations are now being made by Waltah for another production, as yet unnamed, which is scheduled to start shooting later in May.

A NOther challenging Benj-a-min B. Hampton-Ellingsen-F. Warner production is ready for exhibitors following four previous pictures made under the Beni-B. Hampton imprint which were introduced to the industry by the W. W. Hodkinson organization last year. The noted publisher-producer’s newest and greatest achievement is "Riders of the Dawn," from Zane Grey’s world-known novel, "The Desert of Wheat."

"Riders of the Dawn," a worthy successor to Zane Grey’s "Desert Gold," had the advantages of every attribute that makes Beni-B. Hampton the first Grey picture one of the most talked about productions in years. All during the course of production, a matter of eight months, the producer had the detailed assistance of the author, who has written Zane Grey’s reputation contributes to a screen version by taking an active part in the making of the picture, will be amply demonstrated to the world of Zane Grey readers by the remarkable power and beauty of "Riders of the Dawn."

With the exception of "The Deep Purple," which is being handled by Reliant, all of Waltah’s product will go through National in the future.

It is expected that Franklin will be finished shortly with "Allah," his current production, which is an adaptation of the W. Chambers’ novel, and according to the tentative program, this will be the second Mayflower production to go through the First National channel.

For a considerable time the film industry has been much agog over the movements of Mayflower. Announcements regarding releasing activities have been expected for more than a month. At one time it was reported that Associated Exhibitors would handle Mayflower films, and of late there have been persistent rumors of a continued relationship with Reliant. It is believed now that the latter report grew out of the fact that an arrangement was made with Reliant for the handling of Miller’s "Law of the Yukon" and Waltah’s "The Deep Purple."

"Riders of the Dawn" was produced under the direction of Hugh Ryan Conwray, director of a score of cinema successes, and as customary in a production made by Beni-B. Hampton, a powerful cast was assembled for the screen translation of the Zane Grey novel. Roy Stewart, who contributed much to the success of "The Westerner," and "The Sagebrusher," has an equally powerful role in "Riders of the Dawn."

Beautiful and talented Claire Adams, an ingénue artist of unquestionable merit, is seen as the heroine, and Robert McKim, the noted heavy, forcefully injects a new brand of villainy.

Joseph J. Dowling, of "The Miracle Man" fame, suggests one of his beloved characterizations. Other notables in the roster of "Riders of the Dawn" are: Marc Robbins, Frederick Starr, Violett Schram, Marie Messenger, Frank Brownlee and Arthur Morrison, who also achieved no little distinction in "Desert Gold" and "The Sagebrusher."
Lew Cody Forecasts Good
Early Showings Indicate Success;
Special Campaign Book Is Issued

EARLY showings of "The Butterfly Man," in which Lew Cody is starred by Robertson Colly, is said to indicate that the predictions made by the distributing corporation as to the drawing power of this picture are being amply borne out. Advertisements sent to the executive offices from the twenty-five branches in the country will show an even greater success that was won by Mr. Cody in "The Beloved Father," which was the first of his new series produced by E. W. Davis for distribution by Robertson Colly.

To back up the acting of Mr. Cody, which is at its best in "The Butterfly Man," there is presented to the exhibition great diversity of exploitation opportunities on this picture. Feeling confident that this is one of the production which would mean an even greater success than its mere merits as a dramatic screen production, Robertson Colly is distributing this picture in conjunction with an imaginative campaign book to suggest to the exhibitor methods of exploitation.

Advantage is taken, first of all, of the great publicity which this title, moreover, its novelization, "The Butterfly Man," enjoyed a great vogue among American readers. Several methods of cashing in on the popularity of the writer are suggested in the press book, including a tie-up with both stores on the McCutcheon novel.

Adopt Commission Regime
Three Commissioners Will Guide Activities of Universal City

UNIVERSAL CITY, California, March 1—Universal City, which has adopted a commission form of government, it was announced this week at Universal headquarters, following the lead of other American communities, a committee of three has been appointed to administer the affairs of the little screen municipality. They are E. J. Bernheim, manager; Van Ronkel and Louis E. Leech, all three well-known in the film world. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal company, will hold rank as mayor of Universal City and be an ex-officio member of the committee. It was also announced that the Commission of Three will be supreme.

Since its inception in 1913, Universal City has been under a one-man government. The general manager, representing the Universal company in its capacity has been mayor, controller, police judge and everything else. The affairs of the little city have grown beyond the scope of one man, however, causing the change to the commission form of government.

The three commissioners will share the burdens of administration equally. Each will be known as production manager, Van Ronkel as studio manager and Leech as business manager. All phases of activities within the gates of Universal City have been catalogued under one of these three heads.

Bernstein was the first general manager of Universal City. He left Universal about five years ago with pictures and produced manager, Van Ronkel has been associated with the film industry for many years, although his name has never been identified directly in the production of pictures. Leech comes to Universal from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Wesley Barry to Be Starred
Neilan Will Make Series of Boy Stories; "Penrod" to be Filmed

M I A R C H A L L  A E H I D N I N . last week announced plans in connection with starring little Wesley Barry ("Redhead Kid") in a series of pictures which as yet been selected but it will be the first of a number of kid pictures in which Mr. Neilan has provided the boy with daily lessons in riding, boxing, swimming and hunting, besides which the youngster is receiving his general education at home through the expert eye of a private tutor.

To co-direct the initial Wesley Barry series at Universal, Marshall Neilan has just engaged Jack McDevitt. The two have been considered one of the most promising young directors in Hollywood journalism for the last year. McDevitt is well known in the trade, having been a director of excellent pictures at Famous Players-Lasky Company and prior to that with Universal. Reid Henshaw, who as above mentioned is co-director with Mr. Neilan of the story, will write the screen.

For the past year little Barry has been studying for stardom under Mr. Neilan's tuition. Aside from detailed lessons effecting his conduct before the camera, Mr. Neilan has provided the boy with daily lessons in riding, boxing, swimming and hunting, besides which the youngster is receiving his general education at home through the expert eye of a private tutor.

Selling Force Is Increased
Heavy Business Causes Enlarged
Staff in Hodkinson Organization

M R. W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces its intention of immediately enlarging its selling staff by fifty per cent. Mr. Hodkinson in speaking of the proposed increase, called attention to the circumstances which have made the enlargement of the selling organization an imperative necessity.

The progress of our organization and the constant improvement in the quality of our pictures have brought Mr. Hodkinson, "have naturally culminated in an increased volume of business, with which the present selling force is scarcely able to cope. We are, therefore—looking for the best material which can be found in the selling field of the industry. I want to take this occasion to point out the natural opportunity offered to young men gifted with energy and vision. These qualities are as essential as experience and much harder to find."

I hope that every man in the selling field who is looking for a career, rather than a mere job will send me his name. I want the best brains in the selling field, as well as every other department of our organization. The motion picture industry today offers a maximum of reward to a young man with ambition and the ability to think and look ahead."

Keenan Picture Due May 2
Strong Cast Announced for Pathe Star in His "Dollar for Dollar"

T HE first of the Pathe features to be released in the month of May is "Dollar for Dollar," a Frank Borzage production, among the best of the finest pictures in which the noted star has ever appeared. It will be released on May 2 and hundreds of exhibitors who have shared in the success of previous Keenan pictures have already booked it.

A strong cast is seen in support of Mr. Keenan, Kathleen Kirkham, Kate Van Buren, Jay Belasco and Kerrie Claire are among the well known faces in the supporting cast. Miss Kirkham will be remembered for her work in "The Master Mind," "Kate Van Buren and Jay Belasco were the youthful lovers in "Semi-Legends," and they have similar roles in the picture. Gertrude Clair duplicates her splendid work in "Brothers Divided." Others in the cast are Miss Larry, Steers and Harry Kendall.

All the strength that has characterized the previous work of Mr. Keenan is said to be found in "Dollar for Dollar." Several of the exteriors were staged at Bear Valley in the mountains of Southern California, and some unusual effects were achieved. The interiors are of the usual Keenan standard.

As may be inferred from the title, the theme is developed from the theory that as we sow we reap. A woman in this case turns blackmailer to avenge the death of her husband. One of the men the blackmailer became her enemy. Another becomes her sympathetic friend. The author, Ethel Watts Mumbard, gracefully unfolds her situation with Keenan as Marcus C grilled, disclosed as a power in the world of finance and politics. This man with power over the lives and fortunes of many people reveals the small, yet essential, qualities of a strong man of business when he discovers the woman blackmailer in her operations, a battle of wits between the two is created.

Releasing Plans for Butler Picture

Contracts are now in New York for the signing by one of the big distributing organizations for the distribution of the D. N. SchawProductions starring David Butler. The first production of this recently organized company, "Sitting on the World," has been shown, and so favorable were the comments that the picture was sold immediately, and contract for future releases negotiated.

Work has already been started on the second of the Butler subjects which is "Sailing All the Way," an adaptation from a recent magazine article prepared by Paul Schofield.

"Humoresque" Showing in Ritz-Carlton

"Humoresque," Cosmopolitan Productions' new feature picture, featuring Alma Rubens, directed by Frank Borzage, which is scheduled for release by Paramount-Archer on June 6, will be given a special private showing in the big ball room at the Ritz Carlton Hotel, New York, on May 4. Prominent men and women will be invited, among whom will be such noted philanthropists and captains of industry and finance as Jacob Schiff, Oscar S. Straus and many others.

and prominent business men of the Province of Alberta. The consensus of opinion at the outset fixed the purpose definitely in the minds of those who were to be entrusted with the production of the initial feature to bring forth a picture that would receive credit on Canadian activity in this line.

Will Produce in England

Famous Players to Work in London with British Stories and Locales

FILMING of British stage successes in England for distribution in the country, England and abroad, was declared by Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, upon his arrival aboard the Manhattan.

The plays include all of Sir James M. Barrie's successes, including "Peter Pan," "What Every Woman Knows," and "The Man of Property." A new play being written by Henry Arthur Jones and the famous Lasky script, "The Day," also are among the British stage successes which will be converted into motion pictures under the direction of Jesse L. Lasky, producing head of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"When I was in England," he asserted, "I received letters by the score congratulating me and my associates on our enterprise. The British people like American photographs, which are having a tremendous success throughout the British Empire, and the people we are in a position to supply them."
Hugh Ford Goes to Europe
To Take Charge of European Studios of F. P. Lasky Corporation

Hugh Ford, director-general of European studios of the famous Players-Lasky Corporation, left New York last week for London, where he arrived on May 13th. Since the first of the year, his trip has been postponed many times. This is due to the building conditions in England and the impossibility of preparing the new London studios of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., for immediate production of pictures. Everything is now ready, and the first picture is due to be shot by Mr. Ford, and it will be "The Sorrows of Satan," by Marie Corelli.

Mr. Ford has many things to say in regard to his contemplated activities with the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd. "My particular work will be in assisting to establish a British institution to develop British talent and produce pictures with an international appeal," he stated. "It is my firm belief that motion pictures will play a big part in keeping up the spirit of friendliness and good feeling between the United States and Great Britain by the production of pictures with an international appeal. By developing new British talent and writers, and interchanging them between our New York and West Coast studios, and the leading British studios in the European studios, it is bound to bring about a common interest in motion pictures between the two countries and a common interest in any one thing is bound to increase the friendliness and good feeling.

"A complete lighting system has been sent abroad to introduce the American lighting system, the possibilities of which have not been capitalized upon by the British. They do not use the Cooper-Hevylit lights, and the Sunlight are in a comparatively recent invention, so it was necessary to send a shipment of these lights ahead of us.

"I am very enthusiastic over the possibilities of the natural settings offered by Britain in the springtime, and very eager to get started."

S-L Production is Started
Work Begins on "Love, Honor and Obey" at Metro's New York Studio

With Maxwell Karger, director general, in full charge, Metro's New York studios at No. 3 West Sixty-first street resumed production this week. The first production to get under way is Eugene Walter's production of the popular novel by Charles Neville Buck. This picture, an S-L Production which Metro will distribute, is being made under the working title of "Love, Honor, and Obey."

Eugene Walter recently joined Metro's staff of distinguished authors and "Love, Honor and Obey" is the famous playwright's first screen dramatization under Metro auspices.

"Love, Honor and Obey" is to be interpreted by an all-star cast and every effort is being devoted to making this, the first of the five S-L pictures for Metro release this year, a notable special production. Mr. Walter, as photo-dramatist, is giving personal assistance in the setting and direction of the story, being "on the set" throughout the day while the cast is at work.

With Bennett, the principal of the current stage success, "Apple Blossoms," has the leading feminine roles in "Love, Honor and Obey."

More Time to Two-Reelers
Unusual Time, Energy and Expense Given Short-Lengths by Universal

According to Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, who is at present giving his attention to the affairs of the studios at Universal City, "there is an ever increasing demand for short material of the highest grade, and his organization will be the first to heed the call of the exhibitors.

"The managers of the cinema theatres have discovered that the five-reel feature is the most desirable length, as almost any story can be told in that footage," says a statement from the Universal offices. "This leaves considerable room for program fillers, and the public desires the quality of the short subjects to be on a par with that of the feature productions.

Universal therefore decided to devote unusual time, energy and expense to the production of two-reel subjects of the highest quality—taffлад stories that will occupy the same position in the picture world that the one-set drama does on the stage or the high class short story does in the field of literature. Some of the best directors on the lot of Universal will devote the next two months to the filming of two-reel productions that will be featured in every respect except footage."

Jack Ford, who produced Harry Carey's biggest success, "Marked Men," is now at work on a two-reel story entitled "Two from Texas," with a cast of unusual strength. This miniature drama is being enacted by J. Farrell McDonald, Ethel Ritchie, Bennie Lee, Dick Cumings, John Walters, and Jack Woods.

Philip Rosen, the man who filmed "The Miracle Man," and who recently produced "The Road to Re- vore," with Mary MacLaren, and "The Path She Choos," with Anne Cornwall, has started on a two-reel pastoral drama entitled "Neath Purple Skies," from the pen of Alma Haan. Chief in the cast will be Maeda Lane, Alfred Regnier, Clarence Hodge, and Joseph Neary.

SPEEDING UP ON BIG SPECIAL
Robertson-Cole Expects to Have Carpentier Picture Ready May 30

HURGED by continuous demands from exhibitors who are anticipating all records in the production of the Carpentier "million dollar production" in full time for the pre-release, which is scheduled for May 20th.

In the studio at Fort Lee, N. J., where the interiors are being made, the company under the direction of M. G. Carpentier, is working morning and night. Carpentier has cancelled engagement after engagement so that he can devote nearly every one of his waking hours to furthering the desires of all those interested, it is stated by Robertson-Cole.

Notwithstanding the speedy work, nothing is being left unattended and every picture may be completed and ready for release within the shortest possible time.

The Robertson-Cole Exchanges throughout the country have been unable to answer all inquiries regarding the production owing to their volume, it is stated; but every letter is being answered in the order that it is received. Extra help is being engaged in all offices to handle the additional work that has resulted from the Carpentier production, and everybody is said to be working at top speed.
Believe Curwood Story Will Smash Records

That the booking records of any previous Vitagraph special production will be smashed by the forthcoming James Oliver Curwood production, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," is becoming more apparent each day, according to the producers. Every mail brings contracts from the larger cities served by that company's various exchanges. The advance exploitation received by this film, however, seems to have created interest everywhere, and several hundred managers of theatres in the smaller centers have already booked it.

Vitagraph officials say that there is every evidence that even the records hinged up by "Over the Top" will be smashed. This prediction was based on the figures tallied this week, which showed that in addition to the big city bookings, several hundred smaller towns had booked the film.

Ruby De Remer Dines Marcus Loew

Ruby De Remer gave a Swedish supper party at her home, 32 West Sixty-seventh street, on Friday evening of last week, at which Marcus Loew was the guest of honor. The party was in the nature of a "reunion" of those who accompanied Mr. Loew during his tour of the South some time ago. Two reels of motion pictures taken during the course of the Southern trip were shown to the guests. Doris Duke, who was also a member of the traveling party, entertained by dancing in Hawaiian costumes, accompanied by her four Hawaiian musicians.

Wilda Bennett to Make Debut With Metro

Wilda Bennett, who has been engaged to play the leading role in "Love, Honor and Obedy," the S-I Special production to be distributed by Metro, was selected from a number of prominent actresses who were given camera tests for the role of Connie Williams, at Metro's New York studios. In this role Miss Bennett will make her first screen appearance.

Vitagraph's Releases for May

A MONG the Vitagraph productions scheduled for release during the month of May are:

Larry Semon in "School Days," which was written and directed by the star, is another one of the many special productions from the studio by Albert Payson Terhune, directed by George Terwilliger, and Earle Williams in "A Master Stroke," from the novel by Frederick Van Rensselaer Dey, directed by Chester Bennett.

It is believed by Vitagraph that these plays represent an exceptionally good selection from the exhibition point of view.

Vitagraph has issued the following statement concerning the character of the productions scheduled for release during May:

"As in his former comedies, Larry Semon has a well connected story in his new comedy, 'School Days.' The earlier scenes show Larry and his supposed friend, the leading the woman in a special production by J. Frank Fraser from the story by Albert Payson Terhune, directed by George Terwilliger, and Earle Williams in "A Master Stroke," from the novel by Frederick Van Rensselaer Dey, directed by Chester Bennett.

"As in his former comedies, Larry Semon has a well connected story in his new comedy, 'School Days.' The earlier scenes show Larry and his supposed friend, the leading the woman in a special production by J. Frank Fraser from the story by Albert Payson Terhune, directed by George Terwilliger, and Earle Williams in "A Master Stroke," from the novel by Frederick Van Rensselaer Dey, directed by Chester Bennett.

"It is believed by Vitagraph that these plays represent an exceptionally good selection from the exhibition point of view.

A S far as the advertising that the Equation Pictures Corporation is carrying on for 'The Forbidden Woman,' the presentation of an entire campaign book in "The Exhibitor," a trade journal, is descriptive of a vital motion picture talk by the Equity offices. The statement follows:

"It has long been conceded that the motion picture industry, having within its personnel some of the most energetic, vital and wide awake business men in the country — men who are accustomed to tackling the very hardest sort of problems and accomplishing the apparently impossible — but the most daring proposition that has come up to date, is the insertion by Beul Amsterdam, of Equity Productions, Philadelphia, of the entire publicity and advertising campaign book of 'The Forbidden Woman' on the magazine advertising campaign book of "The Forbidden Woman" as an advertisement in "The Exhibitor," a trade paper with a circulation of many thousand copies.

"Mr. Amsterdam certainly hit the bull's eye once he decided to place the colored insert of twenty-six pages — Equity's hackle, stock and barrel — intact, and when exhibitors opened their April 15th trade issue to find Equity's complete volume, cover included, wait-
Universal Exchange in Buffalo Is Moved
Universal's Buffalo exchange soon will be ready to move into its new offices, it is reported by R. H. Goldstein, assistant to H. M. Ber- man, general manager, for the big film company. Goldstein has just returned from a three-day trip to New York, revising the layout of the new up-state offices. The new exchange will house two floors and will be equipped with every modern convenience for the benefit of exhibitors and for the efficient distribution of film products. It was laid out by H. F. Hopkins, manager of the Buffalo branch, and A. A. Schmidt, departmental chief, for Universal's Great Lakes districts.

The Cohns Announce Another Novelty Reel
Closely following the announcement of "Screen Snapshots," the new bi-monthly release, Jack Cohn is about to launch another novelty reel, which will be issued every other week, and so, with "Screen Snapshots" offer a weekly short subject feature to exhibitors, the year round.

"Laughographs" is the title of the new reel. This subject is composed of a succession of animated jokes, a varied assortment of gags and gags, and is said to be entirely new in its conception. The first issue is now ready for release.

Yudkin Leaves to Visit Independent Exchanges
Herbert N. Yudkin, the origin- tor of Screen Smiles, the novelty topical film now being distributed by Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., left New York this week for a trip to the leading independent exchanges in the interest of Screen Smiles. Mr. Yudkin carries with him prints of the last three releases and will visit independent exchanges in Philadelphia, Washington, Balti- more, Pittsburg, Indianapolis, Cleveland, and Detroit.

Baker Makes Plans For Tarkington Pictures
Tarkington Baker, who is to pro- duce the Booth Tarkington pictures, has returned from Indianapolis where he was in conference with the Tarkington pictures. Production, Mr. Baker announced, will be begun within the next few weeks, probably on the "Cov-

More Prints Necessary to Satisfy Demand
The demand for "Sex," J. Parker Reed, Jr.'s Louise Glenn produc- tion, from every section of the country has reached the point of additional prints the past week to twenty-two of the Hubbell exchanges.

Last week "Sex" created two picture records in Des Moines, playing to the largest business ever done on a picture in the Iowa metropolis.

Among the smaller first run houses that have arranged to play the picture temporarily from their usual week-to-week policy to give the Louise Glenn production a week's presentation are: The Mecen Palace, Saukville, Mich.; the Grand, Rusk- lad, WI; the Grand Dumpster, Nashville, D. J.; the Colonial, Aberdeen, D. S., and the Grand, Reno, Nev.

Enid Mayo Is Head of New Film Company
A picture producing company headed by a former star is the latest development in filmmaking. Enid Mayo is the name of the adventur- ous lady and the company known as the Colonial Film Producing Company. Miss Mayo herself is president, John S. Whiting is secre- tary and Paul Castellani, treasurer. The board of directors is made up of capitalists and business men. The advisory board is chosen from the stockholders, and the whole concern is stated to be backed by big moneyed men.

"Flying A" Release to Star Mary Minter
"Peggy Rebels," starring Mary Minter, will soon be put on the market by the American Film Company. The "Flying A" statement on the forthcoming release maintains that in this picture Miss Minter "is unquestionably at her best as a bewitching water sprite and later as a dream of a girl ar- rayed for her first ball, with the manner and vocabulary of an old farce." The drama, in five acts, in- cludes in its cast Alan Forrest, George Periolat, Jack Connolly and Adele Farrington. The scenario was written by Elizabeth Mahoney and the direction was by Henry King.

Edgar Lewis Assembles Strong Line-Up
Pathé announces that a strong cast marks the line-up for Edgar Lewis's newest production, "Sher- ry," which is to be released via the Pathé exchange. Leading the cast is Pat O'Malley, and opposite- him is to appear Lillian Halli. Others in the cast are Harry Spanger, Richard Cummings, Maggie Holloway Fisher, Gertrude Norman and Scott McKee.

"Sherry," which is an adaptation of George Barr McCutcheon's novel, is to have given Mr. Lewis another opportunity to display his skill in producing striking on- screen productions.

New "Torchy" Comedy Started at Cliffside
Walter was started this week at the Cliffside studios on the second of the "Torchy Comedies," starring Johnny Himes. "A Knight for a Night" is the working title of this production which is made from a group of stories in the first volume of the creation of Sewell Ford. The first of the series, known simply as "Torchy," has already been given to pre-release card at the Strand theatre and an effort will be made to finish three of the comedies before the first release is made through Educational Films Corporation.

Robert Gordon Cast for Vitagraph Special
Robert Gordon, who has been co- starring in a long series of pictures in Blackstone productions, is said to have obtained a release to play the leading male role in the Vitagraph special "Dollars and the Woman," with Alice Joyce. It is reported that Gordon will sign very soon with another company for a long term contract providing he can secure a permanent release from the Blackstone company. His present contract extends until July.

Four Vitagraph Comics Have Been Completed
New Vitagraph comedies, recently completed at Vitagraph's West Coast studios, are announced this week as follows: Jimmy Aubrey in "Pals and Fugs"; Montgomerty and Rock in "Sauce and Snarbons"; Jimmy Aubrey in "Fats and Fodder"; Joe Rock in "Nymphs and Nuisances."

Four additional comedies, com- pleted under Vitagraph's supervision, have been finished and are being shipped East for testing and editing this week.

Contest Winner Plays in Two Reel Western
Hoot Gibson is supported by Virginia Faire, the winner of a recent "Ransonome" contest, in the "Ransonome," Universal's new western two reeler. The picture will be released May 10th.

The fourth episode of "Elmo the Fearless," featuring Elmo Lincoln, and the third episode of "The Moon Riders" with Bert Acton, Mildred Moore, constitute the serials releases for the week.
The Most Important Announcement

EQUITY ever made

THE Motion Picture industry at large is aware of the fact that EQUITY is not in the habit of making promiscuous or meaningless announcements. Exhibitors especially, knowing EQUITY'S policy of truth, will understand the full meaning of what follows.

We are about to release our latest Clara Kimball Young picture—"FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL," Marah Ellis Ryan's love story of old California. "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL" surpasses "Eyes of Youth" in dramatic action and box office power, attested to by the action of Mr. Sidney Grauman of Los Angeles, who broke his long established policy of playing no pictures other than those of one prominent Producing Company, and who further, for the first time in the history of his house, booked any outside picture for an indefinite run—thus, it is with pleasure we announce that—
HARRY GARSON presents

CLAARA KIMBALL YOUNG

"For the Soul of Rafael"

Marah Ellis Ryan's Magnificent Love Story of Old California

"FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL" had its premiere at Grauman's Rialto Theatre in Los Angeles, Sunday, April 21st.

Congratulations telegraphic reports, too long for publication here, contain such statements as "Opened to capacity—smashing success," etc.

If you recall the nation-wide success of "Eyes of Youth" you can perhaps imagine what "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL" must be when we state that "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL" is a finer picture than "Eyes of Youth."

Elaborate exploitation, such as has never been seen for any picture, has been prepared for "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL."

Playing engagements are now being arranged through all Equity Franchise Holders.

Watch for further announcements.

AEOLIAN HALL - NEW YORK
Margaret Loomis Signs with F. P. Lasky

Margaret Loomis has signed a five-year contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, according to announcement made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production. Miss Loomis' first work under her new contract will be in William DeMille's special production, adapted from Leonid Andreyev's story, "Conrad in Quest of His Youth." She and Kathryn Williams will have the leading feminine roles while Thomas Meighan will play the name part.

Two years ago, Miss Loomis gave up dancing in favor of the screen. Her work as Modesty in "Everywoman," won her widespread popularity. She has been leading woman in the last two Paramount Aircraft pictures, featuring Bryant Washburn.

Signal Company Gets Atlanta Franchise

The Signal Amusement Company, with its independent theatre holdings in the South, have acquired the franchise for the Atlanta territory in the Associated Exhibitors, Inc. This territory includes all of Georgia and most of Tennessee, Alabama and Florida. The present holdings at Chattanooga are the Reliable, the Acahear, Fine Arts, Bijou, Lyric, Saperon, Bonita, American, Royal and Post theatres, and their interests in Knoxville include the Strand, Majestic, Queen, Rex and Bijou theatres. The Palace and Princess theatres, Murryville, Tenn., are also owned by the Signal.

The foregoing houses are representative of a rapid expansion and progress of the Signal Company, for at the present time they are said to be under construction several theatres in various cities and plans formed for more

Eric Von Stroheim, who joumied to American fame with his production of "Blind Husbands," has a new success to his credit in "The Devil's Pass Key," also a Universal picture, as it is found in literature. As a result, there is no limit on footage for master film productions. Sixteen and ten-reel photographs are not unusual in the present European market.

They are able to work towards a literature of the screen. Their work is receiving recognition by the class. The class are learning and particular classes of society. Moving pictures in Europe are getting a certain class of select patronage that in this country has a tendency to look ahead on the screen.

"Foreigners Are Catching Up"

That the American film industry has just as much to learn from foreign competition as any other branch of American commerce is shown by the recent upsurge in production of American films. Foreign producers rapidly are catching up, in cinematographic technique, with the strides made by American producers while Europe's film business is being knocked about by the superior quality of foreign films. American films will soon vie with American films, not only in Europe and America, but also in America, in Hollywood.

"American producers had better look out for foreign pictures," said Stroheim admiringly, upon his arrival in New York to supervise the final editing of his latest Universal-Jewel production, "The Devil's Pass Key." In France, England, Italy, and even in Germany, film producers backed by foreign money, are advancing in the position they held before the war. They have learned the lessons of America and are moving up quickly, and will master all of the latest arts and crafts in the business. Foreign literature is different from American literature, so foreign pictures play different from American pictures," he said.

Foreign writers, go more into the deeper relationships of mankind than do American authors. They depict more motion and less of the frivolities of life. This is reflected on the European screen. Foreign producers and distributors also have learned that in a five-reel picture you cannot build up the scenes of characters and the development of a complicated plot as is found in literature. As a result, there is no limit to footage for master film productions. Sixteen and ten-reel photographs are not unusual in the present European market.

They are able to work towards a literature of the screen. Their work is receiving recognition by the class. The class are learning and particular classes of society. Moving pictures in Europe are getting a certain class of select patronage that in this country has a tendency to look ahead on the screen.

Conservation Films are Coming

Starting with the opening of its new exchanges, Educational Films Corporation will release the motion picture productions of the Conservation Commission of the State of New York. In making this announcement this week, E. W. Hammond, vice-president and general manager, pointed out that it had special significance. These pictures were "so conceived as to have great drawing power," said Mr. Hammond, "and a general appeal to audiences, but it is more important that their acquisition gives more evidence that Educational Films Corporation is recognized by officials and semi-public bodies everywhere as the proper medium for release. These organizations see in Educational films a more effective medium for distribution, but it company that maintains the atmosphere of the high quality educational is the first and only company to distribute pictures of the National Geographic Society, which has shown association with any other film organization. For some months there have been distributing the official pictures of the American Red Cross, which are being made abroad, and two expeditions of the Interchurch World Movement and these pictures will be supplied through Educational exchanges. We have very close relations with several other organizations. It should be pointed out that these organizations are not, however, the only organizations that the companies have selected Educational because it offers the assurance that the pictures will go to the class of people that it is desired to reach."

The New York Conservation Commission has been engaged in making motion pictures for its own special uses for several years, under the active supervision of Mr. Alfred E. Strong, director of the commission. This work has not only supplied the necessary information for the pictures, but has convinced the members of the commission of the desirability of having proper distribution methods through the nation. The pictures will be offered for general release, in single reels, starting in New York State and being distributed throughout the United States.

"Twelve Plan Book Reviews in This Issue"
Criterion Theatre Opened
Hugo Riesenfeld Gives "Unified Program": Interior Is Improved

The Criterion theatre ushered in another chapter of its career at 7:30 p.m. last Saturday when it opened its doors under new management and presented the first of Hugo Riesenfeld's programs in that home. Max Cooper is manager of the Criterion under the Riesenfeld regime. The entire performance was a demonstration of what Mr. Riesenfeld calls "the unified program"; either by suggestion, music, or color effects, Mr. Riesenfeld aimed to link up every part of the presentation with De Mille's production, "Why Change Your Wife.

The program, including the overture, the forty-five minutes of incidental shrills and entertainment, and the feature picture, "Why Change Your Wife," occupied two hours. The work of the orchestra both in accompanying the pictures with music selected by Hugo Riesenfeld, and in playing the overture, deserves commendation. The conductor of the Criterion orchestra, Victor Wagner, who has been associated with Mr. Riesenfeld both abroad and here for many years, and was cellist of the Rialto orchestra, is not new to the conducting field. He was conductor of the Irving Place theatre Orchestra during its halcyon days. His work naturally discloses the fact that he is a novice. The orchestra though concealed is a strengthened and integral part of the novel picture presentation.

Preliminary to the feature picture there was flashed on the screen a series of small bits from various scenes. Hugo Riesenfeld titled it, "Beautiful Things," which had introduced the audience to a land of beauty with a runaway pup for a guide. The Criterion, quintette, which did a little dancing before and after the picture, was good to look upon. Helen Shipman, who was featured in the prelude, was convincing in her interpretation of "Why Change Your Wife," won applause.

Sixty thousand dollars in four days, and a snowfall of three inches, was the success of a three days' engagement at the Criterion. The first week's gross was a smash record and the second week's receipts were expected to be even larger and more profitable.

H. H. Van Loan in New York
Youthful Screen Writer Confers with Producers on Future Work

H. H. Van Loan, author of many plays, whose latest success is in the Universal feature starring Priscilla Dean, "The Virgin of Stamboul," has reached the pinnacle of his profession and has his success to his exceptional experiences and his persistent determination in continuing to put forth stories of real and actual picture producers recognized their value, and the rest was easy sailing.

In Old Kentucky Continues to Score
Auta Stewart's massive production, "In Old Kentucky," has secured the biggest grosses to smash theatre box office records throughout the country, it is stated. In Schu's Hippodrome, Buffalo, last week the grosses proved that the picture had secured a figure never before approached by any attraction. Nearly $1,500 was taken in Sunday, according to reports, and business all week was absolute capacity.

That letter in the back of the book is coming next week. Too busy this week to attend to it.

Clara Young Has Second Big Week in West
Equity Pictures' latest Clara Kimball Young's production, "For the Soul of Rafael," an adaptation from Marah Ellis Ryan's novel of the golden days of Southern California, is nearing the completion of its second big week at Grant's theatre, Los Angeles. The production has broken all box-office records in the theatre, and has been a constant success throughout the entire engagement. In fact, it is the only production that has lived up to its admirers' expectations.

The story is set in the heart of the Southern California, and the plot is designed to be both exciting and fascinating. It is really superbly staged and played by the talented companies that have been assembled for the production. Among the principal players are Clara Kimball Young, who plays the title role; John Davidson, who plays the part of Rafael; and Mary Miles Minter, who plays the part of the mysterious and fascinating heroine.

The story is full of excitement and adventure, and is sure to appeal to the masses. It is a fine example of the power of pictures to tell a story with pictures and music. The scenic effects are magnificent, and the photography is superb. The acting is excellent, and the production is a credit to the industry.

Minter's Next Announced
Realart Star Will Be Seen in Picturization of Society Novel

For four years, Miss Minter has been a star of the Realart Pictures Corporation, and has made a number of fine pictures, including "The Woman of the Century," "The Virgin of Stamboul," "The Legend of the Sea," and "The Corsican Woman." Her new picture is a社会 novel, and will be one of the most interesting productions of the season. Miss Minter is one of the most versatile actresses on the screen, and her performances in her previous pictures have been universally praised. She is a fine actress, and her work in this new picture will be a delight to her admirers.
Sennett Comedy Goes Over in Frisco

Mack Sennett’s “Down on the Farm,” his new big five reel comedy which is being released by United Artists Corporation, made a tremendous hit with the critics of San Francisco, upon its first showing in this country at the Imperial theater, announces a report from the United Artists’ offices.

The Imperial theater set aside the week as its comedy week for the year and presented “Down on the Farm” in a lavish manner, bringing to the theatre capacity business during the entire week, it is stated.

Thomas N. Warren of the San Francisco Examiner in his review of the production said: “This is funny week at the Imperial Theater and if your doctor says it will kill you, laugh, be sure that you stay away from the Imperial. Mack Sennett’s “Down on the Farm” is the funniest comedy I have ever seen on the screen.”

Gordon on the Alert for “Boy” Stories

Supplementing the recent announcement of the proposed organization of the Robert Gordon Productions Company, featuring Robert Gordon, comes the statement that Gordon has been the recipient of a great many letters, requesting more pictures in which the heart interest is centered in a boy character. It is the announced policy of the forces, contemplating an independent Gordon company, to feature the actor in stories of this sort as far as available material permit. Mr. Gordon, in the course of a recent statement, said that while he has an interest in roles depicting young manhood, he has become strongly impressed with the demand for boy characterizations.

“The Splendid Hazard” Seen by Executives

The film adaptation of Harold Macgraw’s novel “The Splendid Hazard,” produced and directed by Allan Dwan at the Brunot studios at Los Angeles, is the most important of foreign pictures in New York last week to the executives of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. Louis G. Gottschalk, the studio’s general manager, has prepared a special operative score from the masters of music which gives an added dignity to the production.

South American Rights Sold

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION’S intensive exploitation campaign is being developed in South America. “The Silver Horde,” to be shown at the Capitol theatre, New York, of May, has in the distribution of United States in the South American market. American productions have almost cornered the foreign market, therefore, before the war, I don’t think the United States had as much as five per cent in the market there. Nearly ninety-five per cent came from France and Spain. I never could have imagined such rapid development in the industry as has taken place there. So far as the exhibitors are concerned, South America is keeping right abreast of the United States. In the big cities, theatres are being erected that can equal on par with the best on Broadway, New York, and the demand for good pictures is growing all the time.

“The producers there have much the same as in the United States, a little cheaper if anything. The runs of the show are about the same, the feature that’s different, however, is the division of the shows into sections. For instance, you can have sets for 90 cents, a set for the first section of the performance, starting at 9:15. That would include the news pictures and a part of the feature picture. The next section, starting at 9:45, would include the other part of the feature picture. The 10:15 section would be devoted to a comedy. In this way a person sees the part of the show he wants without having to see the whole business. Distribution company owns all the names and stock throughout the show.

“The production of pictures in South America itself has made little headway, although there is some production on a small scale, but it doesn’t compare in quality with the American product. The number of foreign pictures has increased in the last few months, and there is a lack of directors and motion picture actors. Meanwhile the people are satisfied with the imported product, and I think they will continue as long as it continues to give satisfaction.”

Goldwyn Plans Big Campaign

Co-operative advertising in newspapers is being arranged with dealers in order to build a temporary campaign feasible. For example, retail fish stores are being induced to make a special feature of using “The Silver Horde” as a catalin in, whereas a number of sporting goods concerns are preparing to push the sale of the fish hunter, making "The Silver Horde" window display as the central point of interest in their advertising. Grocery stores have an opportunity to hasten their canned goods interest in connection with “Silver Horde” exploitation.

Another phase of the campaign that has been favorably received by a number of the leading hotels and restaurants is the featuring of “The Silver Horde” salons on their menus. Negotiations are now under way with Alfred McCann, the food expert, with a view to having him endorse the production in a way that will arouse interest in the industrial aspect of the fish industry in schools and colleges especially among those who are taking courses in economics.

For street exploitation a float carrying an Arctic set is being prepared, with an automobile rigged up with a special body representing a fish. During the week of the engagement at the Capitol these displays will be seen on Broadway, Fifth avenue and other important thoroughfares. In New York,Submit, published by the New York Times, the man who wrote “The Silver Horde,” will be distributed in large quantities. Dupes of boys are assigned to different parts of the city. The exploitation campaign to be submitted is being handled by Howard Doug, manager of publicity for Goldwyn, and G. L. Brightman, manager of the exploitation department.

Through special arrangement with the Whitney, Vitagraph has secured the services of Miss Evan Barrons Fontaine, a featured dancer, for the New Amsterdam, playing at the New Amsterdam theatre, for a big special dance scene. Miss Fontaine is a celebrated dancer and is a big favorite with the New York public.

Things are just humming with us so the letter in the back of the book cannot appear until next week.
Campaign Creates Interest
European Magazines Wants News of Paramount Pictures for Fans

The interest aroused by the world-wide publicity and advertising campaign for Paramount Artcraft pictures conducted by the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of E. F. Shaver, was emphasized during the week by the receipt of a calendar from Film en Kine, one of the leading Scandinavian film magazines, requesting immediate shipment of many stories and photographs for use in early issues of the magazine, in addition to the regular photograph and story service supplied exclusively to this magazine.

The magazine is published in Christiania, Norway, and has a wide circulation throughout the Scandinavian countries. It is regarded as one of the most artistic and popular fan magazines published in Europe, and is noted for its art work. For months this magazine has been using a large amount of space for stories and photographs of Paramount Artcraft pictures.

The March issue devoted twenty-four pages to film stories and photographs of which sixteen were given to Paramount Artcraft, two of English productions, three to Scandinavian, one to other American and two to general film news.

The last two pages carried a general story on the salaries of leading film stars, and much of this space discussed the earnings of Paramount Artcraft stars. This number was not an exception to the general rule, for Paramount Artcraft has been allotted more space than that given to all other American and European productions.

First Run Exhibitors
Book "Deep Purple"

A number of important first run exhibitors gathered this week in the projection room of Redpath Pictures Corporation to view "The Deep Purple," an R. A. Walsh production, presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, and declared the picture to be the best of the noted director's career.

Edward Bowes, managing director and Thomas F. Walker, director of film, at the Capitol theatre, were present and at the close of the showing announced that they would run the feature in the big Broadway theatre during the week of May 2nd.

Goldwyn Campaign Surprises Philadelphia

Co-operating with the Stanley Company of America, the Philadelphia office of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation inaugurated the initial presentation of William A. Wellman's "Water, Water Everywhere" in the Victory Theatre, with the most intensive exploitation Philadelphia has ever witnessed. The campaign opened two weeks prior to the showing, with every angle of attack in force to insure the success of the picture.

"The Honey Bee" Gains Increased Favor

The following statement has been submitted by the American Film Company on the way that its release, "The Honey Bee," featuring Mme. Marcelle Nef, is being received by exhibitors:

"The Honey Bee" is going forward with a cumulative popularity which is most interesting. Its fame is spreading and it will soon go on its own impetus with scarcely the need of salesmen's introducions. The proof of this is the come-back list from those who conservatively booked for a few days."

Look out for the letter in the back of the book next week. Rushing business prevented me writing this week.

Star Returns to the Studio
Bessie Love Back After Taking Exteriors in Rio Vista Valley

Bessie Love and the cast of her first Andrew J. Callaghan Production have returned to their Los Angeles studios. This week after a long period devoted to exterior shooting in the Rio Vista country. The demands of "The Madmillers," the Charles Tenney Jackson novel which the star in adapting to the screen were such that special emphasis was placed on accurate and colorful location work.

Directors Ed Max Park and Joseph de Grasse, who have created a new departure in film circles by collaborating in supervision of Miss Love's projects, that the exterior scenes made in Rio Vista will give the first production of the star a unique tone in that aspect of the film alone.

In many of the exteriors Miss Love was able to get over her appealing ingenue character with touching effect and these, according to her directors, will stand out as the best work this capable young actress has ever done.

In accordance with their plan to develop all branches of production activity with the same care for quality, the Callaghan organization announces this week that Bernard McConville, who wrote the continuity for Mary Pickford's "The Hoodlum," and "Heart of the Hills" will do the continuity for the Bessie Love company.

This is Frances Gough, Pathé's star comedic writer, who has just completed the script for Ruth Roland's new serial, "Broadway Bill."

Scripts Ready for Two Vitagraph Pictures

C. Graham Baker, associate editor of the Vitagraph scenario department at the Brooklyn studio, recently finished writing the pick-up stories of special vehicles for Alice Joyce and Corinne Griffith, two of that company's first-string stars. The two stories referred to are "The Vice of Fools," by Frances James, and "The Whisper Market," by W. E. Scott. These will be put into production at an early date.

"The Vice of Fools," in which Miss Joyce will appear, is a society comedy drama and the "Whisper Market" is a tale of South American intrigue.

Comedy Is Bought for Lyons and Moran.

"Fixed by George," one of Edgar Franklin's recent novels, has been bought by Universal. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. It will be produced as a five-reel comedy. Franklin has come to be recognized as one of the leading writers of farce plots. Two of his stories recently put into film were "Everything but the Truth," a Universal film, starring Lyons and Moran, and "Don't Ever Marry," a Marshall Neilan production, released by Universal.

Schomer-Ross Agent Is Touring Key Cities.

Agnes Egan Cole is touring the country in the interests of the Schomer-Ross Productions and the Joe Brandt production. She is on the west coast this week, after having attended the Chicago Convention. The purpose of the trip is to get in touch with exhibitors and sale rights writers in the principal cities, including Pittsburgh, Detroit, Columbus, Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis, Denver, Dallas, Atlanta, Kansas City, Salt Lake City, Seattle, St. Louis, New Orleans and Atlanta.

American Cinema Picture Ready Soon.

"Stolen Moments," starring Marguerite Namara, is rapidly nearing completion, according to the American Cinema Corporation. The player at the present time are in the South, filling exteriors in at Savannah, Georgia, and St. Augustine, Florida. Miss Namara's role in the new production is described as one of wide-histrionic scope. Smart and ultra-fashionable gowns are also said to be a feature. Her second picture for American Cinema is to be started immediately upon the completion of this first production. It will be based on a script written by her husband, Guy Bolton.

Sporting Review on Screen

Bill Forman's "Pink Sheet" to Be Released Monthly by Capital Film

CAPITAL FILM COMPANY announces through its executive vice-president, Hugh Woody and H. Herbert Milligan, general manager, that it has just acquired the rights to and will distribute Bill Forman's Sporting Page "The Pink Sheet of the Movies," a novelty which it is sure to appeal to all sport-loving Americans. This announcement follows the announcement of last week that Capital had acquired "Witches Made in Gold," the picture released in the Texas Oil Fields by the M. A. Dodge Film Company. The "Pink Sheet of the Movies" is a magazine, and this is the first time it has been offered for sale. It will cover every form of sport which is popular in the United States, including, baseball, football, boxing, wrestling, golf, tennis, basketball, hockey, yachting, sailing, bowling, tennis, horse-racing, harness and auto-racing.

Every sport that can be found in the sporting pages of the daily newspapers can be seen in realistic action at the proper time in the Capital Film Company's "Pink Sheet of the Movies." The company has just announced the release of the new picture, which will be available immediately by the Capital Film Company.

Status of Foundation Film is Explained

In order that there be no misapprehension about the status of the Foundation Film Corporation, following the organization of the Blue Art Pictures, Inc., Murray W. Grifflin, who is president of both companies, has announced this week the operation of the two companies. According to Mr. Grifflin, Foundation will handle industrial and educational film business exclusively, while Blue Art will handle the features subjects and the regular run of short subjects.

Mickey Film Requests Item Be Corrected

The Mickey Film Corporation of Chicago advises that it controls only the American and Canadian rights to "The Woman He Chose," and not the world rights as was incorrectly stated in the issue of April 26th, page 459.

Helen Pierce Signs Up with Character

The Character Pictures Corporation announces the signing of Helen Pierce in "The Isle of Destiny." Miss Pierce is well known to the picture-going public, having appeared in many of the large feature productions in the last few years.
Christie Gives Vernon Long Term Contract

Buddy Vernon, who has long been a star comedian in Christie film productions, has just made another contract with the Christie Film Company, having completed the present motion picture in which he was featured exclusively in Christie comedies. Vernon's new contract is for several years and is to be for a period of several years.

Vernon was drafted into pictures from the stage several years ago when he was playing "Kid parts" with Kohl and Dill.

Inter-Ocean Disposes of Foreign Rights

Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, through Gus Schlesinger, manager of the Department of Foreign Film Sales, closed last week for the major portion of the foreign territorial rights to "An Adven-ture," according to a statement issued yesterday from the New York office of the company. While the manner in which this picture was acquired in the text of the statement, it is understood that he is the acquired title is the New York production market house distributing motion pictures in foreign territories.

Wm. Collier, Jr., Engaged by F. P.-Lasky Forces

William Collier, Jr., has arrived at the Lasky studios, Hollywood, Calif., to start work in an important role in "William D. Taylor's forthcoming special production for Paramount-Arcafilm. Collier, Jr., has been especially favored by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the stock company. He is the son of William Collier, Jr., at present starring in "The Boomtown," which is playing in New York.

"Gift Supreme" Sold in South America

"The Gift Supreme," recently acquired by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution, has been disposed of by playing in several Latin-American territories, according to a statement issued this week by George Spear, Manager of the Department of Foreign Film Sales for Inter-Ocean.

Definite Title Announced

"Up in Mary's Attic," Not "Some Baby," Title of Fine Arts Film

FINE ARTS PICTURES, INC., Murray W. Garson, president, in an announcement this week, states that the five-reel comedy purchased from the Ascher Enterprises, Inc., by Fine Arts, will be released under its original title of "Up in Mary's Attic" instead of "Some Baby," as was first planned. Several reasons prompt this move, chief among which is that more than a score of prominent exchange and theatre owners declared themselves favorable to the longer title.

This announcement is expected to set at rest conflicting rumors in the trade that Fine Arts is releasing a feature under the title "Some Baby," which title has been used in the past, and is therefore available for current release. To put money to aid exhibitors put this feature over in the broadest possible manner. The exploitation of all kinds, as well as cooperation in advertising, have been planned, and are being prepared by the Fine Arts advertising department. The exploitation of "Up in Mary's Attic" will make it known in every household in the country, says Fine Arts.

"Madonnas and Men" Is Almost Completed

The final scenes of the Jans Pictures, Inc., "Madonnas and Men," are being filmed. It is said that some of the most elaborate and unusual sets will be shown in this feature which presents a combination of ancient and modern times. As soon as these final scenes have been completed, all of the prints will be assembled and shown privately to the officials of the Jans organization.

B. A. Reiner, Inc., under whose personal supervision "Madonnas and Men" is being made, promises that it will be the latest piece of screencraft he has ever turned out.

Priest Reports Sales on Three Pictures

Robert W. Priest reports the following sales through the Film Market, Inc.: "Who Shall Take My Life," Associated Feature Film Company, 117 West 40th Street, New York, has been purchased by the State of Indiana; "The Spoilers," Independent Master Films, Inc., Detroit, for a large sum; "The Haplisi," State of Alabama; "The Spoilers," to F. J. Ober, Thermopolis, Wyo., for Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico (by assignment); "The Spellers," to Harry F. Greble, Pittsburgh, for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia.

"The House Without Children," to Pearce Films, New Orleans, for Louisiana and Mississippi.

"Empty Arms" Sold To Pioneer in New York

"Empty Arms," the sensational production from the studios of Park and Whiteside which has been purchased by the Pioneer for the territory of New York and northern New Jersey. At the showing at the Pioneer New York Exchange, Sidney Cohen, president of the Motion Picture League, will make the first sale for long showings in every house on his circuit which included the North Stable Empire, Tremont and McKinley Sueper-Theaters. "Empty Arms" has been given an extensive exploitation campaign in New York.

Fidelity Pictures Has Features Under Way

William G. Smith of the Fidelity Pictures Company, 117 West 40th Street, announces his next forthcoming release, which is now in the hands of making. The story was written and is being directed by Louis F. Harrison. Starring in this production are Thomas J. Carrigan, who is featured in "Wm. Fox's Checkers," and Agnes Osborne, who is now starring in the stage play of "The Bonedee," at the Fulton Theatre. This picture will be handled on a state-wide basis.

Surprise - Exploitation

Promised By numa

Numa Pictures Corporation, who have been reticent in announcing the disposition of "Return of Tarzan," announce that a unique and startling exploitation campaign will be handled simultaneously with the release of the production.
Marion H. Kohn Makes Announcements

The Marion H. Kohn Productions, which is now making "The Illiterate Detective" by Will Rogers, the Polly Moran comedies, Grace Gean westerns and "Smiling Bill" Jones comedies, has been granted articles of incorporation by the State of California to produce motion pictures. The main office will be in San Francisco; production will be conducted at the National Film studios, Hollywood. Mr. Kohn states that it is his intention to devote especial care to the construction of real logical plots for his short-length pictures. He believes that the story is the thing that gets the picture over, and accordingly has added several more writers to his scenario staff.

According to latest reports from the Kohn office, the Polly Moran comedies will be released as two-reelers instead of single-reelers as was originally announced. Polly Moran is now engaged in the finishing of "Sheriff Nell" pictures, the territory on which has already been disposed of to a considerable extent, according to word from Joe Brandt, eastern representative of the Kohn interests.

Wheeler Oakman Made Sol Lesser Star

As a result of his work with Annette Kellerman in her modern comedy drama, she has just completed for Sol Lesser, Wheeler Oakman, who was her leading man, will become a star in his own right under the Sol Lesser banner. Oakman has played the leading man's love interest in such hit productions as "The Spoder," "The Ne'er Do Well," "Mickey," and "The Virgin of Stamboul." Miss Kellerman, according to an announcement of Mr. Lesser, has refused an offer to return to the stage.

Jans Tells of Titles Advertising Value

In selecting the title for the Oliver Tell picture, "A Woman's Business," special attention was given to the exploitation possibilities, according to Herman J. Fans, president of Fans Pictures. "A Woman's Business" will permit of cooperative campaigns with merchants selling goods, lingerie, millinery and other women's goods.

News Notes from the West Coast

By J. C. Jessen

The largest building of its kind in the world, the new completed stage with a clear floor space of 37,500 square feet, is nearing completion and will be christened this week by Dustin Farnum for interior scenes for the film of "Big Happiness" and the Betty Compson picture. "Betty's Hat" is being directed by Colton Campbell, and Elholi Howe has been added to the producing organization of Robert Brunton. Brunton has completed arrangements for the filming of another serial for Pathé, which will feature the stunt work of George Tack who has been working with the company for several years. Brunton has also completed the material for a series of stunt pictures. Jack Cunningham, scenario writer for George B. Seitz's "A Tale of the West," is now working on the scenario for "Betty's Hat." The series will be shot entirely in the desert, and will feature the work of stuntman George Tack.

The new series at Universal City, headed by Isadore Bernstein, Production manager, took charge of the producing organization of the Universal Feature Film Distributing Company this week, and while no change in policy is announced, it is most probable the new arrangement will materially alter the manner of production.

President Carl Laemmle, who is now on the coast and expects to spend a portion of his time here, will retain the position of general manager. Isadore Bernstein, former head of the Universal west coast producing organization, and builder of Universal City, has been appointed to the position of production manager. Sam Van Rynke will be his assistant, and Louis Loeb, former auditor, will be the financial manager.

Isadore Bernstein was tendered a reception and a farewell for by Carl Laemmle, on Monday evening, April 19th, which was attended by all the members of the producing staff and all the Universal stars and directors served as an informal reception committee. One of the big stages was converted into a ballroom for a dancing where a negro jazz orchestra of ten pieces gave inspiration to many feet and some shoulders. A buffet luncheon was served late in the evening, and motion pictures were made.

"I have no statement to make other than I am very glad to be back in this position at Universal City," Mr. Bernstein said. "We are going to try and make the best pictures, and plans that we have already formulated insure that these subjects will be made by the happiest people of filmdom."

Much of the producing activities at Universal City center around the serial and short subject companies. Henry McRae is making the serial sequences for the serial production started in the Orient on which the producing company, headed by Marie Walcake, has been working since last September. It is estimated this work will require but three or four weeks. The cast in support of Miss Walcake includes Harley Tucker, Otto Leiberer, Wadsworth Harris, Elinor Fried and others.

Two serials are nearing completion. The Black Polo titled "The Vanishing Dagger," made under the direction of Edward Kull, and "The Missing Million," starring Art Acord under the direction of Albert Russell. The latter has episodes that were made in the Grand Canyon, Mojave Desert, and many scenes in the high Sierras. Four units are busy on two red subject stories. Jack Ford is making "Under Sentence," with Bob Anderson, Ethel Ritchie, J. Farrell MacDonald and others. Jacques Jaccard has started on theoland, "The Expression of the West," which will feature Leonard Chappman and Virginia Fair and many scenes in the west-mounted police tableau drama which will feature Leonard Chappman and Virginia Fair; and many scenes in the high Sierras. The first of the series is titled "The Scarlet Rider." "Hoot" Gibson has begun work on "The Bronze Kid," and Yvette Mitchell is leading woman. The direction is by Mack Wright. The fourth company is being directed by Paul Rosen making "Neath Purple Skies," in which Alfred Regnier and Magda Lane are featured.

Norman Darrow, whose most recent work was the direction of the Tsui Aoki in "A Tokio Siren," has been chosen to direct "Marina," which will feature Edith Roberts, and be put in production as soon as this actress' present subject, "Alias Miss Dodd," is completed.

There are five feature productions in the making. Lyons and Moran are beginning on the screen version of "La La Ulicle." Lynn Reynolds is directing the filming of "The Red Lane," Rollin Sturgeon is at work on "The Girl in the Two former "shop stick" artists, Patsy McInerney and Beryl Densmore, who made good in dramatic productions under Paramount-Aircraft guidance.

Rain," with James Liddy and Ann Cornell, and Harry Carney, directed by Reeves Bacon, is making "Human Stuff." The cast includes Mary Chassard, Ruth Fuller Golden, Fountains La Rue, Charles LeMay, Joe Harris and others. The fifth is titled "Alias Miss Dodd," with Edith Roberts as star.

F. P. LASKY

DIRECTOR GENERAL, C. B. DE MILLE this week, for the first time, gave out the title for his forthcoming production which is now completed so far as the making of scenes is concerned, and unless a change is made, the picture will be known as "Something About a Woman."" From the title, Mr. de Mille continues to make a dark secret of his picture.

Two very elaborate settings will be used this week at the Lasky Studio. One is that being used by Director George Melford for interior scenes in "The Decoration of a House," which will be finished this week, and when Mr. Melford will begin the making of "The Old Homestead." The other setting is that of an English cottage and surrounding grounds serving as the setting for "Conrad in Quest of His Youth." Replicas of New York street scenes are being built for the role of "The Red Rose." Picture of "The Life of the Party," newly story by Walter Woods.

"Barbaric proof" is to be Bryan Walsh's next production which will be put in the making as soon as the present film, "A Full House," is completed under the direction of James Craven, and Ethel Clayton will return to the studio after a short vacation to work in "The City Spree," which will be directed by Sam Wood. Miss Clayton has just completed the screen version of the Samuel Meron story, "All in a Night," which was directed by Paul Powell.

Frank E. Woods, production manager of the Lasky plant, is planning to leave for New York in a week or two on his annual trip to that city to go over with New York executives material suitable for pictures.

Famous Player-Lasky have purchased the "The Romance of a Norfolk County Parson," directed by Arthur V. Johnson, for release under the Lasky name. The former is a quick-moving, six-reel comedy to be directed by Sam Wood.

CHRISTIE

A. CHRISTIE has started in to make a two-reel comedy for release about July which will have the highest cast of any two-reel subject to come from this plant. The cast includes Harold Vernon, Xean Burns, Teddy Sampson, Vera Stedman and Charlotte Miriam.

Another two-reel subject is in the making under the direction of Wm. Boudine with a cast that includes Fay Tsheler, James Harrison, Charlotte Miriam and Ebbie Baker.

The Christie Company this week signed the contract of Hobart Vest, which provides that he will stay with the firm for the next two years.

Frederick Sullivan, director of comedies for Christie, has been loaned to the Selig Company for the making of a feature comedy drama. This work will be carried on at the Selig studios.

VIDOR

THE King Vidor Company is back from two weeks in the river district of Stockton, California, where they made exteriors for the Filmart Pictures, Blider story, "The Jacklite Man," and are now working at Jasper's Hollywood studios. While in the north a number of scenes were made in the vicinity of Murphys in the mining region. The film being made is spoken of as a gripping tale of a helpless, madman existence of a river vagabond. Character actors selected for this play are Harry Todd, Willis Marks, Fred Turner, Charles Arling, Lillian Leighton, James Corrigan and Claire MacDowell.

J. PARKER READ

THE new J. Parker Read Productions are now in the making at the Thomas H. Ince studios at Culver City. Robart Bosworth is playing in a South Sea Island subject titled, "Heddy McAllister," in which the principal supporting roles are taken by Anna Q. Nilsson and William Curtin. The company is leaving for a two-weeks location which will take them to the Santa Cruz Islands, 100 miles north of Los Angeles.

The Leon Shnau Company is working on a story, title of which has not been announced. Wesley Kugles is the director. James Kirkwood has been engaged to play the main role; Joseph Kihour takes a leading character role, and Omar Farrell has been cast for a role in this play.

HAMILTON

A. L. three of the Jesse D. Hamilton Production units are at work on as many subjects. The Blanche Sweet play is, "Leona Goes Hunting," and many of the exterior scenes were filmed recently by Director Henry King at San Francisco when the Prince of Wales was an interested spectator. Frank Elliott plays opposite Miss Sweet, and the cast is made up of Jay Bacon, Thomas Jefferson, Frank Leigh and Mayme Kelso. Sensational scenes are added to this adventure by the use of airplanes, hydroplanes and motor boats.

The first Robert Thornton production will be an adaptation from the novel "Half A Chance," and Mahlon Hamilton will play the featured role. The Fremont, a boat that has been used in a number of motion picture productions, has been leased for the filming of many scenes of this picture, and has been completely camouflaged to suit the needs of the story. The marine portion of the film will be taken at Balboa Beach. This play is from the book by Fred Iskahan. Milton Taylor and Sidney Ainsworth are the only members of this cast so far selected to support Mahlon Hamilton.

Dwight Cleveland, in charge of the Hamilton scenario department, is in New York for a conference with Howard E. Nutting, Mr. Hamilton's eastern representative, in the selection of a number of stories suitable for Blanche Sweet, H. B. Warner and William Desmond, as well as big stories appropriate for special productions to be made by Robert Thornton and Henry King. A recent purchase by Mr. Hamilton is "Big Dick," the most recent success of Frank Spearman. Jesse D. Hamilton has selected "The Brass Bottle," a stage play by E. Amey, as the next vehicle for H. B. Warner, which will give this actor a different role from anything he has previously played for films.

Edwin Stevens, who created the role of the Genut in the original stage production, has been engaged to portray that character in the film version.

BRUNTON

CONTINUITY has been prepared for the tenth and last Robert Brunton production under the present contract with J. Warren Kerrigan, and Director Ernest C. Ward will shortly go to Texas to make exterior scenes for this story, "The Feast of Opportunity," by Paige Philips. Fritzi Brunette has been engaged to play opposite Kerrigan.

The B. B. Hamilton production of Zane Grey's novel, "The U. P. Trail," has been completed under the direction of Hugh Ryan Conway. The principals of this cast are Roy Stewart, Margarette De La Motte, Kathleen Williams, Robert McKinn, Joseph Dowling and Virginia Caldwell.

WARNER

THE Al St. John unit of Warner Brothers producing organization has two Al St. John Comedies completed and ready for distribution through the First National exchanges. The first release will be April 15th, and is titled, "Trouble."

CHICAGO, ILL.
Washington Heights Section of New York to Have Large Theatre
Moss to Have Coliseum Ready for June 1st Opening

So rapid has been the development in motion picture theatre construction in New York and vicinity that a new theatre causes scarcely a ripple on the phlegmatic surface of old man Knickerbocker. In fact, the city has been pretty well covered with an excellent line of motion picture houses. But now comes B. S. Moss with a theatre on Washington Heights at 181st Street that has the distinction of being the largest house outside the Times Square district. This latter is a point worthy of a moment’s attention.

The foundation for the Coliseum, as it will be called, was started quite a few months ago but further progress was slow, due to the slump in the building industry. During the last few months, however, the contractors have gone ahead fast and now intend to have the opening night on Memorial Day, May 30th.

A general idea of the house, its layout, seating arrangement and appearance can be gained from a perusal of the drawings and illustrations on pages 4036 and 4042. The building, which will seat over 3000, was designed by Eugene De Rosa, architect of New York City. The Fleischman Construction Co., also of New York, were the contractors.

The Coliseum is situated on one corner of the intersection of 181st street and Broadway, and its front of white granite and speckled semi-glazed white brick, causes it to stand out from its neighbors like a jeweled setting.

Front of building constructed of granite and highly expensive speckled semi-glazed white brick.

The lobby is very spacious, being 85 feet long and provided with marble floors, bronze doors and marble walls, with French plate glass mirrors inserted. The entire lobby is treated in the Adams style and fitted with the very finest of crystal chandeliers in the ceiling. The side walls are provided with electric light brackets having diagonal mirrors.

The interior of building has two grand staircases of marble leading to the first mezzanine. The marble newels of these staircases are surmounted by beautiful electric light standards. The interior has a marble wainscoting all around, with panels above of the best and most expensive silk.

The promenade on the first mezzanine has an open well looking down over the orchestra below. The well has a marble balustrade and railing and is elliptical in form. The walls of the promenade are provided with black and gold columns and with Circassian walnut panels surmounted with tapestry panels. The ceiling of the promenade has an elliptical dome, with concealed lights in four (4) colors. In the centre of the dome is suspended a beautiful crystal chandelier in four (4) color lights. Opening on to the promenade is a rest room, with beautiful mantel, ladies’ retiring rooms, telephone room, writing room, marble drinking fountains, cloak rooms, etc. From this promenade access to the balcony is had by three large and beautifully decorated corridors.

The balcony is one of the best designed in the country, having the best sight lines, and giving the most comfort to the patrons. It has spacious loge boxes, comfortable upholstered seats and ample aisle space and exits.

The proscenium opening has a beautiful golden silk curtain flanked on both

Blackhall, Clapp and Whittemore Have Designed Beautiful Structure

GROUND will be broken and work will begin on what is intended to be one of the best equipped theatres in New England and one of the most prominent structures outside of Boston. Framingham has long needed a new up-to-date theatre, and this house is intended to fully meet the demand. It will be a first-class structure in every way and its location is such as to assure its serving the public in the best possible manner, it being on the busiest part of Concord street, only a short distance from the railway station and opposite the city buildings. The exterior of the building will form part of a long line of stores and offices which will be built at the same time, the theatre entrance being carried out in harmony with the rest of the front and showing a broad archway flanked by heavy piers and crowned by an elaborate pediment, the whole being carried out in a free treatment of the late Gothic style. Beyond the entrance a handsome vestibule 20 feet wide leads to the main foyer, which is marked in the centre of the theatre by a rotunda carried up through a mezzanine story, and giving a very striking effect both from above and below. The vestibule and foyer will be elaborately finished with marble dado, mirror work and a tessellated pavement. Stairs to the balcony lead up from each side of the rotunda, reaching a broad mezzanine story encircling the rotunda on all sides, the ladies' room, coat rooms, etc., being just off of the mezzanine. From this mezzanine access is had to the central portions of the balcony through a wide auditorium, the main stairs continuing up to the rear of the balcony. All of the exits are easy and liberal, the stairs ample and not steep, and every convenience of the public has been considered in the elaboration of the details of arrangement and finish. The interior of the house is designed in an adaptation of the Adam style, with a profusion of delicate tissue ornament and arrangements, one of color which includes a pale turquoise blue as a foundation, relieved by dull gray green and pale yellow gold. The main curtains will be a rich tone of pale mauve and the hangings will be in a deeper tone of the same, verging on crimson. The electric lighting will be so devised that at all times the house will be illuminated without in any wise detracting from the clearness and intensity of the picture on the screen. This will be accomplished by a cleverly devised system of colored lights in specially arranged fixtures, so that at no time will the house be in darkness. The 1,800 seats will be mahogany, upholstered in Spanish leather.

The theatre, while intended primarily for use as a picture house, will have a complete stage equipment and an ample stage both in depth and height, so that the theatre could present any form of theatrical or dramatic entertainment. The heating and ventilation is worked out most carefully to insure the comfort and well-being of every spectator. Every seat is a good seat. The sight lines were studied most carefully and there is not a seat anywhere that fails to have a good view of the whole stage.

The theatre will be equipped with an organ costing over $25,000 of one of the best manufacturers in the country. It is intended that every function of the theater shall be first class of its kind and gives to Framingham what it has never had before, a thoroughly modern, handsome theatre, worthy to be compared with the best metropolitan houses.

The theatre has been designed and will be built under the direction of Blackhall, Clapp & Whittemore, architects, and will be owned and operated by the George A. Giles Company, who operate a chain of theatres throughout New England, including the St. James theatre in Boston. Mr. Giles is president of the Greater Boston Exhibitors' Association, and one of the coming big men in the theatrical world.

The policy of the house will be to present the very best attractions of their kind for the public and to keep up the high standard which the company has maintained in its other houses.

Laying of Corner-Stone for New Stanley Theatre to Be Big Event in Philadelphia

Impressive Ceremony to Take Place on May 8 in Presence of High Officials of Pennsylvania

The most important event in the annals of the photoplay industry and theatrical history in Philadelphia will be the laying of the corner-stone, with appropriate seriousness, of the new Stanley theatre, at the corner of Nineteenth and Market streets, which is announced by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, to be held at three o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday, May 8th.

Elaborate arrangements are being made for the ceremonies attendant upon the corner-stone laying, and these include a concert from two to three o'clock by the well-known Hummel's Military Band, under the direction of Silas E. Hummel. During the dedication program addresses will be delivered by the Hon. William R. Sproul, Governor of Pennsylvania; Hon. J. Hampton Moore, Mayor of the City of Philadelphia; the Hon. Horace Stern, Judge of Common Pleas Court No. 2, and others. The actual laying of the corner-stone will be executed by Mrs. Fanny E. Mastbaum, mother of Jules E. Mastbaum and the late Stanley V. Mastbaum.

These ceremonies will be attended by a distinguished gathering of statesmen, jurists, United States, state and city officials, theatrical and motion-picture producers, directors and stars and, while these will come from all sections of the country, there will be such a large contingent coming from New York, including many stars, that a special train will be necessary to convey them alone.

The building was designed by the Hoofman-Heenan Company. It is a handsome fireproof structure in the Italian Renaissance style of architecture. It will measure 143 by 176 feet, and will seat 4,000 persons, being the largest place of amusement of its type in the city. The work upon the superstructure is now being carried on as rapidly as is consistent with careful construction, for the first performance is scheduled to be given in the new Stanley on Labor Day, September 6th, 1920.

A leading feature and one that will strike patrons most favorably is that there will be an unobstructed view of the stage or screen from every part of the house, because of the fact that the building is constructed with a floor space of 142 feet, without columns. The exterior walls will be of brick and terra-cotta while the house will be one of the finest in the city from an exterior point of view, and its interior will strike the beholder as among the richest and most costly buildings he has ever seen. The walls will be finished inside in foreign marble and in addition no expense has been spared in decorations and decorative features which will be most elaborate.

Other exclusive features are the specially built grand organ, which will be installed at a cost of $17,000; inclusive instead of stairs will be used to the balconies; a very spacious promenade on the mezzanine floor; ladies' retiring room and parlor; men's parlor and smoking rooms.

Northwood—Mr. William Siebrands is to erect a brick motion picture theatre in this town.

OHIO

Cleveland—The theatre at 1112 Prospect Avenue, S. E., formerly known as the Ray theatre which has been undergoing alterations and redecorating, is to be opened under the name of the Winton theatre.

PENNSYLVANIA

Philadelphia—The Pennsylvania Construction & Engineering Co., are erecting a one-story moving picture theatre at Fairmount Avenue and Lex Street for William Hill. The cost of this construction will be about $30,000.

Pittsburgh—The Park theatre under the management of the Brighton Amusement Company is undergoing construction. This theatre is located at 49th and Butler streets.

TENNESSEE

Tazewell—Yoakum & Thomas will soon open their New Dixie theatre.

TEXAS

Dallas—The Enterprise Realty Company is placing contracts for the new National theatre to be erected at Pacific Avenue and Ervay Street. The theatre proper will be 120 x 150 feet.

Dallas—Permits have been issued for a $300,000 National theatre building sponsored by E. H. Hulsey, to be located on Elm Street. The theatre will seat 3,000 persons.

WASHINGTON

Prosser—The work on the new Princess theatre is being rushed.

Seattle—Work has recently commenced on a modern theatre building for DaVaut and Hewett, two local moving picture men. The Columbia Contractors and Builders are doing the construction work on the building which will be a fireproof structure 50 x 92 feet in size. The building will be constructed of what is known as "laminated" material and have a seating capacity of 250 people. The total cost is estimated to be $10,000.

Tacoma—The Marcus and Loew-Ackerman Harris interests will build a $350,000 theatre here with a seating capacity of 1,200 persons. Walter Smith is Manager of this section.

WISCONSIN

Racine—Harry E. Mann has purchased the Rex Theatre Building. Modern improvements are contemplated. Thomas Norman is the manager of the theatre.

Shelboygan—Alterations and enlargements are being made on the Majestic theatre by an addition of 236 feet in depth to be built on the rear of the building.

Development of the Mazda Lamp for Projection Purposes

A New Series of Interest to All Projectionists

The lamp that has been developed for use in commercial motion picture theatres, operates at 30 volts, 30 amperes (3)—a 900 watt lamp, (4) and appears to be the limit in the present design. Experimental and commercial lamps of higher wattages have been found to deliver but very little more effective light on the screen, with our present means of directing, controlling and utilizing the light.

The filament is now near to the melting point of tungsten, and hence the brilliancy is almost at a maximum (5).

Since the lamp filament is running so hot, it follows that forcing more than 30 amperes thru the filament, will be extremely harmful to the lamp.

The first two or three times a lamp is run over amperage, no visible result is noted. Consequently, many projectionists think that no harm has been done to the lamp.

The lamps are rated, when run at exactly 30 amperes, to give an average life of 100 hours. Running the lamps above rated amperage, gives the following approximate results:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Amperes</th>
<th>Hours</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>30</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>32</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>33</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

The mirror, though the mirror, should fit into the actual filament in much the same manner that it is possible to fit the four fingers of the right hand into the four fingers of the left.

If the mirror itself were a perfect reflector, the image would be of the same brightness as the filament, but as even the best mirrors absorb a certain portion of the light, the image is not quite as brilliant as the actual filament.

The mirror will add from 50% to 75% to the light on the screen obtained with the use of the lamp alone.

To obtain this increase, it must be adjusted properly, but when once set, should require no further attention beyond cleaning. Cleaning, it might be mentioned, is of the utmost importance. A very slight film of dust will practically cut the usefulness of the reflector in two.

Foot Notes

3. Ordinary lamps such as are used in the house or for industrial work are rated in volts, i.e., we buy 110 or 115 volt lamps of so many watts. Motion picture lamps, however, while rated in volts are also rated in amperes.

With filaments run at such a high temperature as are these, the amperage is the important thing.

4. Watts equals volts times amperes.

5. The filament at present is running slightly over 3000° centigrade. The melting point of tungsten is in the neighborhood of 3600° centigrade.

6. Technically the term radius is called O. R. C. meaning outside radius of curvature. As the glass has a certain thickness, we must specify that it is the outside and not the inside surface of the glass, although it reflects from the glass towards the inside of the original sphere.

7. An ordinary mirror such as we have on our dressers at home, does not throw an inverted image, but a spherical mirror, in other words, a mirror which is concave, throws back an image which is upside down, in much the same way that a lens inverts an image.

Another Theatre Owner Tells How
This Machine Pays

"I have operated two of your Butter-Kist Machines for two years and will say that they are the best money-makers I have. Have averaged over $90.00 a week. I recommend the Butter-Kist machine to any one operating a picture house or vaudeville show." (Written to us by theatre manager in West Virginia. Name gladly sent on request.)

$600 to $3,120 From a Little Waste Space

Pays Four Ways
1. Motion makes people stop and look.
2. Coffee fragrance makes them buy.
3. Toasty flavor brings trade for blocks.
4. Stimulates all store sales or theatre attendance.

The Butter-Kist Pop Corn and Peanut Machine brings new profits and new trade to stores and theatres.

We have the actual figures to prove that the Butter-Kist Machine pays from $600 to $3,120 a year net profit. This means an extra $500 to $1,120 in clear cash profits from the use of a little waste space, 25 in. by 32 in.

But that is not all you can count on making with the Butter-Kist Machine. It draws trade. It multiplies all your other sales. It will assure you to see the full possibilities. Let us tell you all that this wonderful machine means to you. We'll send you proof of profits, photos of stores with the machine, etc.—all free and postpaid.

Butter-Kist
Pop Corn and Peanut Machine

Everyone is fond of pop corn and peanuts. The Butter-Kist Machine makes these goods doubly inviting. You only have to average $9.00 net profit on 10 bushels of Butter-Kist a day to make about $1,000 a year profit. For on every sale you make 150% profit.

sales with the well designed boxes having marble columns and Mullberry hangings, with delicate French gray background.

Over the proscenium opening is a beautifully decorated sound-board springing and arching over to the main ceiling, which is provided with an immense dome, having concealed lights and a beautiful chandelier.

The theatre is provided with the finest and most up-to-date organ that money can buy. There will also be a forty (40) piece orchestra.

The seating capacity is 3,500 seats, 2,500 on orchestra floor and 1,500 in balcony.

One of the finest and most commodious projection rooms in the city has been provided as a location for the projectors. A separate generator room will contain the Westinghouse motor generator and control devices.

New Theatre For La Crosse, Wis.

LA CROSSE, WIS.—With the completion of the new Rivoli, now under construction in this city, La Crosse will have a motion picture theatre second to none in Wisconsin, and one which will rank high among movie houses of the Central West. The opening date has been tentatively set for September 1st, it was announced by Frank L. Koppelerger, general manager of the La Crosse Theatres Company, for whom the building is being erected.

The Rivoli theatre building, a handsome four-story structure, 151 by 122 feet in dimension, is located on North Fourth street, but half a block from the centre of the city's retail district. It will cost approximately $475,000. The theatre proper will be 120 feet in length by 73 feet wide, and will have a seating capacity of 1,500, of which the main floor will accommodate 1,000 and the mezzanine floor 500.

With the opening of the Rivoli the La Crosse Theatre Company will have under its control seven motion picture theatres in La Crosse. The other six are the Majestic, La Crosse, Casino, Strand, Kinsito and Bijou. Only one other picture house, the Dreamland, is in operation in the city. C. Rowland West, former Minneapolis newspaper man, has been engaged by the theatre company as publicity director for the theatres controlled by the organization.

Reports on Theatre Construction

The Windsor Theatre, 4202 Kensington Ave., was closed last Saturday, April 10th, for extensive alterations and other improvements.

B. Schindler reports that work on his new 1000-seat Victoria Theatre, corner 26th and Federal Sts., Camden, N. J., is progressing very nicely, and that he expects to open about the middle of May. This will be one of the prettiest theatres in the resident district in the state. A large Lyceum will cool the house, a $7,500 pipe organ will please the ears of the audience with sweet strains of delicious music, while the pictures will be projected on a Minerva Gold Finire Screen by two Power's GB motor driven machines.

Plans have been submitted to the State Board at Harrisburg for their approval by H. J. Troxell of Gettysburg, Pa., for the enlargement of the Photoplay theatre. Mr. Troxell has purchased the building adjoining the theatre and intends to throw the two buildings into one, thus doubling the seating capacity of the theatre, and will make other changes in the building, adding a new front.

McGuire Champions Cassard

A. MCGUIRE, advertising manager of the Nicholas Power Co., has never been able to decide whether the stream of orders for Power's that is pouring in steadily these days is because he is the advertising manager in the country has the finest projector in the country or, because the "Champion Kelly Pool Player" of the Cinemachinery Industry is his name.

Mr. McGuire has been taking a little vacation at Atlantic City and after receiving his copy of Motion Picture News, which he insists shall be promptly mailed to him whenever he leaves town, immediately sent us the following telegram:

Atlantic City, April 26th.
E. L. BRADY.
Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Ave., N. Y.

On behalf of S. S. Cassard, Sales Manager of the Nicholas Power Co., challenge all comers for Kelly Pool Champion Cinemachinery Industry. Suggest large fund be raised by advertising managers of cinemachinery industry to present winning contestant with loving cup. Date, place, time of match, to be arranged so that film rights be carefully guarded, stop request that this telegram and other details of the contest be regarded as strictly confidential as advertisement will naturally object to any publicity being given to their principals.

As requested by Mr. McGuire, we are keeping this entire matter strictly confidential and only regret that we have no picture of him in order that we might publish it and thus add to the secrecy he requests. We shall, however, do everything in our power to promote this contest which will undoubtedly prove highly interesting to the entire film industry. We know there is competition, and it is our wish to disseminate all possible talent possessed by members of the cinematograph industry that has been overlooked by the press and advertising managers, and Motion Picture News will make an effort to develop it.

Nirdlinger Interests, was sold to the Teon Amusement Co., who have had charge of the house for some time, with Mr. Tower as house manager. It has been reported, and on good authority, that the house has been purchased back by the Nixon-Nirdlinger Interests, and that they will take possession the first of May. This is a 1100-seat theatre. The equipment consists of two Power's GB machines, Gold Finire screens and a fine pipe organ. It will be opened around the 9th of May.

The Wheatstone Bridge

Standard resistances are prepared which together with the necessary plugs, switches and galvanometer are placed in a portable box suitable for transportation so that resistances of any desirable nature can be measured. The battery for the current supply is often contained within the portable case.

The operation of the Wheatstone Bridge is as follows: the necessary connections being shown by Fig. 27.

The unknown resistance is connected as branch D of the circuit. This if the unknown resistance is not too great plugs for equal resistance coils are removed from branches A and B. Plugs from branch C are now removed such that there is no deviation of the galvanometer needle. The total value of the coils of branch C added to the circuit is then equal to the value of the unknown resistance.

When the unknown resistance is large, a multiplying factor is obtained by inserting a larger resistance in branch B than in A. In order to obtain a multiplying factor of 10 the plug short circuiting the 10 ohm coil of branch A and the 100 ohm coil of branch B should be removed.

Key M should be closed first so that there will be a flow of current before the galvanometer circuit is closed by key N. Care should be taken not to keep the key M closed for too long a period as the coils are liable to heat and change the value of the resistance.

Resistances in the form of wire coils are mounted in boxes for laboratory purposes in the form as shown by Fig. 28. On the cover of the box heavy brass blocks are mounted to which the ends of the coils are connected so that the current passes from block to block through the connected coils.

When it is desired to cut a coil out of the circuit the space between the blocks is bridged by a metal plug so that any desired value of resistance may be obtained. The resistance coils are wound inductively, that is, they are wound back on themselves so that any magnetic effect or self induction is done away with. The method of winding and the means by which the resistance is connected to brass blocks is shown by Fig. 29. When it is desired to cut a resistance out of the circuit a plug is fitted snugly into the space between the brass blocks and thus short circuiting the resistance coil concerned around this space.

Effect of Current in Circuit

A electric current is not a material substance, but is manifested by the effect which it produces. It is through the effects produced that electricity can be commercially utilized. The manifestations of an electric current are; its heating effect, magnetic effect, and chemical effect, each of which will be considered separately.

Heating Effect—The heat of an electric circuit is caused by the molecules of the body being in motion. This motion is produced by the expenditure of mechanical energy. When a current of electricity passes through a conductor a certain amount of work is done in overcoming the resistance of the conductor and this work appears in the form of heat. Because of this heating effect it is very important in the design of a transmission line that wires of proper size be used in order that an appreciable amount of energy will not be used in heating the conductor and be lost in the set of transmitting useful energy. In building wiring the insurance companies require that wires of certain sizes be used, and that they be installed in certain manner in order to reduce the fire hazard.

The heating effect of an electric current is made use of in the incandescent lamp in which the filament is heated to incandescence and thus gives out light. Also in an electric iron and heating grids the resistance offered to the flow of current generates heat, and the heat thus generated is radiated to some good heat conducting material.

The amount of heat generated in an electric circuit is given by Joule's Law, which states that the heat produced is proportional to the resistance, the time during which the circuit flows and the square of the current strength. The amount of heat given out by an electric circuit as measured in calories (the calorie being the amount of heat necessary to raise 1 gram of water 1 degree Centigrade), is equal to $E \times R \times t \times \frac{1}{24}$, in which I is the current flow, R the resistance of the apparatus, and t the time in seconds. Also since potential difference $E = R \times I$, the above equation may be written $Heat = E \times I \times t \times \frac{1}{24}$.

The action of a fuse in protecting a circuit depends on the heating effect of an electric current. Lead melts at a temperature of 012°F, while it requires a temperature of 1960°F to melt copper. A fuse made up of a lead wire is inserted in the circuit and designed so that an excess of current will heat this material to the melting point and thus cause a break in the circuit.

The carrying capacity of a fuse depends on the cross-section, and is rated at a given amperage meaning that it will carry a current up to this amount without melting or "blowing" as it is termed.

It is because of this heating effect that conductors of sufficient size must be used in conducting electricity. When large conductors are used for small or normal current flow the heat generated is not recognized by the touch. However, with small conductors and a correspondingly large current flow the wire is heated quite appreciably.

In an electric lamp the filament is inclosed in Correct Answers to Questions of April 3rd Issue

9. The element of a fuse is made up of an alloy which has a definite melting point. The size of this element is so designed that it will carry a given amount of current without undue heating. A current flow above normal will initiate, however, will cause excess heating, and if it continues for an interval of time will melt the element and cause a break in the circuit.

10. The proper size of fuse is governed by the normal lead on the circuit. The fuse should have a capacity of about twenty-five cents above the rated load, but should not be equal to the current capacity of the conductors.

11. The fuse should be replaced in the booth in order that they may be replaced readily in case they are blown by an overload or short circuit.

Magnetic Effect—The magnetic effect of an electric current is the most important property of electricity, and the means whereby electricity has proved most useful to the commercial world. An electric current flowing through a conductor sets up lines of force and produces a magnetic field surrounding the conductor as is shown by Fig. 3. To demonstrate the field surrounding a flowing current, the wires may be arranged as shown by Fig. 12, in which a wire connected to a battery circuit is placed through the center of a piece of paper. Iron filings are then scattered over the table, and connections are made to cause a current flow and the paper tagged lightly the filings will arrange themselves in concentric circles around the conductor. These lines of force flow in a clockwise direction when we look along the conductor in the direction in which the current is flowing.

When a wire is wound in a coil as shown by Fig. 10, a conductor each turn of which is connected to another so that a strong magnetic field is formed with North and South poles, and by placing an iron core in this coil, magnetic lines of force are set up in the iron and an electro magnet is formed.

The electro-magnetic effect is that which is used in the generation of electricity on a large scale, and also a means by which electricity is made to do work, e.g., the storage of electricity in batteries, motors and other apparatus. The operation of all indicating and recording instruments is dependent upon the magnetic lines of force set up in a conductor by the current, being independent of the strength of the magnetic field and its power of attracting the moving element.

Chemical Effect—When a current conducting liquid known as an electrolyte is connected in an electric circuit decomposition will take place at the points where the current enters and leaves the liquid. Electrolysis of certain liquids consists of dividing them into their component parts by the passage of electricity.

An art depending on the chemical action of electricity and based on the principle of electrolysis is that of depositing a coating of metal on a substance and is called as electroplating. By the above principle the metal held in solution is deposited by the passage of current on the object to be plated which must be connected as the cathode to the negative pole of the circuit.

A commercial process depending on the principles of electroplating is that of electrotyping. An impression of the type is made in wax or plastic compound and carefully dusted with graphite to make the surface a conductor. The mold is then connected as the negative plate in a copper-plating bath and receives a coating of metal deposit. The copper deposit when washed with hot water and cleaned can be used to obtain any number of impressions.

Doubts Multiple Machine Diagram

F. B., Providence, R. I.: Kindly let me know through your columns if it is practicable to use the machines which you have in your April 3rd issue (page 3148), I don't quite understand how you get the voltage for the 2-3-4 areas without some means of raising the voltage.

Reply: A double are Transverter, which was the type used for the conversion of current in a particular installation, is so designed that when two projection machines are connected in series such as would be called for on the second machine, an automatic voltage on the Transverter is automatically increased to care for the additional resistance introduced.

But this does not mean that a third projector could be coupled in series with the other two and still get results. When the voltage on a Transverter becomes above normal its characteristics of design are such that the current output will gradually become zero. Conversely when the load is increased beyond normal, such as happens at times of short circuit, the Transverter simply ceases generating. No harm is caused by this.

Now, in the case you refer to, the author implied that he could use two projectors—any two projectors—or a projector and a spotlight. He did not mean to say that he could, if he wished, connect four machines. This might be possible providing the capacity of the Transverter were great enough, but it is not feasible.

If you want still further details on the action of the Transverter look up the Projection Department for January 3, 10 and 17. A full account of the Transverter and an actual working test were given in these three issues.

Typhoon Fan Sales Continue Big

ALTHOUGH there has been no warm weather as yet, a great many exhibitors are getting in their orders for Typhoon equipments early so as to be prepared when the warm weather does arrive.

During the past week the Typhoon Fan Company, of New York, have received orders to equip the following theatres with the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System:

Mr. Ernst Glanzberg, president of the Typhoon Fan Company, who is at the present on a trip through the Southern States, reports that never before have theatre owners shown so great a desire to protect their patrons from summer discomforts.

A Letter on Film Conditions

P. A. Wills, Chicago, Ill., says:

I am back again, asking for more labels as I do not want to run out before I receive some more. The only trouble with the labels is: There is not always space enough to write all the criticisms one should, for some films, no matter how new, are not what they should be. For instance, with several pictures we have had, which were "right out of the can," the splices of the assembler were very poorly matched up, and had to be made over. And speaking of poor splices, "The Isle of Conquest," which we ran the following week after the Ziegfeld Theatre, in Chicago; I took out 108 splices, some of which were in pretty bad condition. The film was scratched; oil; and had many punch-holes at the end of the reels. The manager called up the exchange and asked them where the new print was, we were to get. He told them as to the condition of the film, and they stated they did not see how it could lie in poor shape as the Ziegfeld Theatre was the only theatre in which it had been shown. This is hard to believe, as the print looked to have been run for at least three months. Something was certainly wrong somewhere.

Another thing the producers will have to learn is to wax new film, for until they do their film will not go as fast as it should. As far as I know, but one company waxes new film, the Universal, and they are to be complimented on that fact.

Scratches on the film are another one of the evils of projection today. There is a reason for such conditions, but no excuse. New parts when they are needed will keep film in A-1 condition. The time is coming when the film companies will employ inspectors of the machines throughout the country, since the majority of "operators" will not take care of their machines. I have in the present time a leader of about 16 feet, which has been used continuously for three months, and which in perfect condition, not a scratch on it. It is used at the first of my features, where the greatest pull is on film and yet it is in the same good condition as when we bought it. From that it seems that every one running Projection Machines should take care of all film passing through their hands, and the result would be perfect film for the life of its natural bedding. I think that if a thing is worth doing at all, it is worth doing right. There are many lines of work which requires the utmost in efficiency, and projection certainly comes under a line of work that should be done to the best of one's ability.

And now to come back to films again, we run, I mean we were running the Vitagraph Councils new. They were in perfect condition until some house was booked before us. Now the same film that is run in but one house before us, is scratched and the end of the first reel contains two punch-holes. This is done, I should judge, in a large house, for they are the ones who can pay for new films. Now why on earth does a manager permit his "operator" to do this conductor's job of punching?

Oil on film is another menace of today. A new film is generally ruined before being run very many times because of oil. Of course a machine, unless it is brand new, will leave a little oil and this in turn will be deposited on the film unless the sprocket shafts and wheels are wiped off before the machine is threaded. The film should also be wiped off after it has been run and if the above simple operations are carried out by every one, the films would not become oily and dirty and would always show up clear on the screen.

Another thing about the labels—I think every member of the N. A. M. L. should put the title of the picture, and number of the print on the label. The reason for this is, different copies of the same subject might be substituted, and this in turn might give the N. A. M. L. a "black eye" for some one getting a substituted reel would say the members do not live up to the slogan.

About Poor Splices

B. E. Wilson, Lyric theater, Springfield, Ill., has something to say about splices, etc.

...I hereby make application for membership to the N. A. M. L.

I think that the N. A. M. L. is and will be the greatest help in convincing the exchanges that we appreciate good film when we get it. But we must be careful or the exchanges will have no use for inspectors and will depend upon us to do their work. Here is just an idea which would make the exchanges more careful.

Each week have each member of the N. A. M. L. send all pieces which he has cut out and have published in the News a summary of the whole as below:

In a short time I think that list would be greatly diminished. I would like to see this idea or something go into effect. Last week I ran Olive Thomas in "Out Yonder." A Select picture and in the 5th reel I found 13 misframes and no less than 2 in each of the other reels. The picture came in two days ahead of time so the exchange has time to look it over if they cared to.

Author of New Book on "Photographic Developers." Has Had Wide Experience in Many Fields

Samuel Wein Continues Educational Work by Publication of Latest Textbook for the Laboratory

WITHIN a few weeks there will be available what is perhaps the most valuable book in existence for the use of the laboratory worker, technician, researcher, and experimenter in dyes and their application. The title of the book is "Organic Photographic Developers" and the author is Samuel Wein. A review of the volume will be carried in the Camera Department of the News directly after its publication.

Samuel Wein is known to most of the leading chemists and laboratory chemists and managers and has had wide experience in many subjects of pertinent value for the film industry.

He came to the United States when very young and was educated in the public schools of New York City, later graduating from Columbia University with the degree of B. S. At that institution he specialized in Physics and Organic Chemistry.

After graduation, Mr. Wein became an assistant in special physical research work in Acoustics under Dr. E. E. Miller. Later he was appointed Editor of Percussion Art and still later, Associate Editor of the widely read and authoritative Color Trade Review at the time when Dr. J. Merritt Matthews, professor at the Philadelphia School of Mines, was Editor.

Since that time, Wein has been working on various subjects having to do with the Educational phases. In his spare time he has accepted proffers of special work for which his wide experience and knowledge in Chemistry will fit him.

In 1915 a Commission of Japanese experts came to this country to arrange for the construction of an entire chemical plant for the manufacture of carbolic acid. Someone sent the Commission to Mr. Wein, and, under the pressure of war times demanded and laid out a plant with a capacity of 4 tons every 24 hours.

Mr. Wein has also prepared several other books and brochures besides the one now in process of completion. One of them was on the subject of "Developers" and appeared in the Photo Miniature Series, and was successful to the extent that it has already gone through five or more editions.

Another publication was "The Bibliography of Selenium." Although this booklet is not impressive in size, any worker in selenium will appreciate the labor required in compiling the facts given therein.

For nearly a year Mr. Wein was Chief Chemist at the Universal Film Laboratories at Fort Lee.

Sennett to Employ "Still" Artist to Link Photographic Beauty with Comedies

James E. Abbe, Well Known for Photography, Will Give Personal Attention to New Idea in Films

ACK SENNETT recently announced that he had secured the services of the celebrated New York photographer, James E. Abbe, with the idea of incorporating "still effects" into future Sennett Comedies.

Work on a story has already begun. It will exploit the beauty of the far-famed Mack Sennett girls, who, it is admitted, have been but imperfectly linked to the comedy product on which the Sennett popularity mainly rests. The scenario will give these Beauties of the Sennett studies every decorous opportunity to reveal their charms and in an atmosphere and under lighting conditions that will, Mr. Abbe believes, mark the opening of a new era in the production of film plays.

With Alfred Cheney Johnston, Baron de Meyer and Dr. Arnold Genthe, all of New York, Abbe shares equal fame as a photographer of beautiful women. His output has long adorned the pages of the most exclusive and artistic magazines. That he believes his method of lighting, posing and grouping, as revealed in his "still," can be rendered practical in motion pictures is his earnest and sincere statement. The picture from the Mack Sennett studios will be the demonstration of Mack Sennett's faith in Abbe's capacity to work the modern miracle in lights.

The product will not be an experiment. Abbe, visiting in Los Angeles for a few weeks and taking pictures of the "higher-ups" of filmdom addressed himself to the task of photographing Mack Sennett and his stars and famous girls.

It was while posing some of the latter that Mr. Sennett, admiring the marvelous effects created as though by magic—the modelling of an arm, the suggestion of a shadow rounding out a graceful contour, the posture of the subject and the other "tricks" of the genius in photography—asked, "Why couldn't you get those effects in a moving picture; what is the reason why such illumination and posing could not be brought to the films?"

"That's exactly what I've been asking," answered Mr. Abbe, "but all the picture stars and producers to whom I have suggested it, discouraged the effort. They said it was all right for stills but impracticable for motion pictures. I believe it can be done, but have never found a picture producer willing enough to take a chance."

"I'll take a chance," calmly announced Mack Sennett.

That night a selected company of the prettiest—if there are degrees of perfection—of the Sennett girls were assigned to duty in the huge Light Studio and, watched by Mr. Sennett and his staff of assistants, Abbe proceeded to direct an episode employing none but girls. He had cared blanche as to "props" lights, material and assistance. He seemed satisfied when the picture was taken, though the practical cameramen who helped him at his new line of picture-taking were hardly optimists. It was an anxious party that assembled next morning in the screening room of the Sennett studios to witness the first un-reeling of a new motion picture art. Gasps, and murmurs of approval followed in the disappearing wake of the pictures. "It can be done," said Mr. Sennett, "and we'll do it."

Arrangements were easily effected, a contract was signed, and then the noted photographer spent the rest of the day telephoning to stars of stage and screen life rearranging his schedule of sittings for them.

Playing to Big Houses

With such installations as the New Grauman Million Dollar Theatre in Los Angeles, the Criterion in New York, just opened, the Garden in Paterson and the Harris in Pittsburgh to its credit, the Automatik Register may indeed be said to be playing to big houses. It isn't, of course, simply a big house ticket selling register, but we all know that the big guns know what's what, and what is good in the way of motion picture theatre equipment, and if they find it good business to protect their money, it is good business for every exhibitor in the country.

More Typhoon Sales

The early spring touch in the weather has brought to the mind of the exhibitor that something must be done to prepare his house for the summer season. As a result The Typhoon Fan Company reports recent orders for the installation of the Typhoon Cooling System in the following houses:

On or about April 1th the Typhoon Fan Company of New York will move their offices from the present address, 281 Lexington Avenue, to their new and spacious headquarters at No. 343-347 West 39th Street, in the same building with the Typhoon factory.

This is the second time within the past two years that it has been necessary for the Typhoon Company to move, owing to the rapid growth and expansion of the Typhoon business.

That’s what is said of WESTINGHOUSE MOTOR-GENERATORS used for projection work.

Mr. Dave H. Shuman of the Florence Theatre, at Pasadena, Calif., says, “We are glad to say that we have a very enviable reputation for especially good projection, which we believe is due as much to your generator as anything else. We are certainly convinced that we made no mistake in our selection.”

ATTRACTIVE PROPOSITION TO DEALERS
An Excellent Address on the Subject of The Corrections of a Kinematograph Lens

Given by an Official of the Ross Lens Co., Before the British Kine Cameramen’s Club

(Reprinted from the Kinematograph Weekly)

The corrections required in the taking lens are of a very high order, and they are the more difficult to obtain as the aperture increases. The materials at present available for the design and manufacture of such lenses limit the aperture to f/3.5 for lenses of 2 in. to 3 in. focus to cover the 1 in. by 3/4 in. picture. If we go down to 1 1/4 in. focus, the angles under which the lens has to work are too large for an aperture of f/3.5, and it has to be cut down to f/4.5. However much we may try, new materials are required in the way of optical glass to enable us to do better in optical design.

I will take this opportunity to say a few words on the principal causes of all our afflictions—the optical glass.

Optical glass has been made in this country for a long time, but in only five or six varieties; they were the usual light and heavy flints, and soft and hard crowns. These were the raw material from which opticians had to select to make lenses for all purposes—photographic lenses, telescope objectives, microscope objectives, etc., and it is not surprising that while the form of the individual optical instrument varied from one manufacturer to another, the performance of the instrument was generally very much alike.

I am referring to portrait lenses and rectilinear.

Over 30 years ago, two German scientists set to work to extend the varieties of optical glass, and they succeeded in getting what was so badly wanted by opticians. They made a large number of glasses which were totally different from the old five or six varieties, and it enabled opticians to design and make lenses infinitely better than was possible before.

It gave the German opticians a considerable advantage over their foreign competitors, and incidentally was the principal reason of the prestige German optical goods enjoyed.

It was so easy to obtain this valuable material from Germany that nobody gave much encouragement to English glass manufacturers, although they had been in the first in the world. The war has altered this, and we are now getting as good glass in this country as we did from Germany before the war.

You will be pleased to hear that our Xpres Lens, to which this lecture specially refers, is entirely made of English glass, and we have absolute confidence that we can hold our own against all comers from abroad as regards photographic lenses in general, and the kinematograph-taking lens in particular.

Having now dealt generally with the matter of photographic lenses for your purposes, it is my intention to lead you a little deeper into the niceties of the 3.5 Xpres, which no doubt some of you possess, and I hope are pleased with.

There are quite a number of points which have to be carefully considered in the design of a photographic lens, such as the Xpres Lens.

There are seven primary conditions, to all of which the designer has to ascribe its proper value as regards its respective influences on the picture, and since from the nature of things there is no absolute perfection in anything, the best compromise of the different conditions is made, and it is due to the skill and experience of the designer if a first-rate lens is evolved.

$100,000 for an Organist

"W. H. A. T. is believed to be the largest salary contract ever offered a theatre organist has just been signed in Boston. The contracting parties were Nathan H. Gordon, proprietor of the great chain of Gordon houses, and Arthor Martell, an organist well known in music circles. The figure to which Mr. Gordon and Mr. Martell have allied their signatures are $100,000, and under the terms the organist is engaged to play for the theatres of the Gordon Circuit for the coming 10 years at an annual salary of $10,000."

The above notice recently appeared in several newspapers and constitutes only one of the many substantial proofs that music is essential in conjunction with the exhibition of motion pictures. There is no necessity to analyse the importance of an appropriate musical accompaniment to pictures, but one thing deserves comment in the above article, and that is "the organ."

Wherever thought that this instrument would be able to command such importance in the motion picture industry? To my mind, it is largely due to the aggressiveness of organ builders; but, the man at the organ is of equal importance, as this instrument presents many difficulties than any other, in the way of sound elementary mastery. It takes years of study before correctness can be attained in playing passages of even moderate difficulty. The main difficulty, however, appears to be chiefly mental and arises from the number of things that have to be thought of simultaneously. Quick thinking is the key to success in practically every phase of life, especially when mastering the organ, particularly when employed as an accompaniment to motion pictures. In such case the man at the organ must not only think of the various pedals and key-boards, but must also be able to maintain a moment's glance, to translate all emotions of life into musical language.

"A good memory is a very valuable help to the player. Not only should he be able to memorize certain compositions as a whole, but he should carefully furnish his storehouse of remembered music with stock phrases and melodies adapted to different moods, so that he can always draw from the library in his head."

America can boast of a great many orchestras who are walking musical libraries. America can also boast of the fact that it is to-day, within its boundaries, building the greatest and finest organs in the world.

American organists and organs plus American ingenuity in the motion picture industry are the only responsible factors for our latest creation, "The $100,000 Organist." THE EDDIES.

New Studio Nearly Completed

Within a few weeks the new studio equipment by Mr. Jacob Friedman of 116 Nassau street, New York, and located in Astoria, Long Island City, will be ready for occupancy. The structure itself is not new but the remodeling has been carried out so extensively that to all intents and purposes it might just have been built.

The studio proper consists of two rooms arranged in an L shape. One of the rooms is 70 x 25 and the other 12 x 8. It is possible to arrange the two rooms together into one large one. A ceiling varying from 20 to 30 feet in height provides plenty of room for the creation of sets and also for the overhead balconies carrying the current feeders. One excellent feature of this studio is the fact that there is not a post anywhere in it. All the space is clear and usable.

Underneath the studio is a basement that can be used for small sets or for a laboratory. Here the projection room will be located as well as several other rooms for various purposes.

The studio will be equipped with the most modern lighting system, laid out and installed by the Elkins Equipment Co. who have had considerable experience in studio work.

There will also be the necessary offices, carpenter shop, dressing rooms, showers baths and hot and cold water in all dressing rooms.

The location of the studio is also of considerable.importance. It is on Mills street within two blocks from the Astoria (92nd street) ferry and occupies a water front privilege.

It is reached by the Seventh Street Subway from the main station and taking a 92nd street ferry trolley car to the Mills street station. Or the visitor may take the 92nd street ferry car to the 6th street bridge and ride direct to Mills street.

Either of these means the time required is less than a half hour. The trip may be made from Times Square by auto in 10 minutes.

S. S. Cassard, Sales Manager of Nicholas Power Co., was called home while on his trip through the South but managed to resume on his journeys within a few days.

"The Great Nickel Robbery" (Fox Comedy—Two Reels)

As long as Hampton Del Rey, who supervises these Sunshine Comedies, can manage to slide in sufficient bits of original action these pictures cannot help but get some good laughs. He has done this in his latest nickel comedy, "The Great Nickel Robbery," whose setting is laid along the "Wait-a-While" Street Car Line. This gives the producer opportunities to joke about burlesque poor trolley service, and the habits of motorists in recognizing for passengers. Whether there is any ground for the satire or not does not matter much, for jokes about poor trolley service still flourish, and for this reason there is an emphatic note of appeal.

This comedy, like its predecessors, does not rely upon the actors for its laughs. It is distinctly a director-comedy rather than a star-comedy. You may forget whether the conductor had a mustache or not, but you will remember his throwing out a live preserve to hail a pursuing passenger.

The picture has been as lavishly and carefully produced as any of the previous ones. The dancing girls pay only a brief visit to the screen and the cleverly trained dog is absent. There does not seem to be much need for the dog's services. The monkey does a few tricks. There is action all the way through and a chase at the end, no better than the usual.—MATTHEW T. TAYLOR

"Chang and the Law"

Goldwyn-Bray Cartoon One Reel

FOR its educational feature the latest Goldwyn-Bray strip contains scenes showing the activities of the Traveler's Aid Society in New York City, and the story of the emigrants landing and being cared for are interesting. There is also a view of the society's New York home and its inmates. A war bride and American soldier wedding performed in the home is shown. Under the title of "Master Minds of America" we see some intimate pictures of the painter, Childe Hassam, at work.

The process of etching illustrated here will be interesting and entertaining. The figures move naturally throughout, rather than striking a ridiculous pose, holding it for a few seconds, and moving on in a jerky fashion. Super-exaggerated antics of a horse make a fine, side for the laughs.—MATTHEW T. TAYLOR

"Snowbound"

Burton Holmes Travelogue—Famous Players—Lasky One Reel

A LONG about the first of August this result would probably look better than it does now, since there is nothing more than views of that which most people thinking in a suitable season have seen quite enough of for a time—snow. You see the wet blanket loading down the evergreen trees, view it's white expanses in open spaces untouched by the foot of man or snow-covered track of a country road with enough of the flakes on the ground to make first class sleighing to those who think that a snow scene is pretty it should be pleasing. To those who had rather see green fields, flowers and trees shed it will be only a reminder of what has been and will be again. Titles from Whitier's and Emerson's poems are used to tie the various scenes together. They are very appropriate and make the offering rather distinctive.—J. S. DICKERSON

---

Mr. Rawlinson interviews a resident of Chinatown and then goes out to Hastings and interviews the gang with the aid of the railroad station agent's daughter and her henchman. Both that is new in plot to be found in the picture and its development is arbitrary. There are a few scenes where the action is good and the early sequences in Chinatown provide cordial atmosphere.

The picture suggests that it has been made hastily and with an idea of conservation in expense. A number of the minor characters are extremely camera conscious and detract much from the scenes they are in. Some real Chinese men are used, but they do not impress greatly with their dramatic ability. The man who plays "Chang" (name unavailable) is very good. Rawlinson does all that he is given an opportunity to accomplish in his usual finishable style, but it is felt that the picture is not as good as the first two of the series has mostly in its lack of as good story values.

"Stick Around"

Ernst Tenen Comedy—Two Reels

F AIRY productive of laughter is this new action potenial comedy, "Stick Around," which is being sponsored by Amos Bowden. The star is a capable enough comedian and none of his points provided lie is withering with anything in the shape of ideas. It looks at present if he has been provided with an adequate script to say the least. There is no palpable plot, the finishing derived primarily from the trick dialogue, which rises almost in its effort to play the detective. This small number makes his work attractive. And the salutes are pure and to the point. Which helps a great deal.

Ernst assuages various desires but he is caught in the end and told to stick around by the bos under suspicion. There is the action picks up and presents some excellent moment. The detective is awaiting back steps when suddenly a Morse starts up in tomorrows which causes him to break loose and jump out front of the chorus. And how he can do the bunsm, the movie sticks around to long that Ernst cannot escape. He is hit by the show. The picture can be called good natural movement which is going to extremes in getting it over. So the action is spontaneous all the way. Which makes it a friendly show and entertaining enough to fit any exhibitor's program.

"What Could Be Sweeter"

Goldwyn Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven Comedy—Length, Two Reels

THS may be concluded a bowing success by some but if it is, the success will be achieved because the offering has action rather than from any comedy situations it possesses. The best that can be said of it is that it keeps going with more or less mildly amusing incident. The worst that should be said, is that the plot has no comedy element and there is nothing funny about the way it has been developed.

The picture is perfectly clean, has been given a good production and tells its story, one can entertain a country audience with a soap opera if this: the daughter of a railway president, stranded in the village where the youth resides because of a false quarantine of influenza. Considerable of the action of the picture takes place in a country hotel with some good "hick" types sticking around without much of anything to do.

The stars do most of the work and manage to get the production by. It will do as a filler and is to be preferred to a slap stick production which misses fire.—J. S. DICKERSON.

WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE?
(De Mille-Famous Players-Lasky)

INTERESTING AS DRAMA AND Sure Box Office Attraction

"WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE? is illusion and overdrawn, practically throws that most people are like the moral code overboard with its teachings, presents its principal characters as people who have about as much regard for the sanctity of the marriage vows as an Arab does for a sun bath," but nevertheless it is an acceptable, highly entertaining picture which cannot fail as a box office attraction.

The first part of the story is the familiar one of the husband who loves the wife and the wife who is "highbrow" with the husband getting interested in another woman. Then the picture departs from the beaten paths and is daring, not to say bold, in the development of its theme.

We might add that the story is one of a certain talking machine company's records no less than half a dozen times, and it is very nicely on several occasions, all of which wasn't exactly essential in telling the story.

The production attempts to point a moral, or at least to teach something, but about all that it shows is that unusually original and interesting incident, some of it a humorous nature, even after the dramatic scenes and a lot of Gloria Swanson's, Bebe Daniels' and other feminine forms.

The picture has been more than well aged. The titles are perfect.

It has big sets, play, well managed groups and is excellently acted. It is a picture that will be talked about. It has wide fantastic possibilities. It probably will come in for a playing at the leading vaudeville, for an exhibitor with a neighborhood or small town house of a more than ideal attraction, but every one who goes to pictures will be around to see some of them have a sneak in for a late show, sitting in a dark corner.

Acting honors go to Gloria Swanson and Bebe Daniels. Thomas Meighan is adequate for his role, but not given excellent opportunities.—Length, 7 reels. — J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Robert Gordon
Sally Clark
Aunt Kate
Harriette
Butler
Maid
A Woman Client.

Directed by William de Mille, assisted by Olga Printzous and Fred Cohan.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Why Change Your Wife?" is the most sensational picture of the year, which has broken all records for long runs in Los Angeles, New York and other big cities, for the — theater for a — day run beginning December 8.

The story is fully sensational for all that its theme is one which will interest everyone of mature years presenting the problem of "how to live happily though married." Thomas Meighan as the hero married a woman who desired different things than he had. He is divorced and married again to find that his second wife pleases him less than the first. Then comes a mental fight between the two women for possession of the husband. He soon discovers that many things about world and happiness and finds that she loves the man she has so willingly allowed to depart from her.

Gloria Swanson is one wife and Bebe Daniels is the other. Women's charms as well as women's wiles enter into the battle. All learn a lesson before the picture is over, not the least being the man.

The picture is one of the most interesting pictures of the year. Everyone will not agree that it is the correct way to solve domestic problems such as confronted the characters in Mr. De Mille's story, but all will agree that it argues well for this particular point of view. The picture is not just a sentimental but bold in its development. Prepare yourself for a picture of extraordinary sensuous beauty, magnificent, such interesting incident even if it is a bit risque, has never been made into a picture.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill as a sensational picture. Do not mix matters. Tell them that Gloria Swanson and Bebe Daniels wear bathing suits and other small pieces of wedding apparel that leave little to the imagination but explain that there is a reason for it.

“BRIGHT SKIES”
(Brentwood-Robertson-Cole)

SLAVEY” Story Mixed With a Bit of Slapstick

What we are going to think about Za Su Pitts, who stars in this picture, they must admit that she is unique. She has developed a personality that we are accustomed to seeing in slapstick comedies. She has been given a "slavery" role, and, remarkable to state, she keeps the whole picture. In only two brief scenes do they make her pretty. The rest of the time she is an over-romantic lass, with arms around a big Si Hopkins, and dresses a la Cinderella.

The picture is, therefore, somewhat new to a screen star. And Za Su Pitts could be attractive. If she wished her brief appearance as a rich young lady proved this.

The story is a clean little tale, rather spoiled by careless development. Za Su Pitts reads "as if the first reel, do not mix with a heart interest comedy drama, and the dear footage given in a more detailed explanation of the father's early history, it might have made the story more held and probable. Of course, the star is a nobody, and when a rich banker is seeking a child whom somehow or other he has never seen, "Sally" is brought to him. She lives in luxury for a short time, leaving the young farm hand, with whom she is in love, to go to her supposed father. But it develops that Sally is no better than the farmer's boy is the rightfuhl child. Sally, however, joins the family, as daughter-in-law.

Then is some little romance in the cornfield to provide enough, not excess, of sentiment, and their story, playing the farm hand, does well. Jack Pratt and Jack Brumagh are directed. Kate Price as Mrs. Cassidy, is made to over her part. The day of the Irishman with pink whiskers, and his round wife is past for good. If it is a bit picturesque like the star, and this is a big gamble, it will get average entertainment. Length, 5 reels. — Mrs. Mary Taylor.

THE CAST

Sally Bette
Cass
Cass
Jack Tram
Jack Lewis
Kate Price
Dorothy

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Za Su Pitts, a new and attractive screen star, will be seen at the — theatre on —. In a true heart interest drama called "Bright Skies," a Brentwood production. It is a clean, wholesome romance of New York and the countryside.

The theme of the story is the story of "Sally." A lonely boy who lives in the East Side of New York, eventually leaves her poor home and moves to the "road" as a dancing girl, resisting an old Italian organ grinder. Together they roam through the countryside, helping each other while getting their few pennies. But the old man dies suddenly and Sally feels that her only friend has been a grinder, when she obtains work in the neighborhood.

Meanwhile a rich banker is looking for his child whom he has never seen. He meets Sally and her home and he is taken to his belated residence. But Sally herself learns of his mistake and steals out to his home. He develops that the love of a lifetime is the rest child, and Sally joins the family in the role of daughter-in-law.

PROGRAM READER

Once in a great while something really novel is seen in pictures. "Bright Skies," starring Za Su Pitts, is in this class. It is a wholesome little romance of the countryside and you and I. The star may not have a large following, but in spite of which she is the hero of the picture. Her last work was "Seeing It Through." This picture may bring the star to favor with your patrons, because they will probably love never have seen any one exactly like her. The best stunt would be an organ grinder with a monkey play- ing in front of your theatre or going through the streets with an appropriate sign.

CATCH LINES

The story of a little East Side child who turned gypsy. A wholesome romance of a poor East Side "nobody" and a young farmhand. Two "nobodies" fell in love. Then one found a father and they both became "somebody."

divorced, marries again and finds that he has made a worse bargain and then divorces his wife the number one. There are a plenty of still pictures, quote from the titles which argue well for the theme presented. The picture is ideal for a fashion show tie-up. It lends itself well for a prologue.

SUGGESTIONS

He thought his wife ought to be a doll faced model on which to hang clothes and scout around as a chorus girl. She thought her husband should act and think like a Presbyterian preacher. It took quite some time and a lot of experience before both learned something about how to live happily though marriage. You may learn by your experience and save yourself much trouble and unhappiness.
"SIMPLE SOULS"
(1 Hampton-Pathe)

Pleasing Picture Which Should Entertain

This is about the classiest picture we've seen Blanche Sweet play in a long time. From the very first we noticed the attention to detail that runs throughout the production in regard to the telling of the story, which if not of the strongest has that peculiar dressing power with sustaining interest enough to make it hold its own on any program. Careful attention is also given to the arrangement of the settings and the selection of the cast, all of whom are actors of reputation upon the screen.

And Blanche Sweet has never done better work than she has in this one, striking closely to the character she is portraying. As Molly Shine, the daughter of a drinking father and weeping mother, who is out of a job because she cannot concentrate on anything but story-books, she is simple and convincing. Fortune has her in the shape of a young duke, who falls in love and marries her, much to the surprise of her folks and the neighbors, who doubt the marriage existence until she produces the certificate and the duke's sister who cannot bring herself to believe that her brother should marry anyone but a lady. In these scenes Miss Sweet is still the simple girl, never once getting out of the character.

Of course the story has its weak points and is wanting in love interest, but it must be understood that the characters are drawn from the better class and that the picture is an attempt rather than to excite the emotions. Length: 6 reels. Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Directed by Robert Thornby.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Blanche Sweet in her latest, "Simple Souls," the Pathe production for Parke release will appear at this theater on or about — of next.

This picture, which as the best Miss Sweet has made to date in both story and production, gives the star an opportunity to display her talents in a way as yet unseen.

In the feature she plays the role of a simple girl whose one thought is "books." Her home is not of the best for she has a drinking father and weeping mother to contend with. But one day fortune brings her way in the form of a young duke who falls in love with and marries her to the astonishment of her folks. After her marriage she has to face the usual disappointments of those who marry out of their class. However, she does it. She is honest and straightforward, possessing an overpowering spirit, and the desire to fly away. She sees an opportunity to make her escape when it is presented, but finds the night and the young duke her husband in a most precarious way, which brings in a climax one of the prettiest stories ever told.

In the cast are such well known screen actors as Charles Meredith, Herbert Stendahl, Kate Lester, Herbert Griswold and Mayme Kelso.

PROGRAM READER

Blanche Sweet's latest, Hampton production for Parke release will be shown at this theater on — of next.

For those who like an absorbing story with plenty of interest intermingled throughout, perhaps together with a pretty star whose role calls for a new display of her talents and most of us do, is the welcome guest to the feature which is the theme of the picture, a whole stack of them to read and be with happy. But her father was given to drinking and her mother to whining over her lot, so that the young duke, who falls in love with and marries her, has to face the usual disappointments. However, she shows herself and the marriage certificate which turns their fears to surprise and they could hardly believe that their daughter could be so fortunate. They thought it was a matter of a higher order, a matter of their home. She is honest and straightforward, possessing an overpowering spirit, and the desire to fly away. She sees an opportunity to make her escape when it is presented, but finds the night and the young duke her husband in a most precarious way, which brings in a climax one of the prettiest stories ever told.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture should play almost any house and give pleasant entertainment. In exploring the story lay stress upon the fact that it is one of those human tales which show enjoyment rather than excitement, which should interest an audience to a great extent. Once given the book and care should be taken not to proclaim at the end of the program that in the story a young duke, who falls in love with and marries her, has to face the usual disappointments. However, she shows herself and the marriage certificate which turns their fears to surprise and they could hardly believe that their daughter could be so fortunate. They thought it was a matter of a higher order, a matter of their home. She is honest and straightforward, possessing an overpowering spirit, and the desire to fly away. She sees an opportunity to make her escape when it is presented, but finds the night and the young duke her husband in a most precarious way, which brings in a climax one of the prettiest stories ever told.

Blanche Sweet is convincing in the role she plays and should please those who have a hankering for her.

CATCH LINES

She loved him but she wanted to run away. Why did she want to do this? See "Simple Souls."

She told him that she loved books, whole stacks of them. Was he pleased with her for liking them? See "Simple Souls."

They didn't believe she was married. How did she convince them? See "Simple Souls."

"A COMMON LEVEL"
(20th Century-Fox)

Spectacular Scenes Will Probably Carry This Through

It seems rather a pity that the amount of energy which must have been used in the making of the "A Common Level," an interesting historical picture that we see in this picture, was not used in a stronger story, better directed and more logically worked out. Edmund Breese, Claire Whitley, and Burton King are not to be blunted; for the modern story is pleasing enough. But their work is negligible, since the greater part of the picture was Likea a stage play with a different cast and director.

An analog is drawn between a fearless business man, who threatens to ruin a girl's father unless she marries him, and Attila, the king of the ancient Hun, who spared Rome only when he obtained the woman of his desire. Ryan, that "ありませんER" villain, with a gun and a little, makes the career and final ruin of the counterpart of the bygone centuries. The sets and battle scenes are truly lavish, but they form chiefly a succession of stupendous views rather than a story. You there is little dramatic appeal, and very little suspense created, despite the opportunity. In fact, the wealth of the interest thrown in, we get a little less occasionally as to what is really happening. But the atmosphere is faithfully and vividly obtained: the Italian actor who plays Attila is good, and the photography is excellent. It seems to be a case of a director, continuity writer, or somehow, who has not a highly developed sense of the action.

Because of the elaborate scenes the picture will probably please the average. The moral it contains is excellent. And could some unnecessary characters, inconsequential incidents, and ambiguous tales of the ancient characters be removed, it would probably go big. Length: 6 reels. Matthew L. Taylor.

THE CAST

Matthew Ryan............. Edmund Breese
Marjorie Whitney............. Claire Whitley
Mr. Schuyler............. Sydney Sydney
Attila............. Sydney Sydney

Directed by Burton King and Ambrose. Scenario by Lloyd Ronigan.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

"A Common Level," a historical picture set in the days of Attila, the scourge of God, woven into an intensely gripping modern story, will be the attraction of this photo playphoto play. It is seen such well known players as Edmund Breese and Claire Whitley, who appear in the modern picture. The thrilling tale of the rise and eventual downfall of Attila the Hun, was toned in Europe. This undoubtedly will prove to be one of the most spectacular motion pictures filmed since the Babylonian scenes in "Intolerance." In some scenes the number of people before the camera numbered well into the thousands.

The two stories of the modern and ancient world would be blended cleverly together. Matthew Ryan is an unscrupulous financier who fights with his shells in gain his ends. Attila fought with his sword. Ryan forces his opposite to the wall by the power of this gold, Attila, by the strength of his armed host, and the fury of his barbaric mind. The battle scenes between the savage Huns and the valorous Bond Nicholson, will go down in motion picture history as one of the most elaborate bits of film ever flashed on the silver screens. The struggle and advance against the helpless Hunites is played to a finish, and Attila working out as he takes the Roman girl as his wife and goes to spare the city. Besides the spectacular scenes, there is in the opening modern story, pre senting and answering a problem that has an universal interest.

PROGRAM READER

Do you want a picture that is different? One that will combine the thrills of the spectacular scenes of "Attila," with a gripping modern story of American business? Such is "A Common Level," the attraction for this theatre on. Much of the film was taken in Italy, and in some scenes fully five thousand people are crowded before the camera. It tells the story of one of the most interesting men in history—Attila the Hun, known as the "scourge of God." You will follow this cruel barbaric emperor through his battles, his pleasures, and watch the intrigue hatched by his cunning mind. Woven in is a modern story which cannot fail to hold your interest.

SUGGESTIONS

You have here a costume play mixed with a little modern story. Boost the two different stories about equally in your advertising. Do not neglect to show something of the modern characters, despite the low scenes you may have to show in the spectacular battle scenes. You can get some fine little ads by being careful with Attila and the background Wall street financier, and plenty of good publicity may be made on this one as a piece of originality, once again in the local historical societies, either of churches or schools, interested. If you promote your efforts be sure you get the right types and good material, otherwise you would spoil the comedy.

CATCH LINES

He fought with his money as Attila fought with his sword.

A modernized Attila—a twentieth century "scourge of God!" Such was Ryan, unscrupulous captain of finance.

King's and slave on a common level in the eyes of their Creator! Such is the theme of this thrilling drama.

"THE FAMILY HONOR"
(King Vidor-Fist National)

Conventional Photoplay Snatches of the Theatre

The old "save the family honor" theme is restored again as the basis of a King Vidor's latest dramatic release. The actors are entirely in place with nothing missing to emphasize the pathos and the note of heart interest. You see the high minded girl and her weak brother--you look upon the bickering here who also has a sterling character, and you are presented to the faithful retainers who stick by the poverty-stricken family no matter whether they are paid any salaries or not. And you can make up your mind that the settings are visualized against Southern backgrounds. The picture carries child interest too, the little figure of Ben Alexander being presented as a disciple of Right Thinking. Mr. Vidor has touched upon Christian Science before and he uses it now to compare the humble life.

"The Family Honor" is rather crude melodrama which is lifted at times through the director's employment of homespun realities. He doesn't show us how the family manages to exist, but he does go to some trouble in drawing the contrast of characters. The picture Charles Meredith maintains until the theatrical climax and the humanities of the earlier scenes are nearly overwhelmed with crude melodramatic incident. The weak brother is accused of murder and the subsequent court room scene defies logic. The entire action here is badly overdrawn. Witnesses lie on the floor who are evidences of the crime. The ending, who furnish evidence are able to tell the truth. And so big brother is given his liberty. Mr. Vidor, who is a stickler for atmosphere, has seen to it that the picture is saturated with this element. Had he conducted his court room according to Hoyle, the picture would have hit nearer. His picture does not present him many opportunities to dress it up with his characteristic style. Florence Vidor gives her customary charming performance. And the supporting cast is capable. "The Family Honor" is not a world-beater by any means. Still it is going to please a whole lot of people. Length, 6 reels.

PRESS NOTICE--STORY

King W. Vidor, the director, who has made a name for himself in his ability to maintain his theatricals in the cause of human interest, has made his latest photoplay entitled "The Family Honor," which has just been released by First National. This picture maintains a dramatic conflict as well as a sound moral and it is excellently interpreted by a cast of capable players. The plot concerns the story of old Tucker family--stripped to its last dollar in the world, its only hope a college youth with a taste for gambling--a young girl, hoping and trusting, and a little boy who is a victim of right thinking.

Beverly, the girl, has put her brother through college, only to find out that he has turned out to be a first class scamp. In order to maintain the honor of her name she fancies to anticipate a raid on a vicious dive in the town--a dive frequented by the brother. The raid is carried on but the young man escapes, although he is later caught and indicted for murder. The evidence is going against him until the bravo returns home from the courtroom and conveys a spirit of truth. The result is the brother is freed of the charge. This picture contains a slice of real life--a slice which is mighty close to the hearts of many.

Mr. Vidor has paid especial attention to the atmosphere so that all the details and backgrounds appear genuine.

PRESS PROGRAM

A King Vidor picture, "The Family Honor," will be the next attraction at the theatre next week. Mr. Vidor is the director and this announcement is given that the patrons are assured of good entertainment. Mr. Vidor is a genius at reflecting life as it is found. His pictures are a mirror image of the times and this is evidenced in the story as well as in the production of which his latest is a shining example. The picture details the struggles of a young girl and her family against poverty, and the girl, who has a delicate heart, and a brother who is a gambler and is the foster child of a rich man. Both are interested in a young girl who endeavoring to maintain her own honor and the traditions of her ancestors against a group of vicious types. How she succeeds with the aid of her friends and the brother is told in scenes of realistic nature, and which are presented with a fine moral. Watch for the date.

SUGGESTIONS

A King Vidor picture should be exploited to its full extent. The film emphasizes the beauty of life and the importance of the family and the community. The picture is a reminder of the problems that face every family today and it is a plea for the protection of the home. Florence Vidor, the actress who plays the title role, has received much praise for her performance. The story is well written and directed by King Vidor, who has made a name for himself in the field of dramatic and realistic cinema. The film is a reminder of the strong moral principles that are necessary in order to maintain a healthy and happy family life.

"THE MIRACLE OF MONEY"
(Henley-Pathé)

A Rather Weak Story Which Loses Interest

We cannot say this is a very good one and we won't say it's a very bad one. But we will say that Hubert Henley has shut away from his mark in this production. In the first place he has selected a story which, although it might have looked good in magazine form, seems to be rather poor screen material. For it lacks most of the interest necessary to make it interesting and amusing. Then again there is much footage wasted in uninteresting scenes which do not help the story at all and tend rather to break up the interest and detract from it.

And then again Henley's direction might be criticized, as he seemed perfectly in love with several especially those of the lighter ones, up to just what his actors should do.

Still we're not going to put the blame on him for we know he didn't have the material to work with. For instance, there are two principal characters in the story, both women, and they are not developed enough. Only Eor inulin; his sister happy because "her man" had never returned. While they are enjoying their new fortune, the "long lost sweetheart" is discovered in a hotel where they are stopping, in a sickly condition. After the marriage, "Jim where have you been" and the explanations, comes the promise of marriage.

But this film is not very amusing, especially the women folks and give them pleasant amusement. Length, 6 reels. Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE--STORY

Hubert Henley's second subject for Pathé distribution, "The Miracle of Money," will be the attraction at the theatre next week. The story is one of a young girl who is loaded with funds and in need of cash. She is faced with a difficult decision, as she is torn between her duty to her family and her own financial needs. The story is well-written and well-directed by Henley, and features a cast of talented actors.

The story centers around a young girl, Eor, who is struggling to make ends meet. She has been working hard to support her family, but the strain is taking its toll. One day, her father comes to her with some unexpected news. He has inherited a large sum of money, but he needs Eor's help to make a decision about what to do with it.

"The Miracle of Money" is a story that explores the themes of family, financial independence, and the importance of making difficult decisions. It is a well-crafted film that will appeal to a wide audience. Length, 6 reels.

THE LOVE EXPERT

Constance Talmadge Scores Again in Romantic Comedy

John Emerson and Anita Loos have not been so inspired in turning out Constance Talmadge's latest picture, "The Love Expert," as they were in a previous release, "In Search of a Sinner." The idea back of it is so imaginative and is such a fine basis for a five reel comedy. One might look in vain for the individuality of the producing team and not find it except in the situations. And even these are mints the sparkle, the rich humor which always be characteristic of them. Which is a case of "going to the well, too often." The well has gone temporarily dry and there is little doubt that Constance has been resort to some unnecessary quips. Were it not for the vital and vibrant personality of the star herself and some unique timing which rationalized the idea the picture would not rise above a dead level.

But the fact that it does soar with rare far-farved pretensions and finishes in much the same line of story is due to Constance Talmadge and her players. The producers have turned in the other direction. Whereas the story was shown in previous releases, running away from a husband or pursuing one in the disguise of a widow or a divorcée, this story preserves her, a slip of a girl, attempting to entice a spouse by certain tests of love. She knows that if the secrets of a man's hand and her heart palpitate and her pulse beats faster and the light-beams mount to her check, that she is on the right track. She realizes that certain men are in love with her through the redness of their faces—a redness which is brought by her beauty and by her screen and which is highly conducive to laughter.

A close-up of a picture that is all the more desirable is in order to win the man of her heart considerable play is given to marrying off his relatives before he will consent. This action has a tendency to become repetitious, but as it is of a farcical vein and, therefore, has the one advantage that the camera can be leaped upon its improbabilities without creating a real menace. The picture doesn't entirely escape its limitations, but it has its humorous value because of the scientific treatment of the theme. The technical side of the feature is praiseworthy in every particular, and the acting is up to requirements. Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Love Expert" is the latest John Emerson and Anita Loos attraction which features Constance Talmadge and it will be presented at the—

Odeon—on December 15th. The program may always be depended upon to furnish comedies of ideas and they haven't failed yet. The authors have provided that whereas this is an act of specialization what would be needed is a change for a young comic girl to try and become expert at love.

This week John Emerson and Constance Talmadge in the role of Babs, a boarding-school girl, whose school days end before the senior year, thanks to her delinquencies in the elementary courses and her name for idiosyncrasy in the science of romance. Babs has other things to attend besides her self-instruction. She has the job of marrying off two sisters and an elderly aunt and compensating her father with matrimony. The picture was adapted from an original story and it is said to be the most original and novel feature released in the last year. The Emerson-Loos productions have been greeted at the theatre-going public at large as classic gems of comedy. Miss Talmadge gives a performance marked for its individuality and charm and she is assisted by her cast.

SUGGESTIONS

You are sure of attracting patronage to see this picture if you do nothing else in advertising. The pictures are used for show cases everywhere that people go to see Constance Talmadge. This star is indeed fortunate in attracting to her pictures. Miss Talmadge gives an intangible item that will carry your home. She is a delight. The picture is a gem of comedy and surely establishes the Emerson-Loos production as experts in their line. Check your booking at the box-office when you see it.

CATCH LINES

Never you wear in love—unless your heart palpitates and you can blush. See the truth in love as seen by Constance Talmadge in "The Love Expert."
"THE INFERIOR SEX"
(First National)

Fairly Interesting Domestic Drama with Mildred Harris

The eternal triangle theme, which is the idea behind this photoplay, has been interpreted to the screen with the greatest amount of skill by Mildred Harris Chaplin. Harris, who has been blessed with a considerable amount of talent, has made a mature, grown-up type of appeal to her audience. The moral which is brought out with abundant platitude to keep it from becoming monotonous in its development. One rather tires of the trusting bride who constantly craves her husband's love because it is not returned to her. The same complaint is made of the earlier reels which have no more depth than the chime of a hallelujah. But this production, which is an adaptation of the story of "The Inferior Sex" by Mildred Harris Chaplin, is much improved in its technical qualities. The story is a study of the woman's mind and the way in which she makes her living and the way in which she achieves her ends. The character of the woman is developed with great skill and subtlety, and the way in which she achieves her ends is most interesting. The picture is well directed and the acting is excellent. The picture is a good one and should be seen by all who are interested in the subject.

THE CAST

Mildred Harris Chaplin as the trusting bride.
Clara Lee Smith as the wife.
John Stepping as the husband.
Milton Sils as the husband.
Preston Foster as the villain.

"TERROR ISLAND"
(Paramount-Arcaft)

Resembles a Wild Serial in Incident and Action

The sponsors of this picture made an apology for it in the introductory caption and so disengaged the spectator to some extent. It is a rather weak picture, which will do as a preliminary to the exploitation of the hundredth king, Houdini. The apology was kept up throughout the length of the feature, which proves the danger of putting something on the public. Really "Terror Island" goes back to the nickelodion days, there being a number of scenes of film in theme, treatment and interpretation. A sophisticated audience will be fairly amused by the first few minutes, but as they did at the nickelodeon, the picture is nothing more or less than a serial compressed into five reels, and the incidents contained in it will have been conceived in a nightmare.

Highly impossible as the ancient legend is, it is going to take a lot of explanation and more apology than what is offered to make a child believe the stunts which take place under water. Houdini might get away with it on a bet, but not Lila Lee. She's splendidly played as a woman or a spirit, but not as a fish. She can't make it through the water with her breath, she can't make it through the water with her face, and she can't make it through the water with her body. The screen is a nightmare.

The story is the anticipated idea of the stolen pearl which must be returned to the idol before a white adventurer will be released from the South Sea cannibals. And in working it out the picture resembles a few after scene of some of the weediest and wildest melodrama that has ever been attempted. It's a story that you can accept in a spirit of good nature and forget its improbability. The meagre scenario and invention and doubtless will please those who "run" up serials.

Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Harry Harper as the white adventurer.
Bessie West as the woman.
Sylvia Morris as the spirit.
Walter Taylor as the chief of the South Sea cannibals.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Farnum, the popular Fox star, whose pictures, ever since his memorable "Les Miserables" have won him a host of admirers, is the attraction of the current motion picture production, "The Orphan." This is a six reel picturization of a thrilling story laid in the desert of America. For years all the countryside has trembled at the mention of "The Orphan," such was the name given to a bandit, played by William Farnum. It was a bandit who was feared by Indians, "the orphans" betters and aids in driving them off. Again, when a stage coach, containing valuable property, was attacked, he comes to the rescue. There is a reformation, of course, after he has cured himself of the influence of the stage girl, but not until he has fulfilled his vow, and killed the man who murdered his father.

The story is so beautiful that pictures to come to the screen in recent months, than "The Orphan." Instead of thrilling and exciting crimes, there are numerous realistic battle scenes. In addition, the picture has been taken off one of the most beautiful spots in America—the Western deserts, with their towering mountains in the background. The picture will remain at the first houses for

PROGRAM READER

Do you like action? Do you delight in seeing a story laid in that romantic and picturesque setting—the great desert West of America? And do you have heart heats as you see hard-fighting and hard-riding battle scenes. William Farnum is the star of this new picture, "The Orphan", which contains all the qualities to make your blood tingle. The feature is not lacking in love interest, and above all—well pleased, after you see "The Orphan."

SUGGESTIONS

Dwell chiefly on the star of this picture, Mention "The Carusian Brothers," if you have shown it, and even go as far back as "Les Miserables," in telling of his previous work. His admirers like to watch him "see red," and start to fight. He is a clever, partly silent, partly verbal part. He is a leader of the stars as the "good, bad, man." Show a photograph of him in the lobby. As a sentence for the orphans in the story, tell of any good orphan in your screen. Cowards and bandits in the lobby and streets, seem the best way to create the atmosphere of the story.

CATCH LINES

There is good in the worst of men—even in such a man as "The Orphan," an outlaw feared throughout the countryside. William Farnum, the very Fox star, in a thrilling story of the West. The story of an outlaw, who saved the life of the man who sought to kill him, and the girl who eventually returned him.

LEAVE IT TO ME

Average Farce Comedy Starring William Russell

The laughs in this latest William Russell farce comedy are chiefly due to fast and sneerous work on the part of the cast, the star in particular. The story requires a long time to get started, and once started, it is revealed to be a good farce idea, but lacking in rapid farce action.

The star plays the rich young man again, this time forced to go to work by a fiancee who wishes to see him do something useful in life. He has a detective agency in a crimeless city, confident that cases will be few and far between. But his sweetheart discovers the scheme and in order to straighten matters out, the young man hires as crooks as possible to start a wave of crime, in order that he may win glory for himself by bringing back the boot. The troubles of another rich young man, who one day have left his establishment. The amateur detective recovers the stolen gits, rescues the kidnapped bridegroom, and reinstates him in the good graces of his sweetheart.

If you are looking for something "Leave It To Me" will satisfy, although it will not elicit continuous laughter. There is real good comedy in the high spots, however, and the star ought to win new admirers. He is supported by a good cast including Eileen Percy, Marcelle Daley and Hal Coolly. Russell has shown a difficult character part and we fear, will grow a little tiresome towards the end. Photography and editing are up to the average. Length, 5 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Mary Melody—Eileen Percy

Mr. Durrington—Hal Coolly

Vida De Vere—Marcelle Daley

Red Kelley—William Elmer

Mrs. Stephen Holmes—Milla Davenport

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An old favorite to motion picture fans will be "Leave It To Me" at the theater on . . . when "Leave It To Me" a William Fox production, with William Russell as the star, will be the second story man sends some inquiring letters. He crooks finally start to work in earnest, however, and come to a wedding to steal all the presents. But the amateur detective recovers the stolen gilt, rescues the kidnapped bridegroom, and reinstates him in the good graces of his sweetheart. Russell has shown a difficult character part and we fear, will grow a little tiresome towards the end. Photography and editing are up to the average. Length, 5 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

PROGRAM READER

Do you believe in work? That is to say, do you go to work if you had millions? Dickey Derickson, the millionaire hero of "Leave It To Me," the star, splitting comedy which will be at this theater on . . ., does not relish the idea. But his sweetheart said she would never marry an idler. So Dickey went to work—literally a fashion. For if he had not gone to work the gang or crooks will never have come on the scene and kidnapped the bridegroom. And if this had not happened there would have been no "Leave It to Me," to make you laugh for a full hour. William Russell is the star, and you know what to expect from this limelight screen gem.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a star to boost in this picture. William Russell already has a large following, so use a photograph of him in your lobby, mention him big in your copy, and write about him on your mailing cards. For a teaser use the slogan, "Leave it to me," said Dickey. "I'll fix it." Who was Dickey? About the only good thing is with a detective agency, and such an arrangement naturally would be difficult. An automobile repair shop might be interested, using the catch-line.

"Leave It to Me." Unusual name mention your title and star. Do not tell all of your story in your program or press notice, but just enough to arouse interest.

JOHN BARRYMORE in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"

BY ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON
DIRECTED BY JOHN S. ROBERTSON

A Paramount Artcraft Picture
All Records Broken in Holy Week!

JOHN BARRYMORE
in
"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"

At the Rivoli Theatre, New York, has broken all the house records for paid admissions. And this in Holy Week, the worst week in the year for the theatres!

THE CRITICS SAY:

"In 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' John Barrymore contributes what may be recognized as the finest screen acting yet achieved." — N. Y. Tribune.

"A classic of the films. The applause of the spectators was the greatest heard in a motion picture theatre in years." — N. Y. Evening Post.

"With 'Richard III' on the stage and 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' on the screen, John Barrymore has done the best acting within the memory of this generation." — N. Y. Call.

"If any actor could make movies talk, John Barrymore would in 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.' His personality seemed to leap from the screen." — N. Y. Sun and Herald.

"John Barrymore has set a standard for future tragedians. The character is depicted as truly as the words of Stevenson drew it. One leaves the theatre with the belief that motion pictures are on the verge of a new era." — N. Y. World.

"For the most part the picture is action, wonderfully interpreted by John Barrymore and directed by John S. Robertson. The screen has caught all the eerie atmosphere of this eternal classic. It is impossible to exaggerate the beauty of the settings and the adroit manner in which the plot is swung to its inevitable ending." — N. Y. Globe.

"'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' is one of the best features it has ever been our good fortune to witness." — Morning Telegraph.

"John Barrymore is as eloquent on the screen as he is on the stage. 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' is a gripping picture under the influence of Mr. Barrymore's acting." — N. Y. Evening Sun.

"Barrymore's insistently reaching, temperamental hands turn to evil claws before your eyes. His lean dreaming face takes on a look of unbelievable ferocity. He is a cruel and monstrously malignant spirit." — N. Y. News.

"John Barrymore's masterful acting in 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' is without question the outstanding bit of screen work in many months. It ranks equally with his highly artistic 'Richard III'" — N. Y. Evening Mail.

"Barrymore makes the dual character tremendous. His performance is one of pure acting on as high a level as has ever been attained by any one. Future generations may see 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' and in addition to enjoying Barrymore's art they will receive a personal impression of him and know him as his predecessors can never have known. 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' is a work worth while in itself for all time." — N. Y. Times.

In the dark mirror of dreams she saw—what? Her other self? Or what she might have been?
She saw herself dragged through the crime and shame of the underworld, herself the centre of unimagined strife and excitement—

It's the most novel and dramatic picture in which Dorothy Dalton has ever appeared.

Action, suspense and mystery make every minute of it thrilling and exciting.

HOUDINI in
"Terror Island"

BY ARTHUR B. REEVE and JOHN W. GREY DIRECTED BY JAMES CRUZE

A Paramount Arctraft Picture

OVER the cliff—with Lila Lee locked inside—crashed the safe! The cannibals shrieked a mighty shriek of triumph!

And then—

In the most thrilling and amazing underwater scene ever filmed you see Houdini swim under water to the safe—open it—and carry Lila safe to the submarine.

Houdini holds the world's record for under water endurance. No other man can stay under water as long as he does in this picture.

And this is only one of the hundred thrills that make "Terror Island" the most thrilling and sensational melodrama ever made.

The most important announcement
ROBERTSON-COLE
has ever made
ALTHOUGH the stars and pictures now being announced have been definitely decided upon, Robertson-Cole makes the positive assertion that none of these productions shall be released unless they pass the test which classes them as "Special." Robertson-Cole is in a position to make this declaration because its contracts with producers provide for the rejection of pictures until they are of the highest standard of excellence.

The box-office value of these attractions should be self-evident to every progressive and discriminating exhibitor.

What Robertson-Cole stands for in the industry was made quite clear in Mr. Cole’s speech at the recent convention of our branch managers, when he said: "The day I feel that Robertson-Cole cannot remain in the film business and do it honorably and straight,—we leave the field. I do not care for it if our name is going to be jeopardized." This statement sums up "the honesty of purpose" that guides our every business transaction.

ROBERTSON-COLE DISTRIBUTING CORP’N.
A. S. KIRKPATRICK
Vice-President and General Manager.
THIS REMARKABLE STAR NEEDS NO INTRODUCTION—HER DRAWING POWER, GREAT AS IT NOW IS, WILL BE INCREASED THROUGH THE PICTURES ROBERTSON-COLE WILL RELEASE AT THE EXPIRATION OF HER PRESENT CONTRACT, BY LIMITING HER SCREEN ENDEAVOR TO FOUR BIG SPECIALS A YEAR—EACH PRODUCTION A DRAMA OF SUPER-QUALITY.
When the mighty combination of Otis Skinner in "Kismet" reaches the motion picture public, the highest point in artistic splendor, the pinnacle of dramatic power will be attained. Months of untiring effort will be spent in preparing this stage success to make it the most lavish production ever offered.
DURING HER PRESENT TRIUMPHANT SEASON IN NEW YORK IN "DECLASSE," ETHEL BARRYMORE WILL APPEAR IN JUST ONE PRODUCTION FOR THE SCREEN. THIS SPECIAL "THE SUPER-WOMAN," GIVES AMPLE OPPORTUNITY TO ATTAIN THE WONDERFUL EMOTIONAL HEIGHTS BY WHICH MISS BARRYMORE'S MARVELOUS WORK HAS BECOME A BY-WORD.
THIS INTERNATIONAL IDOL COMES TO THE SILVER SHEET ON THE CREST OF THE MIGHTIEST WAVE OF POPULARITY EVER ENJOYED BY ANY MAN. HE WILL BE PRESENTED IN A MODERN AMERICAN SOCIETY DRAMA, ABSORBING AND UNIQUE IN PLOT, DIRECTED BY JOHN G. ADOLFI. IT WILL BE A "MILLION DOLLAR" ATTRACTION.
FROM A SUCCESS UNSTINTED AND DESERVING, BUILDED UPON THE APEAL WHICH HIS DELIGHTFUL MAN'S-MAN CHARACTERIZATIONS AMPLY JUSTIFIED, DUSTIN FARNUM SHALL NOW BRING TO THE EXHIBITOR A SERIES OF TWO-FISTED STORIES, THE INITIAL ONE BEING "BIG HAPPINESS."
THIS FAMOUS COMEDIAN, WON FROM HIS PINNACLE ON THE AMERICAN STAGE, WILL APPEAR IN SPECIAL FEATURES, WHICH IT IS PREDICTED SHALL CREATE A SENSATION. "THE SMART ALECK," A SATURDAY EVENING POST STORY BY IRVIN S. COBB, WILL BE THE FIRST "CHIC" SALE PICTURE.
GREETED WITH UNANIMOUS ENTHUSIASM, THIS NEW STAR FIRMLY ESTABLISHED HIMSELF IN PUBLIC FAVOR IN "THE BELOVED CHEATER." CAPTURING THE POPULAR FANCY BY THE UNIQUE CHARACTER OF HIS WORK, HE WILL FURTHER ENDEAR HIMSELF TO HIS ADMIRERS IN "THE BUTTERFLY MAN," A SUPER-SPECIAL OF ASSURED BOX OFFICE VALUE.
FOUR SPECIALS, REVEALING THIS REMARKABLE STAR AT THE HEIGHT OF HIS UNQUESTIONED ABILITY, ARE PLANNED FOR THE COMING YEAR. EACH OF THESE NEW PICTURES WILL BE MORE ELABORATE AND EVEN MORE DRAMATIC THAN ANY IN WHICH HAYAKAWA HAS EVER APPEARED.
The world-famous character of Arsene Lupin, unrivaled in the annals of fiction, will be brought to the exhibitor in "33" to be followed by a limited number of stories each season from the Arsene Lupin series. Wedgwood Howell, ideally cast as Arsene Lupin, will be featured in the initial production.
THE POPULARITY OF MISS BARRISCALE HAS SHOWN STRONG AND STEADY INCREASE WITH EACH RELEASE AND UNDER THE NEW PLAN WHICH WILL LIMIT HER PRODUCTIONS TO SPECIALS, THE DEMAND FOR HER PICTURES IS CERTAIN TO BE EVEN MORE MARKED.
SURPASSING IN PICTURED ELOQUENCE, EVEN HIS FAMOUS CANNIBAL RELEASES, THE FEATURE MARTIN JOHNSON IS NOW SENDING FROM THE INTERIOR OF THE ISLAND OF MMLUKULU, WHERE IT WAS PHOTOGRAPHED AT THE RISK OF LIFE, WILL FASCINATE WITH SIGHTS THE LIKE OF WHICH HAVE NEVER BEFORE GREETED WHITE MEN'S EYES.
RARELY THE SILENT DRAMA BRINGS THE EQUAL OF “THE FORTUNE TELLER,” THE STAGE TRIUMPH WHICH GRIPPED NEW YORK BY ITS INTENSE DRAMATIC POWER, NOW MOULDED INTO A MASTERPIECE BY THAT GENIUS OF MOTION PICTURE DIRECTORS, ALBERT CAPELLANI, WITH ITS ORIGINAL STAR, MARJORIE RAMBEAU, IN A NEVER-TO-BE-FORGOTTEN CHARACTERIZATION.
What They Say About "The Dangerous Talent" with Margarita Fisher

MOTION PICTURE NEWS:
"Plenty of action. A well directed, exciting climax. Story is interesting and exceedingly appealing."

AMUSEMENTS:  "Here at last is a real picture. A model of dramatic construction. Margarita Fisher has arrived. Not only is her work excellent, but also that of all the supporting cast. Harvey Clark deserves special mention."

WID'S:  "Good play with unusual twists. Interests because of many surprising turns of plot."

BILLBOARD:  "Constant interest in the unfolding of the story. Miss Fisher proves adept at emotional work and received splendid support throughout."

MOVING PICTURE WORLD:  "Satisfactory presentation of story in which elements of melodrama play a prominent part. Miss Fisher is exceedingly attractive."

DRAMATIC MIRROR:  "In this day when so many film plays are sent out with barely enough plot to get by with audiences, it seems almost extravagant for any one picture to have so much story as has 'The Dangerous Talent.' It is all intensely interesting and not in the least confusing."

HERE'S WHAT A FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS' EXCHANGE THINKS OF SCREEN SMILES

"After viewing the last three releases of 'SCREEN SMILES' I have come to the conclusion that it is indeed as you told me—a novelty short reel in every sense of the word.

The short, snappy sayings handed me many a laugh, and along with the illustrations should prove a valuable addition to any theatre program.

I feel that once an exhibitor starts playing 'SCREEN SMILES' that it will undoubtedly remain a fixture in his theatre.

This five hundred feet of film has more laughs than the average two reel comedy, and judging from the business we are doing now with 'SCREEN SMILES' it will be at the head of our short stuff in the very near future.

Wishing you every success, I am,

Yours very truly,

WHEN Inter-Ocean Film Corporation was organized five years ago, it defined its policies as an export concern specializing in the distribution of American films in foreign territories.

In explaining its policies, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation realized that the American Producer who conducted a business largely confined to national boundaries usually concentrated his sales efforts towards domestic distribution and gave little or no attention to his foreign film sales.

That was five years ago. At that time Inter-Ocean Film Corporation occupied an insignificant suite of offices; today the expansion of its business has necessitated the exclusive use of a five-story building.

Success has crowned its efforts.

During its brief career as an export house, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation has taken over the problems of export distribution, and brought the old-world markets to new-world merchants.

If your problem is the distribution of your product in foreign markets, then you need our experience and facilities.

MARKSMEN agree—it's easier to crack the bullseye with your first shot than with your second.

When Erich Von Stroheim made his first production, "BLIND HUSBANDS", Julian Johnson, Editor of Photoplay, termed it "the almost perfect photoplay"—and it made money for exhibitors in the same splendid proportion—such a golden surprise that people wondered if Von Stroheim had another shot like it in his system.

Well, folks—he has! He's done it again! Another bullseye! In "THE DEVIL'S PASS-KEY" Von Stroheim has done the impossible. He has beaten Von Stroheim!

What's it about? Women! What does Von Stroheim know about women? Too much—the women think. That's why they'll love him and hate him—and pack your house to the fire limits.

See this amazing production now. Genius doesn't show every day.

BOX OFFICE APPROVAL THE ONLY HONEST SEAL OF MERIT

The public verdict on "SEX" has been pronounced. The verdict was unanimous and read like this: "SEX" is one of the very few GREAT PICTURES. Nothing is more conclusive and convincing than the PUBLIC VERDICT. There is no higher authority than the message from the box office. It makes all argument and all praise unnecessary. IT REPRESENTS THE ELOQUENCE OF FACTS. In our recent announcement we told of big bookings in Chicago, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Boston, Atlanta, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Spokane, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Fort Wayne, Detroit, New Orleans, Dallas, Galveston, Nashville.

"SEX" rises above the average picture like a skyscraper tops a bungalow; it intoxicates the eye, satisfies the mind and carries its appeal right into the depths of your heart.

"SEX" will raise the fame and popularity of your house and impart a new dignity to your screen, it inspires your patrons with the desire for regular attendance at your theatre.

"SEX" embodies the combined triumph of a great actress—Louise Glaum—a great producer, J. Parker Read, Jr. and a great scenario writer, C. Gardner Sullivan and is worthy of your best showmanship.

Directed by J. Searle Dawley

Heart interest abounds in "The Harvest Moon." It is the heart interest that hushes the crowd into sympathetic silence; it is the heart interest that makes 100% entertainment; it is the heart interest that wins for the box office and for the prestige of your theatre. Here a master plays on the heart strings—America's premier playwright—Augustus Thomas. Every touch shows the assured skill of the master hand and the finale comes with unexcelled power tinged with light and sweetness. Your audience will bid a joyous welcome to "The Harvest Moon."

Life and Folks in the Giant Forests Mirrored in Masterful Fashion

ACTION is the keynote of "KING SPRUCE"—which often rises to great dramatic heights and leads to tense, gripping situations. Then, after a whirlwind of elemental passions, comes the sun smiling through the clouds and makes your audience share in the happiness so touchingly depicted on the screen.

"KING SPRUCE" has for its background the giant forests of the North.

THE STORY is woven out of the lives of the men and women who live in close communion with Nature through the changing seasons of the year; quiet folks capable of big passions and of big deeds.

"KING SPRUCE" the men and women of the forest called him because of his wealth, his power, his domineering ways. Unscrupulous as well as tyrannous he challenged the laws of God and man until the plain honesty and simple heart of one of Nature's noblemen led him into the light.

NATURE'S NOBLEMAN is Mitchell Lewis, the famous 'Poleon of "The Barrier" and here he is a second 'Poleon. A knight of the woods "without fear and without reproach."

The love story is woven deftly into the very heart of "KING SPRUCE," its course is rough but the end is full of pathos and tenderness.

Exhibitors Herald

UNIQUE GRIFFITH TOUCHES

"D. W. Griffith's latest production, 'The Idol Dancer,' is a distinct departure from former efforts. The unique Griffith touches, however, are there, and the unusual handling of the beautiful Clarine Seymour, more fascinating than ever, would put the picture over were there less plot material than there is. Then, too, there is Richard Barthelmess, whose 'Chink' in 'Broken Blossoms' marked him for stellar honors ere the picture had played half the country. In the beachcomber we have another splendid characterization, and his delineation of Dan McGuire is the outstanding feature of 'The Idol Dancer.'

"Griffith never does things by halves and when he stages a panic-stricken village attacked by savages, it all seems very real indeed to the spectator by reason of the completeness of detail and action. Beautiful photography and unusual angles of life in the tropics distinguish the picture from cheap, clap-trap attempts at this sort of thing and make the whole a thoroughly enjoyable feature."—Exhibitors Herald.

TAKES CENTRAL WEST BY STORM

"Clarine Seymour, dark and lithe, is the heroine of 'The Idol Dancer,' the attraction at the Circle all this week. Griffith could hardly have found another actress in pictures who could have played the part of an impulsive child of nature as this slim, elfish creature plays it. The picture abounds in rich atmosphere and dramatic incident."—Indianapolis News.

SUPREME AMONG FILMS

"Every once in a while David Griffith produces a picture which helps to hold him in his present position of supremacy among film producers. Such a picture is 'The Idol Dancer.' It is expertly photographed, craftily arranged, all the details authentic, and it has that invaluable thing—atmosphere.

"The sort of romance Jack London might have written, given the setting that London loved, the South Pacific Islands, where the white man has barely encroached and where cannibals and head hunters still flourish. Against a background of tall palm trees and the gently rolling surf that touches tropical islands, Mr. Griffith has placed his romance. Clarine Seymour is the charming heroine who dances in worship before her Devil-devil idol. There are big melodramatic scenes.

"The picture is not only sumptuously mounted, but consistently made. All the details build up an authentic frame for the story. Clarine Seymour is a capital little actress, and Richard Barthelmess, who is one of the finest actors on the screen, gives a fine portrayal."—The Indianapolis Star.

Imagine a girl winning a man — then losing him through chicanery — then meeting him again but seeking to pass him by because he had passed her love by. Then imagine her gaining the knowledge that the man had NOT ceased to love her; that she had been fooled into thinking his ardor had cooled by his own parents! And so he had wed another, chosen by his family. This is just the start of the story. Be sure to play MARY MILES MINTER in "JENNY BE GOOD" From the popular book by WILBUR FINLEY FAULEY is the selection of the exhibitor who picks wisely, showing the entertainment needs of his public to be ever in mind. A good story by Wilbur Finley Fauley has been made into a good picture by that producer of real box-office attractions, William Desmond Taylor. It is a tale of twists and romance that proves Dan Cupid can’t be worsted. Jenny IS good, but her sweetheart’s designing parents cause enough mischief to make ten Jennies wicked.

MARY MILES MINTER is more-than-good as Jenny. Credit must also be given Julia Crawford Ivers for a good screen adaptation of the Fauley book, which was one of the best sellers of the season.

The Poster Problem

The mind of a child at birth is as blank as a photographic plate. As that child progresses through childhood, maturity and old age, impressions are being registered upon it every instant during waking moments. In America there are over one hundred million such minds,—and every one of them has a different record imprinted upon it. When you get that fact in your mind you will have some conception of the basic factor of the tremendous problem that the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. is dealing with.

It is the problem of the universal appeal. The problem of discovering what those common factors are that appeal to each and every one of these one hundred million minds. The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. approaches it from the purely psychological angle, and solves it in a purely artistic manner. The answer is the RITCHEY poster!

It does make that universal appeal,—and it does so because it is always directed toward one of the essential,—elemental,—universal,—human emotions! Further, it always does it in a characteristically powerful and artistic way. To its universal appeal it adds the elements of beauty and sincerity. As a result it is invariably convincing!

Add to these things the further fact that every RITCHEY poster is a piece of perfect lithographic execution, and you will understand why it is considered the criterion for all motion picture posters!
The Newspaper and the Picture

A Reiteration of Truths Promoted by John S. Spargo’s Important Mission

We have used the above caption on many previous editorials.

The business in general knows and many newspapers know that, beginning several years ago, MOTION PICTURE NEWS has continually advocated the close cooperation of the newspaper and the picture; we have stated emphatically that, in our opinion, the newspaper was the inevitable basis not alone of local theatre advertising but of those large, national advertising campaigns which were bound to develop with a product of so universal an appeal.

Our Editorials, Complete Plan Book, Service Sections, Exhibitors’ Service Bureau, Newspaper Census, Studio Directory, etc., were all originated and built to this important end— to bring into being and make practical this very essential relation.

The recent action of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers—the appointment of Mr. John S. Spargo to undertake, through field work, to establish intelligent and practical relations between newspapers and pictures—is, it seems to us, one of the most vital and constructive moves this industry has ever undertaken.

Mr. Spargo is an experienced newspaper editor. He has established photoplay departments in several newspapers. He knows, by close observation and in a practical way, why the newspaper needs the picture going reader and why the picture needs the newspaper. He goes forth well equipped with experience and information.

If he brings about a clear understanding back and forth, between these two big factors, the Association will have accomplished a very large and necessary work.

A good deal of misunderstanding must be cleared away.

In the first place, the newspaper, in years past—and not far past— has been deluged with the largest quantity and poorest quality of press matter ever issued from any source. Photos have been about as bad. We won’t go into details—except to say that the Editor everywhere got fairly disgusted and the waste on the part of the picture industry was enormous. The money might have been spent—to some avail—in the most general kind of straight advertising.

On the other hand the newspaper has never understood the picture industry. The industry was obviously large, evidently prosperous and quite clearly wanted a lot of publicity. So “Why don’t you advertise?”—asked the newspaper.

Well—let us see.

Every good advertising man knows that you cannot successfully advertise a product in a national way unless (1) your product is of a quality sufficiently high and sufficiently uniform to stand up under the advertising and (2) unless your product is so evenly and thoroughly distributed that people led to buy it can do so when and where they want to.

In a nutshell—the motion picture industry is too young to have mastered either—and furthermore the picture will never be uniform in quality like other products.

Consequently the advertising has been largely local. It had to be. The exhibitor advertised his picture—because he had it and could say where it would be shown and because, in some instances, he knew what he was advertising. (We might add here that in the past, so fast and behindhand has production been, advertising matter has been issued from New York headquarters before the picture had arrived from Los Angeles and was seen.)

This exhibitor advertising—in some instances the producer shares the expense—has, of itself, reached large proportions. A number of newspapers carry this space to the amount of from $5,000 to $15,000 a month. Some newspapers exceed this; with some, exhibitor advertising exceeds department store advertising.

We have some national campaigns—and generous ones. A few producers have been big enough, courageous enough and their product has been uniformly good enough to brave those economic wrinkles of the young industry which make national advertising an exceedingly difficult proposition.

We believe these economic wrinkles will be ironed away—and with the speed characteristic of this remarkable industry.

In the meantime and outside of advertising the fact stands forth, for the newspaper to face, that today fully 13,000,000 people go every day to pictures, and they want and should have interesting news of the entertainment and educator of this day and generation—the motion picture.

Fight on Censorship Legislation Resumed in Massachusetts

Expenses Incident to Enforcement of Bill Argued Before the Committee

Claiming that censorship would be ineffective in Massachusetts, Judge J. Albert Brackett of Boston, representing a group of theatrical interests in Boston against motion picture censorship in the State of Massachusetts, pointed out that a number of films, which proponents for censorship had declared to be objectionable, have been shown in Ohio, Pennsylvania and Canada, where motion-picture censorship prevails.

Hundreds crowded into the House Chamber to hear once again the arguments for and against movie censorship in the Bay State. The hearing is being held before the Ways and Means Committee.

The bill was reported by the Mercantile Affairs Committee to provide for the censoring of motion pictures under the direction of the Department of Public Safety.

Statistics showing the amount of cost of a censorship body to the state were presented by Representative John L. Fitzgerald of Boston, a member of the house ways and means committee. The statements made by Representative Fitzgerald, were that the bill for state censorship of motion pictures under the direction of the State Department of public safety would cost the state $100,000 a year, and because of the proposed fees for reviewing films, would probably cause exhibitors to advance the price of admission to the theaters showing pictures.

Colonel Alfred L. Foote, head of the Department of Public Safety, estimated that the censorship work would cost his department $20,350 a year, and that the revenue from the fees would amount to $71,200 annually. Representative Fitzgerald attacked these figures as to expense, declaring them far too low, and said that the bill would easily cost $100,000 the first year.

Continuing with his arguments, the colonel estimated the expenses under the bill to his department as follows:

A director of censorship, salary $3,000; nine state police officers, $2,400 each; $21,600; three motion-picture operators at $1,500 each, $4,500; four clerks or stenographers at $900 each, $3,600; for rent of reviewing rooms and offices, $1,000; contingent services, $2,000; three motion-picture machines, $1,350; one motion picture booth, $300. Colonel Foote estimated his department would review about 31,200 reels a year, at a fee of $1 a reel, this would yield $31,200.

Getting his estimates down to a finer degree, Colonel Foote, stated that, with the law in effect, 600 reels 1,000 feet in length would be inspected weekly. Three machines, operating six hours a day for five days a week, could dispose of this matter, he said; and nine additional men would be needed to pass upon the films and do inspection work—work the theaters throughout the state.

Representative Mitchell of Springfield, a member of the committee, inquired what appeal an exhibitor would have from decisions of the director of censorship. In replying, Colonel Foote, said he would first have an appeal to himself, and later, if he wished, to the superior court.

"Then in your case, you would act as a court of one," said Mitchell.

"Yes," said the Colonel.

"You couldn't do this work for less than $1,000 a year and do it right," declared Representative Fitzgerald. "Your salary estimate is too low. The inspection fees will be passed on to the consumer and those who go to theaters where pictures are exhibited, will have to pay more admission."

Representative Lyman of Easthampton, who is chairman of the committee, said that he thought the fee of $1 too low, and that it ought to be $3.50 anyway.

H. Preston Clark of Boston, who conducted the hearing for the proponents, said the law was willing to have the measure passed upon by the voters. The Legislature, however, has no power to send it to the voters; it could only get before the voters in case the legislature should pass it, which seems doubtful just now. Clark said the proposed law has the support of 1,000,000 people who desire that the pictures they and their children see shall be more wholesome than they now are. This was, he estimated, by the leader of the proponents, is about one-third of the total population of the State of Massachusetts.

Representative Davis B. Keniston of Boston, House chairman of the Mercantile Affairs Committee, which reported the measure, said he saw no reason why censorship should hurt a good picture.

Chairman Keniston opened the meeting, explaining certain financial features of the bill. One section of the bill as favored by the Mercantile Affairs Committee, reads:

"A charge of $1 shall be paid for the inspection of each reel of film or each duplicate reel of film not exceeding 1,000 linear feet; and $2 for each reel of film or duplicate exceeding 1,000 linear feet. All money so received shall be paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth. A reel of film for purely educational, charitable or religious purposes may be in the discretion of the Commissioner, be approved without charge."

Leading the opponents of the bill during the hearing in the House Auditorium, Judge J. Albert Brackett, told of a number of pictures shown in Boston and objected to by the proponents of the pending legislation, which he said have been passed as proper in every state in the Union. The judge said that this attitude on the part of the proponents shows just what the state censorship would lead to in Massachusetts were the law passed.

Continuing, he objected to the bill as placing too great powers in the hands of the State Police. The State Police would have the right to stop any picture having a tendency towards corrupting morals.

"Who," asked the judge, "is to determine such a tendency?" He said that film men, who buy millions of dollars worth of films should know what the Standards of the State are before they make their purchases.

"What changes in the present bill would you suggest to carry out your idea, inquired Representative Young?"

"It is not a question of adding anything to the provisions of the bill. The bill, as drawn, does not set up a standard. It sets up an individual who shall determine the standard. The bill simply says that obscene, immoral, indecent films shall not be shown. It leaves it to one man to determine what is objectionable."

"Censorship of films is asked for not only by those who want to protect children, they say, from the immoral tendencies which they say some films lead to; it is asked by some simply on the ground of 'injurious effect.' Out west a manufacturer complained of this 'injurious effect' because workmen in his employ saw bathtubs in a motion picture exhibition and (Continued on page 3818)

Harry Levey Back From Conferences in West

Harry Levey, general manager of the Industrial and Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, returned Wednesday from a hurried trip to Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Chicago where he was called for conferences with the officers of the leading motion-picture exhibitors' associations of the West.

The conference with Western exhibitors at the Hotel Windsor to which Mr. Levey was invited, resulted in a cooperation to secure a satisfactory understanding between Mr. Levey and the exhibitors in regard to Universal Industrial and Educational motion-picture distribution. In future these Universal pictures will be booked to the members of all the associations that were represented in the conference, on the Universal's direct-payment-to-exhibitor plan, the payments being made through the association officers upon report that the pictures have been properly exhibited.

New Child Admittance Bill Up in New York

So great was the opposition to the Cotillo bill, recently introduced in the New York Senate and which if passed and signed by the Governor, would have allowed unaccompanied children between the ages of 11 and 16 to be admitted to motion picture theatres in New York City and segregated in charge of a matron, that it was decided to withdraw the bill and that in its place another bill has now been introduced and fathered by Senator Kelley of New York City. This bill is a statewide one and if passed, will allow children sixteen under the age of sixteen to be admitted, providing they are accompanied by their parent or guardian or by an adult person authorized by its parent or guardian. The new matter in the bill is that embodied in the words "or by an adult person authorized by its parent or guardian."

City Votes Three to One for Sunday Openings

Coast Believes Abrams Has Big "Six"

Los Angeles (Special).—Hiram Abrams left here for New York on Wednesday, April 21st, declining to state the result of his coast visit. All's Ready for Eastern Studios Ball

WITH several prominent screen stars present, the Eastern Studios Ball, to be held April 26 at the Hotel Commodore for the benefit of a welfare fund for the studio employees of the Famous Player-Lasky Corporation, is expected to be one of the biggest affairs of its kind ever held in New York City. Nearly 1,000 tickets already have been sold, and the sale of boxes to stars and prominent motion picture men has swelled the receipts by several thousands of dollars, it is declared.

The committee in charge of the ball has arranged several features for the entertainment. Emma Trentini, the famous light opera singer, will sing selections from favorite successes, and several artists from the Keith vaudeville circuit will participate. The vaudeville program will begin at 8:30 o'clock and last until 10 o'clock, when the dancing will begin to continue until the "wee small hours."

Cinematographers Choose Officers for 1920

The American Society of Cinematographers, which now has a chosen membership of fifty-seven cinematographers, announces that the following board of governors has been elected for 1920:

This board has chosen the following officers:

Pennsylvania Exhibitors Are Urged to Unite

M. Feitler, former president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, states, in a letter addressed to Pennsylvania Exhibitors, that owing to the existence of the American Exhibitors' Association in Pennsylvania, it was considered advisable to merge with the latter organization and thus ally forces in a common cause. Consequently says Mr. Feitler, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania was disbanded about seven months ago. "Therefore, I urge the exhibitors to join forces with the American Exhibitors' Association, as it is only with a united organization that our business can be protected," Mr. Feitler declares.

Americanization Work Is Making Rapid Strides

Harry M. Crandall, chairman of the Exhibitors' Branch of the Americanization Committee of the Motion Picture Industry, reports that exhibitors all over the country are continuing to show fullest cooperation in the matter of using trailers and slides bearing the slogans, written by Franklin K. Lane, former Secretary of the Interior. The producers are reported to be hard at work on pictures designed for service in the Americanization movement. D. W. Griffith is engaged in making a picture for this purpose and Famous Players is turning out a new production for the patriotic drive. Goldwyn announces that it will have ready within a few weeks a picture, the scenario for which has been written by Rupert Hughes. "There is no commercial side to this movement," says Mr. Crandall. "The producing companies are making the films without profit, and they are being distributed without profit and are being sold to the exhibitor at the lowest possible rate."

Exhibitors' League Discusses Proposed Bills

A meeting of the executive committee of the New York State Moving Picture Exhibitors' League was held in Albany on April 20th. The meeting was given over largely to a discussion of motion picture bills that had been introduced in the state legislature this year and which are still hanging fire. A tentative report was also made in connection with the recent state convention at Utica. Announcement was also made to the effect that New York State will be represented by forty-five delegates at the National Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, during the second week in June. This is one from each congressional district.

Pauline Frederick a Robertson-Cole Star Under New Contract

Emotional Star is Signed to Appear in a Series of Many Big Features

Robertson-Cole definitely announces that it has entered into a contract to extend over a period of several years with Pauline Frederick. The emotional screen star will appear in a series of super-productions, beginning at the termination of her present contract.

Miss Frederick is considered one of the biggest favorites with the motion picture public, and her pictures are exhibited in the largest first run theatres throughout the country as fast as they are released. In productions with vigorous stories of modern American life, always with strong love interest, and not infrequently tinged with a mystery motive, Miss Frederick is scoring month after month.

Never artificially advanced by exaggerated advertising campaigns, her success is said to be based on her own hard work, and has been growing better, and of wider, and more compelling nature with each Broadway and national success. Miss Frederick combines that rare trinity; great emotional acting ability, charm of person, and a deep sincerity, with a happiness and fervor which have made her a world star, eagerly sought after in every community.

Robertson-Cole signed Miss Frederick as part of its progressive plans to obtain the productions of those stars which will win most continually and most certainly for the exhibitor. It feels that Miss Frederick fits these qualifications as nearly as any of the many stars and attractions which it has placed under contract during the last few months.

Miss Frederick was born in the City of Boston, Mass., and was educated in the private schools of that city. She early showed an inclination to go on the stage and secured her first engagement with Rogers Brothers, the famous musical comedy team, while still in her teens. She remained in musical comedy for a number of years. More of her appearances were in "The Princess of Kensington," "It Happened in Noland," "The Little Gray Lady," "The Girl in White" and in several other musical successes which played on Broadway and toured the country.

Soon Miss Frederick discovered that she had ability in another branch of theatricals and obtained an engagement in a dramatic piece. There her powers were readily apparent and from this time until she went upon the screen she remained in dramatic acting.

"With William Gillette, she was leading woman in "Hamlet." Later she had the most prominent feminine role in the famous Biblical drama, "Joseph and His Brethren." This play had a long run and was seen in all the larger cities of the country, establishing Miss Frederick as one of the best actresses of her class in the world. It so firmly fixed her in the dramatic world that important producers began to bid for her services on the screen. Miss Frederick's dramatic abilities were even better adapted to the screen than to the speaking stage, and from the first her success was complete.

With several of the leading companies in the field, Miss Frederick starred in successes which won her an instant and consistent following. Within the last three or four years she has been recognized generally as one of the most regular box office winners in the motion picture world. The inducements which were held out to her by Robertson-Cole in the signing of the contract prove conclusively the high esteem of the company for her ability.

When Miss Frederick starts making her productions for Robertson-Cole, unusual effort and care will be taken with each. At least three months, and in some instances more, will be taken to complete each of the pictures. The maximum number which will be produced in any one year will be four.

In picking new names Robertson-Cole announces that it is always influenced by the continued drawing power of a star over a long period rather than by any artificial force which is brought to bear. In short, Robertson-Cole wanted in the case of Miss Frederick a star who positively does draw whenever her name appears in electric lights, rather than a name to boast about.

On the heels of this important star attraction soon may come word of the signing of another luminary in motion picture skies. Again it is proposed to obtain a star of drawing power and financial security, one who will give the exhibitor a certain profit, and who will win consistently in pictures.

Baltimoreans Will Vote on Sunday Question

Declaring that he felt the people of Baltimore had a right to express themselves in regard to whether moving pictures would be shown in that city on Sundays, Governor Albert C. Ritchie, signed the Iverson Bill, recently passed by the Maryland Legislature and by the terms of which the matter will be submitted to a referendum by Baltimoreans. Great pressure was brought to bear upon Mr. Ritchie by the reformers to persuade him to veto the measure.

The executive pointed out that his signature did not indicate that he favored the measure, but that it did show him in favor of allowing the people to express their own wishes. The question of whether the showing of moving pictures in Baltimore City on Sunday should be permitted will be placed on the ballots in the next general election which will be held in November.

German Monopoly Would Act as Boomerang

Any effort on the part of Germany to nationalize theatres as a barrier to motion pictures made outside her boundaries, as reported under contemplation by cables from abroad, would act only to a further isolation of Germany itself, according to David P. Howells, international film distributor.

The movement came as a complete surprise, stated Mr. Howells, and if it is adopted will only serve to isolate Germany the more.

Famous Players-Lasky Declares Dividend

The Board of Directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at a meeting recently in the company's home office, voted the regular quarterly dividend of $2 on the corporation's preferred stock. The dividend is payable May 1 to stockholders of record April 10.
Isaac Wolper Will Produce His Own
Benjamin Prager Promoted as Mayflower President Resigns Post

ISAAC WOLPER has announced his resignation as president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, in order that he might immediately start production under his own name. He will be succeeded by Benjamin A. Prager, who until now has acted as treasurer.

Mr. Wolper stated that he is retiring from the active management of the Mayflower organization because of a disagreement in policy. Although he will no longer take part in directing the company's affairs, Mr. Wolper announced that he will keep his stock interest and will lend the concern every possible co-operation calculated to promote its success.

"I have been contemplating for some time producing under my own name," said Mr. Wolper, "as I believe there is a bigger future for me by operating in this manner. At present I am hunting for a location for offices and as soon as I can find space and establish a headquarters I will make a definite statement as to policy and plans."

"Mr. Prager, who is taking my place as president of Mayflower, has been with the company ever since its organization and is familiar with every detail of the business. As a consequence, he is fitted to carry on the work in a most capable manner."

It was the work of Mr. Wolper that resulted in the organization of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation in 1918 and through him the arrangement was made with George Lorne Tucker who was responsible for producing "The Miracle Man," one of the most sensational motion pictures ever made.

Mr. Prager's first announcement after assuming the presidency of the company was that John W. McKay, former general manager of distribution, has been promoted to the position of general manager of Mayflower. Mr. McKay has also been with the company ever since it started and this step upward is in reward for untiring service, President Prager stated.

Mr. McKay said that work would be pushed as rapidly as possible on all Mayflower productions that are now in the making and that pictures already finished will be released as rapidly as marketing conditions warranted.

"At present," said Mr. McKay, "deals are pending for the manner in which these pictures are to be released but as yet no transaction has been closed. We have a number of very big productions for 1920, and want to be sure that we choose the best possible means of getting these features before the public, thus insuring the maximum of success for each picture."

Australian Exhibitor Growing Prosperous
For First Time in Six Years He Need Not Worry, Says Alec Lorimore

AFTE~ six years of hesitation and uncertainty brought about by the war, transportation difficulties and influenza, the Australasian exhibitor today is enjoying some of the prosperity that has been more or less common in the American film industry in recent years, according to Alec Lorimore, managing director of Feature Films, Ltd., of Sydney, who has just arrived in New York for a series of conferences with E. E. Shauer, in charge of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This is Mr. Lorimore's first visit to America in more than three years.

"The film industry in Australia and New Zealand has prospered despite many obstacles," said Mr. Lorimore in discussing film affairs in that far-off continent shortly after his arrival. "The war interfered seriously with business of all kinds, and retarded the growth and expansion of the film business. Then, with peace, came a serious influenza epidemic which raged for many weeks and played havoc with the film business. War-time interference with shipping has been another serious stumbling block to the Australasian exhibitor, but in recent weeks even this state of affairs has shown considerable improvement.

"Business conditions insofar as the exhibitor is concerned have been so good in recent weeks that many theatre owners have made more money than they did during the entire period of the war. This state of prosperity, of course, is putting new hope and courage into what has been a pioneer industry, with the result that the future looks exceedingly bright for the industry."

"One result of this prosperity has been the inauguration of a theatre-building boom which will do much to relieve the industry of the handicap of the primitive houses to which the greater part of the population has been forced to go for its amusement. When I left Sydney several weeks ago I was told that thirty new houses of the larger and better class were under construction or were projected for early building. New and better theatres represent the greatest need of the industry today, aside from an improvement in transportation facilities.

"The Australian public is constantly demanding better entertainment, and is very keen for the highest grade motion pictures. Australasians pay more per capita for their amusement than the people of any other nation, so the future of the motion picture industry is rosy indeed. One firm in Victoria State has obtained five long-term Paramount Artcraft contracts in the last few months, the capitalist member of the firm providing the funds for the erection of five houses. Bankers are most willing to advance the money for the erection of new theatres where the exhibitor or would-be exhibitor has a contract for the exhibition of good pictures for a term of two to three years.

"Lack of proper railroad facilities elaborate arrangements for the switching of programs. Motorcyclists are employed by Feature Films, Ltd., to serve the theatres in the outlying districts of Sydney. As quickly as one theatre finishes a reel it is given to a motorcyclist who speeds away several miles to another theatre, and this process is continued until both theatres have completed their programs. Unless this plan is followed it would require many weeks for one film to make its round of the theatres."

"Another obstacle which has caused much worry to distributors is the lack of uniform rules for the handling of film in the various States. In one State, for instance, all film must be shipped on wooden reels. In another State the film is shipped in cardboard boxes without reels and in a third the regulation reel as used in America is required. This causes much confusion, and the situation is often made worse by careless and indifferent exhibitors who are lax in returning film shipments in the proper manner."

"In some districts film is still shown under the most primitive conditions. This is not true of the industry as a whole, however, for there are many progressive men in the exhibition business and they are co-operating with us in improving conditions. The remarkable strides made in the last few years under the war handicap bid fair to be eclipsed by the progress made in the coming months, and before many years the film business in Australasia will be as fully developed and progressive as in any country on the globe, despite the immense distance which separates this market from the American studios."
All Set for First National Convention in Chicago

 Entire Personnel is Expected to Discuss All the Important Measures

INDEPENDENT exhibitors in every territory, including all members of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, all branch managers, salesmen and exploitation men, the entire official staff at the Home Office in New York, editors and business representatives of all nationally circulated trade journals, and of all strictly territorial trade papers, together with producers and stars holding releasing contracts with the Circuit, busied themselves this week in final preparations for attending the annual convention of the entire First National personnel which begins at the Hotel Congress, Chicago, on Monday, April 26th.

Matters of extreme moment to the entire industry, new methods which affect independent exhibitors, the present forms of film distribution, recently negotiated contracts between First National and stars and producers, and the official launching of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., with the full force of its radical and sweeping sub-franchising policy, will occupy the featured positions in the program of activities for the week.

Two special cars will leave New York on Sunday, attached to the Broadway Limited on the Pennsylvania Railroad, occupied by members, branch managers, salesmen, exploitation men, the editors of the trade journals, Home Office officials, stars and producers. Special First National cars will convey exhibitor members and branch office staffs from Atlanta, Washington, D. C., San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, and Dallas with stops at intermediate centers, including Louisville, Cincinnati, Denver, Salt Lake, Oklahoma City, Kansas City and St. Louis.

Probably the most important event of the week's sessions will be the assemblies of exhibitor members, exchange managers and salesmen who will be announced the complete details of the sub-franchising plan sponsored by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and which it has employed a statistical department occupying an entire floor for the last four months. Inauguration of the rental system which is fixed by the sub-franchising agreement, at a definite percentage of the exhibition value of each attraction for every theatre that is granted a franchise, brings one of the most radical and sweeping changes in years to the standard methods governing film distribution.

Important speeches will be made by Joseph M. Schenck, president of both the Norma Talmadge Film Company and the Constellation Film Corporation, and by Whitman Bennett, formerly production manager for the Famous Players-Lasky Company and now an independent producer. Of equal importance, will be the presence at the convention of Miss Norma Talmadge, who, for the first time, will appear publicly at a gathering of exhibitors to meet each of them personally. At the same time as the First National Convention, independent theatre owners will meet at the Hotel Congress.

This new organization was created as a defense body against invasion of producer-exhibitors into the theatre field, and is the expressed wish of several hundred exhibitors who have sent written and telegraphic responses to the call of Willard Patterson, manager of Sig Samuel's Criterion theatre of Atlanta, Ga., and president of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association.

Evolution of the mass meeting into an enduring Exhibitors' Defense League will, according to Mr. Patterson, be the logical result of a vast crystallizing determination by independent theatre owners, and which, he declares, far exceeds his original belief of the national exhibitor realization of the danger of a producer-exhibitor invasion, to give country-wide unity and strength to a formal demand for a showdown, and to back up that demand with a permanent centralization of independent exhibitor opinion in direct opposition to it.

Mr. Patterson announces that he has prepared a tentative schedule of activity for the mass meeting, which, after the disposal of the usual parliamentary proceedings necessary to the organization of the exhibitors present into a body will include the adoption of a constitution and by-laws setting forth the purposes and limitations of the League's intentions, and formal resolutions to be copied and sent to every motion picture producer in the country.

Among those who will attend the First National convention are: Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Williams, New York; H. O. Schwalb, New York City; Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Haines, New York; F. Mendelbaum, Cleveland; R. H. Gaines, Cincinnati; W. E. Lisk, Cleveland; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ferrandini, Richmond; L. H. Hall, Salt Lake City; Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Clark, New York; Mrs. and Mrs. George K. Williams, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Tom Moore, Washington, D.C.; E. C. Rhodehamel, Washington, D.C.; J. L. Cuming- ham, Washington, D.C.; C. F. & A. L. Jacobs, New York; E. B. Johnson, New York; David P. Howell, New York; C. L. Yerlars, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Carl Sowem, Richmond, Va.; J. R. Grainger, New York; James B. Hunter, New York; J. L. Hunter, New York; James B. Clark, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Joseph S. Skibold, Pittsburgh; Jules E. Massachusetts, Phil.; Mrs. L. Finkenstein, Minneapolis; J. P. Gibberley, Minneapolis; E. H. Mullen, Minneapolis; H. H. W.著名, Minneapolis; J. S. Johnson, New York; Ernest Shipman, New York; George Blaisdell, New York; Leslie Mason, New York; L. W. Boynton, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Beacham, Atlanta, Ga.; W. A. Sanges, Atlanta, Ga.; Robert Welsh, New York; Fred Becton, New York; J. H. Dannenhauer, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph M. Schenck, New York; E. E. Richards, Kansas City; M. J. Fynn, Kansas City; Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Fisher, New York; A. M. Fabian, New York; Thomas B. Spay, Boston, Mass.; Nathan H. Gordon, Boston, Mass.; S. S. Schwalb, Des Moines, la.; E. C. Holah, Omaha, Neb.; L. J. McCarty, Omaha, Neb.; Lee L. Goddard, Los Angeles, Ky.; Robert Lieber, Indianapolis, Ind.; Lloyd Brown, Indianapolis, Ind.; J. H. Kunsky, Detroit, Mich.; G. W. Trendle, Detroit, Mich.; H. C. Heffernan, Detroit, Mich.; Messrs. Heffernan and Copley, Chicago, Ill.; G. C. Mark, New York; A. H. Blank, Des Moines, la.; Sol Shernow, New York; Miss Constance Talmadge, New York.
British Company to Invade U. S. Market

Motion Picture News

Alliance Film Corporation Capitalized at $5,000,000 to Compete in America

While American motion picture producers are making plans to dominate the British and other foreign markets with American films, a $5,000,000 British company has been organized with the avowed purpose of invading the American market with English-made motion pictures.

Mr. Walter Crotch, vice-president of the newly formed British Film organization, known as the Alliance Film Corporation of England, left New York Wednesday, April 14th, for Los Angeles, for a visit to the western film center. He is in America studying American methods of motion picture production and distribution, and for the frank purpose of discovering the best way to introduce English films to the American market. Mr. Crotch is a banker, and a literary man, who has gone into motion pictures, as he says, "because I want to see much better literature on the screen."

The Alliance Film Corporation of England has under way the construction of a film city, much like Universal City in California, at Narrow Weald Park, just outside of London. Work has been temporarily discontinued on these studios and laboratories because of labor conditions, and the company has started producing activities at the old London Film Company's studios at St. Margaret's-on-the-Thames. Gerald du Maurier, A. N. Mathew and Matheson Lang, prominent English actors, have been secured to appear in pictures. Mr. Lang is now at work in "Carnival," which it is said, as a play, has taken London by storm.

"We must acknowledge the superiority of American production methods and are willing and anxious to learn them," says Mr. Crotch. "We are out to perfect our organization in such a way that our English stories in films shall be produced under the supervision of American directors, and our actors and actresses trained to do the thing, in the American way. We believe that Great Britain can supply stories and themes to the American people which will come to them with a fascinating freshness, but we are fully alive to the fact that such stories have got to be presented in the best possible way and must follow to a large extent American ideas and customs. The film can provide a real link between our two nations, between which there is already intercourse and sympathy. It will dispituate ignorance of each other's habits and thoughts and feelings; it will break down barriers and reunite us with a common controlling bond of sympathy and mutual interest.

"I confess that I have not yet come to a final decision as to how our products will be most effectively distributed so that our main object may be attained. For several weeks I have been gathering facts on trade conditions and American methods of exploitation, advertising and distribution in New York—later I hope to be able to say authoritatively whether we shall though more effectively pursue our purpose through one of your large distributing organizations, or by the sale of territorial rights or even by erecting a distributing organization of our own. But in any case, we are determined that our products shall be marketed here." Mr. Crotch has already purchased in America much lighting and other studio equipment for the English studio in which the Alliance corporation is at work.

In the directorate of this company, in addition to Mr. Crotch, are such well-known Englishmen as Sir Walter De Fresh, M. P., prominent in affairs of the English theatre; Charles F. Highs, M. P., a leading advertising and publicity man; A. Baldwin Raper, M. P., a prominent merchant; Capt. John Naro, financier, and Walter Hutchinson, son of Sir Geo. Hutchinson, the publisher.

Long Runs for High-Class Small Theatres

BY BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON

"The high-class small theatre and the policy of long runs for good pictures are factors that will materially influence the future of motion picture production. That is simply an inevitable step in advance of conditions now. Distinctive pictures will play small houses seating from five hundred to eight hundred, and have runs of a month or longer. Large houses will be more and more dependent upon a mixed program of feature, comedy and educational films, grand opera and concert.

"It will come down to a basis of selection. Tastes differ so greatly that literature, art, drama and music have half-a-dozen different schools, and each school is supported by its devotees. There is every reason why this should become the case with motion pictures. To use effective slang, a certain down-town house with a limited seating capacity will cater to a 'highbrow' audience, another to an audience that likes thrills for the major part of its film menu; another, perhaps, will be running a 'see play, and another a human play, a 'glam story,' a children's play.

"Pictures will be advertised for what they are, and word of mouth advertising will bring in a comfortable capacity for a small house, depending upon the appeal of the subject, for weeks. The patrons will be pleased because for the most part they know what they are to be given; the type of picture they see is their choice. Then audiences will have a wider range of selection than is possible under present exhibiting conditions. Pictures are exploited now, with a view to attracting every class of patron; persons who attend grand opera and those who prefer burlesque have to take pot luck together on their evening's film entertainment. The policy of our best showmen in giving quite a program tends to alloy dissatisfaction, for with these houses the picture becomes of less importance, and the feeling with the audiences is that their money has not been wasted, however little the picture may appeal to them. This condition reacts to the disadvantage of the smaller showmen. Also this condition permits mediocre pictures to 'get by,' and in many cases may injure the reputation of a film that would otherwise be very successful, by showing it to an audience who for the most part do not care for that type of picture.

"Pictures suffer in popularity today when the cynic young clubman, forced to sit through a 'glad-good-gladder' picture, reports it 'rotten' to his friends, and when the little school girl who would have delighted in the 'glad' stuff reports to her friends that a stormy emotional drama she has just seen 'isn't much good.' I have two pictures in mind when I say this; two very popular photoplays recently produced, which could have played profitably many, many weeks on end at a small downtown house on the long run system. There is no reason why Cecil De Mille's 'Why Change Your Wife?' should not run at a small Broadway theatre in Los Angeles as long as the stage success 'Civilian Clothes.'

"Of course a large theatre could not do this profitably; the problem of the large theatre owner will be to please the most number of patrons, and modify those he does not please by the variety and attractiveness of his program. But the small theatre will, in the future, exhibit the best photoplays for long runs to a selective audience; the standard of production will be raised, and artistic successes like 'Broken Blossoms' will become financial successes as well."
W.W. Hodkinson Discusses "Growing Unrest" in Film Industry

Gives Views on Causes and Remedies for "Functional Disturbances"

"Unrest is always caused by dissatisfaction with things as they are, and that is the reason for the growing unrest in our industry." With this general observation, Mr. W. W. Hodkinson prefaced a rather trenchant criticism of what he called "the basic unsoundness of conditions prevailing today in every province of screendom." His views are well worth reproducing for, after showing what he conceives to be the downward and destructive tendencies of today, he outlines plans of obvious constructive value.

In talking to the editor of the Motion Picture News, Mr. Hodkinson said: "We present trend toward a constant increase in film rentals without reason is due to certain conditions in the industry which can no longer be ignored. In fact, it will be well, for the good of the industry, to shed all possible light on these conditions.

"Doctors tell us that any functional disturbances in our bodies indicate their presence by unmistakable symptoms. The motion picture industry today is suffering from the most serious kind of functional disturbances of which the increase of film rentals and higher prices of admission are but symptoms.

"It seems to me that the whole picture business has gone mad on the theory that in some way it is possible to progress and prosper on lines other than sound economic laws and past business experience. Nobody seems to realize that we cannot forever go on with the process of milking and that we must put some values into the industry, if we want to get returns. All of us should give more thought to creating values and putting something into the business.

"Instead of addressing ourselves to a study of these disturbances we have, with the wrong-headedness so characteristic of management in this industry, consorted ourselves by following the line of least resistance. In other words, we have been trying to remove the symptoms without going to the trouble of looking at the causes of the symptoms. First of all, we must recognize the fact that the worm is about to turn, the worm in this case being none other than the dear, patient public. The public is just about ready to lose its patience and to turn against the flood of cheap and mediocre productions with which the screen is deluged from day to day, from week to week and from month to month. We are at the present still 'getting by' because of the universal inflation and disarray of values, which characterize business conditions today. As soon as this universal inflation comes to an end, we must stop the reckless spending and abandon the idea that we can keep on 'passing the buck' to the public forever. There must be a thorough house-cleaning, a complete readjustment on the basis of sound, economic laws. The future belongs to the man capable of weighing the equities and possibilities in the situation between producers and distributors, on one hand, and the motion picture theatre owners on the other hand. This man will lead the procession, and he need not be so far ahead of the procession that his machinery cannot follow him. This machinery must be capable of creating and developing units of production, units which are independent and competitive.

"The line of advancement for the industry and a return to business sanity must run parallel with such a plan. I am sure that eventually all efforts aiming at beneficial and lasting results must move through this channel.

"A method must be worked out which will give all the parties in interest their just and fair share. The whole problem is really like an example in algebra, the unknown quantity being the exact percentage of profits due to all elements involved. When I use the word percentage I do not, of course, speak of any of the percentage-ticketing schemes which are now being tried and most of which are based either on guesswork, on gambling or on greed and selfishness.

"Immerse organizations have been built up whose continued existence depends on the continuance of the present-day abuses in the industry, huge salaries to stars, enormous sums for stories, quite irrespective of their intrinsic value. The whole course is one of mistaken philosophy. It has not been a natural growth. To get away from these errors it is only necessary to utilize common sense. The organization which will turn away from these impossible practices and which will give superior service, with improved quality, is bound to win the day. This is no idle dream.

"It will be remembered that I was the first to set my face against the nickelodeon. I felt at that time that the future of the motion picture, both as an art and as an industry, could not be worked out with any satisfaction to either producer or public on the basis of the nickel. Now the pendulum has swung back and I stand for the public in its natural and justifiable insistence on popular prices of admission.

"Raising the prices of admission narrows the field of the motion-picture and is absolutely destructive. The very nature of the business demands a popular price. If one the possibility of popular prices combined with the possibility of a good picture which has made the motion picture industry an important civic factor and with a great commercial institution.

"Ten years ago the equities were with the producer and exhibitor; today the equities are with the public.

"As I have in the past created the machinery to raise the level of the motion-picture and to divorce it from the nickel so I propose to use machinery equally effective for carrying out reforms which the industry needs so badly today. The man who will continue on the old lines will be swept out of existence just as the producers and exhibitors, who, ten years ago, bitterly resented and resisted the raise of the price of admissions are today nothing but memories.

"Again the industry has run into a perilous rut. We need new brains, new blood. There is no field of human endeavor promising so much in the way of rewards to intelligence and initiative as the motion-picture field. In the further development of the machinery which I have created to cut in under the present unsound methods and policies I propose to enlist plenty of new brains and new blood. The public will welcome a return to sanity."

Stern Succeeds Powers as Universal Treasurer

ABE STERN, secretary and treasurer of the L-KO Company, producers of Simplex, Century and other comedies, has been appointed treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, to succeed P. A. Powers, who recently sold out his Universal holdings and resigned.

Although Mr. Stern has never held an official position with Universal, he has been closely allied with the big film company and its organization. Practically all of the L-KO output is released through Universal. Mr. Stern already has assumed duties as treasurer of the larger company. He will continue to hold his previous position with the L-KO Company, however.

Lyons to Manage Simplex Projection Room

John F. Lyons, who has been associated with Joseph R. Miles for the past nine years in his various organizations, and in charge of the Miles projecting rooms in New York City, since their establishment seven years ago, resigned last week to assume the management of the Simplex Studios three projection rooms in the Candler Building, New York, on May 1st.

The masses in the great, seething industrial centers have got to have some good, clean sort of recreation.

"I teach a Sunday school class of 200 good business men nearly every Sunday morning and I'll venture to say that a lot of them go to the movies Sunday afternoon or evening."
"The Crimson Gardenia" was given novel exploitation at the New Unique theatre, Minneapolis. Miss Mildred Hamilton attired, as will be noted in the above illustration, attracted a great deal of attention for herself and the picture and in consequence everyone in Minneapolis knew that the Beach feature was playing at the New Unique.
When the Imperial of San Francisco played De Mille's "Why Change Your Wife," a number of window display tie-ups were accomplished that aided greatly in the successful engagement the feature enjoyed.

An attractive window was secured on the "galant promenade," Powell Street, where gather the "elite" who have naught else to do but to parade and "rump." The window display again advertised "Why Change Your Wife?"

A third window, the most artistic of all was that installed by the Gillette Safety Razor people in the Gillette building on Market Street.

Demonstrating the Effectiveness of Lobby Displays

(Right)
The Palace theatre of Hamilton, Ohio, unlike many of the houses in the smaller cities, doesn't try to economize on electric current by cutting down on its lobby lights. This will illustrate how the Palace advertised its Easter week show consisting of "His Royal Slyness" and "Six Feet Four." The street about the Palace is always a "bright" spot in Hamilton during the time the show is going on.

(Below)
The attention that many managers give serials is proof positive that the continued subject is still worth exploitation attention. Below is shown the way Ben Harding, manager of the Liberty theatre, Council Bluffs, Iowa, decorated his lobby for his first showing of "Daredevil Jack." Mr. Harding is authority for the statement that all preceding box office records for the opening day of a serial picture were broken and thinks his exploitation had a great deal to do with it.

Detroit Theatre Neglects No Opportunities Presented by “Idol Dancer”

EXPLICATION which found its best expression in the fact that it was instrumental in making box-office history for the Madison Theatre of Detroit is the subject of this story. The picture which the Madison publicity staff used as medium for the expenditure of their publicity efforts was “The Idol Dancer.”

Although the motion picture appetites of all Detroiters were whetted to a high pitch two weeks ahead of the engagement by the appearance of punchy, eye-catching teaser ads in all of the Detroit newspapers, telling of a South Sea Island native who would shimmy her way right into their hearts, and by the appearance on billboards, street cars and, in fact, every possible location for poster paper, that something far and away out of the ordinary was in store for them, the sight that met their gaze in the front, the lobby and the interior of the Madison theatre formed an ad talk in itself that made dinner table conversation in every home and cafe in Detroit during the engagement. The attractive color front of the Madison theatre, over night, took on the appearance of a typical domicile in the South Sea Isles.

The roof and the sides of the front were thatched with straw of a greenish brown color and the seaweed that hung down from the thatched roof was also improvised into a trellis hut, brushed each patron as the tickets were purchased.

Idols made from beaver board and painted in weird designs and colors, and topped by dangerous looking shields, were placed lengthwise through the center of the lobby. The side walls were some scenic efforts in keeping with the occasion. Large, beautiful palms were also used plentifully and with excellent effect.

On the stage, a straw hut at either side, banked by palms and with a beautiful scenic streamer below the picture curtain made a striking effect for the special prologue that was provided.

A “real live” Samoan dancer, attired in perfect replica of Clarine Seymour, the heroine of the story, performed a terpsichorean act at each performance, to the accompaniment of a quartet of Hawaiian exponents of the ukulele and guitar. The quartette also furnished blending music at various timely intervals during the showing of the picture. Coupled with an excellent musical score provided by the large Madison orchestra, the symphonic accompaniment was of a nature that created much comment.

The men who are in a great measure responsible for the success of this engagement are Howard O. Pierce, director of publicity for the John H. Kinsey organization, and Thomas D. Moul, manager of the Madison theatre.

They went to work early, as soon as they heard that Mr. Griffith’s second release for First National was to be a story of the South Sea Isles, with sensational dance scenes, and laid their plans carefully. Every move in a campaign that went into action three weeks ahead of the playing dates was studied and delayed at every angle.

In addition to his publicity work for the Madison and Adams theatres, Mr. Pierce supervises and plans the erection of the mammoth stage and lobby settings in both of these large downtown theatres. He has displayed exceptional ability along these lines and the wide comment that is heard among Detroit theatre-goers on the elaborateness of the decorative effects, are the culmination of his efforts. A special shop for painting drops and building special scenery is maintained and put at the service of Mr. Pierce by the Kinsey organization.

Attractive Stage Settings At Small Cost

Julius K. Johnson Demonstrates How Presentation Effects May Be Achieved

INEXPENSIVE stage settings can be made an attractive feature even in a small theatre by judicious use of stage lighting as has been demonstrated by Julius K. Johnson, manager of the New Garrick theatre at Minneapolis. Electrical devices for acquiring brilliant and beautiful effects are cheap and plentiful according to Mr. Johnson and should be a part of the equipment of every theatre no matter how small.

Mr. Johnson’s latest effort was accomplished with two simple devices, a sketchy piece of beaver board, a borrowed Alaskan Carryall and a set of ceiling bank lights, in addition to the regular foot light equipment of the theatre. It was used as a prelude to a showing of Marshall Neilan’s “River’s End” and was invariably the provoker of applause. The electrical effects ran for five minutes.

The setting was based upon the opening scenes of the production which take place in the far north. Mr. Johnson had a typical arctic scene containing three igloos in the foreground, sketched in grays and blues upon beaver board. In front of this he placed the carryall, an effect which lent a good perspective to the scene. The New Garrick is provided with a felt curtain in front of the screen but the same effect as that obtained by Mr. Johnson could be obtained by starting from darkness.

Mr. Johnson lighted deep blue lights and then had the curtains withdrawn disclosing the arctic scene. Gradually the lights became brighter until they had become semi-bright blue. Flashes from the Aurora Borealis were seen in the background gradually becoming more distinct. First white, then yellow, then flaming red. The flashes again became fainter and a faint flurry of snow began, the snow fell thicker and thicker, and then the Aurora became more lively, flashing up again to its highest brightness, and again dwindling away while the stage lighting gradually faded back to the deep blue, with the snow falling faster and heavier.

The borealis was obtained from a rippling machine with a double disc. The falling snow effect was used in back of the rippling machine and that was the whole picture, combined with the brightening and dimming of the foot lights and ceiling banks. The result was much more beautiful than the description sounds.
Two Exceptional Ideas For Decorating Your Lobby

The lobby display arranged for the showing of "Her Elephant Man" by Harry Pomeroy, manager of the Strand theatre, Ottawa, Canada. A phonograph and bass drum were used to render circus effects, and the door men and ushers were dressed as clowns. The foyer was also arranged as an animal tent with stuffed animals and toy elephants standing about.

Orphans Guest of Detroit Jeweler

Six hundred inmates of the orphan asylums in and near Detroit attended a special showing of “Huckleberry Finn” at the Broadway-Strand theatre recently as the guest of Sol E. Sallan, the Detroit jeweler and manufacturer of M. Sculpured Impressions.

The Simons Sales Company, local distributors for the Willys-Overland products, donated ten new Overland Sedans; the Dodge Motor Car Company forwarded twenty new Dodge Sedans; the J. L. Hudson Department store furnished four trucks and the Crowley-Miller company were represented by four huge trucks for the purpose of safely transporting these orphans to the theatre and return.

And with huge streamers on each vehicle, reading, “We’re Going To See ‘Huck Finn’ at the Broadway-Strand theatre” this fleet of cars came from all sections of the city into the busiest section. Throughout the trip the orphans sang songs of joy and made the afternoon a memorable event.

The thirty-eight cars arrived at their destination and lined up solidly for one square where they remained for over two hours despite traffic regulations forbidding their remaining this length of time.

In the theatre special comedies were shown and the orphans gave three cheers for their benefactors. After enjoying “Huck Finn” they marched out of the theatre and into the lobby each child was given a half pound box of “Huckleberry Finn” donated by a Detroit candy manufacturer who insisted that his name be kept secret.

Gusdanovic Pulls ‘Em in With Good Advertising

“THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN” opened its Cleveland, Ohio engagement Sunday, March 21st, at the Strand and Orpheum theatres. And now comes the story of how Manager Paul Gusdanovic planned and carried out an advertising campaign that was responsible for a great week’s business for both houses.

One week before the picture opened, the local newspapers carried this insert:

If the sky is green it is the Strand; red—it is the Orpheum; blue—it is the Knickerbocker; pink—it is the Metropolitan. Watch the sky the night of March 20th.

This was the stunt originated by Harry Reichenbach for the picture’s New York opening.

That was all. Not a word about a theatre. Not a hint about a picture. Just enough to get folks in training for a rubberneck party. And fortunately, Saturday, March 20th, was a pretty day, without a cloud in the sky. But there was something much more valuable to Gusdanovic than a cloud in the sky that night. For that was the night that the Northern Lights were flashing around, and they afforded a most beautiful background of crimson red for the big navy searchlight that was spreading a light over a radius of fifteen miles all over the city, in all directions, from the roof of the Strand theatre.

With little expense, many thousands of people had their attention directed to the Strand and Orpheum theatres by this simple but far reaching stunt. There was another little stunt which Gusdanovic and his associates employed to catch the public interest that was cheap but very effective. On Monday night he had four men in automobiles scattering keys in all parts of the city. There were five thousand of ’em. Twenty-five hundred had tags saying, “This is the front door key to the Strand theatre!” The other twenty-five hundred had tags saying, “This is the key to the Orpheum theatre.” Simultaneously, the newspapers carried this announcement:

OST

Front Door Key to Strand and Orpheum Theatres. Reward if Returned ORPHEUM THEATRE Ninth, Near Euclid STRAND THEATRE Prospect at Ninth

The keys might have been stray cats by the way they came home. Three extra girls had to be installed at each house to take care of the finders of the keys, who came for their rewards. And they got ’em. Everyone who returned a key got a pass to see “The Forbidden Woman.”

Ancient Car ‘Frisco Advertising Medium

WALLY REID’S “Excuse My Dust” suggested the use of the “first Buick to reach San Francisco via the Horn” in the days of old and the days of gold.”

Whether the car burned coal or wood or was equipped with a “bellows” or some-thing evading large clouds of dust, the sign “Excuse My Dust” was rendered perfectly appropriate.

Youthful Dancers Aid “Pollyanna” Showing

As a special added attraction for the presentation of “Pollyanna,” starring Mary Pickford, at the Russell theatre, the large dramatic house of Ottawa, the Canadian capital, during the week of April 5, an interesting and entertaining prologue was staged in which many youthful dancers participated.

The prologue was called “Pollyanna at the Court of Gladness” and the principal role was taken by a young lady who was garbed in a fashion similar to Mary Pickford’s characterization in the feature. The sketch was presented in several scenes and was complete in itself, a pleasing little story being worked out in the number. The various dances were carried out under the direction of Prof. Sinclair, a local dancing master, and special orchestration was featured throughout the prologue and the feature as well. The work of the young artists proved to be of the finished variety and the stunt was very pleasing. A number of details were prepared by W. McLaughlin, the moving picture editor of the Ottawa Journal.

It was the first real attempt to stage an extensive prologue beginning with a moving picture in Ottawa and a large crowd greeted the first performance on Easter Monday. The show also did big business throughout the whole week.

Exhibitors Warned About All Oral Agreements

The following is an excerpt from a statement issued by the New York F. I. L. M. Club, and addressed to managers and proprietors of motion-picture theatres:

“On and after March 22nd, 1920, no claim will be entertained by the Credit Bureau or Grievance Committee of the F. I. L. M. Club to enforce an oral promise or an oral agreement with respect to a contract for film service. No manager or salesman in the employ of any of these Companies is authorized to vary or modify the terms of any of the written contracts by oral promises. Therefore, insist that any terms of the agreement which you make, shall be incorporated in the written contract and that all provisions and conditions of your contract shall be entered into the agreement by a clause in writing. This is essential to the protection rendered in respect to terms for protection detailing the amount of protection, theatres covered, the run and any other items with respect to which you attach any importance.

“As a final word, insist that every promise made you be made in writing and be made a part of your contracts.”

Rialto Magazine Contains Decided Novelty

A part of the Rialto theatre, New York, magazine this week a strip from the library of Lyman H. Howe under the title of “Scultured Impressions of the Great New York Boys” is being given which registers as a decided novelty.

The strip consists of pictures of busts of a number of the noted composers with the clay being manipulated in various ways before the image is finally completed, and photographs of a page of the score of one of each composer’s compositions. The orchestra at the Rialto plays the composition as the picture of the composer and the selection comes on the screen.

The strip is given a timely interest by using as subjects for busts the still living composers, George Cohan, Harry Lauder and John Phillip Sousa. The other pictures shown are compositions of classical music, mostly deceased.
England Finds the Prologue Adds to Presentation

(Left)
One of the prettiest houses in Texas is the Jefferson of Dallas. This house is a firm believer in the electric sign as a business getter. The big sign always carries the title of the feature photoplay. When this photograph was taken the house was playing "The Wings of the Morning."

Two scenes are hereewith shown of the elaborate prologue staged by the Alhambra theatre, London, England, for its presentation of "Broken Blossoms." The complete act is described on the opposite page.
How England Staged "Broken Blossoms"

"BROKEN BLOSSOMS" was given its first English presentation at the Alhambra theatre, London, one of that city's best houses, which with one or two exceptions has adhered to a legitimate program.

The Alhambra gave the Griffith picture an elaborate presentation which included a prologue and special stage setting representing a Buddhist temple was built. When the gong in the temple struck three sonorous notes, the curtains slowly rose to reveal a Buddhist interior, with a dim green light illuminating the face of the Buddha on the altar. With measured steps two Buddhist devotees, having made obeisance, remained in an attitude of reverence before the altar steps. The recurrent figure of a Chinaman in the center took up a Chinese chant and at its close the kneeling Chinamen in the background prostrated themselves, the Buddha's gong sounded three ominous notes—the curtains slowly rose again on the screening of the picture. A curtain was reached with the Epicure, which showed the Chink and the Child in centre of stage, the prone form of the Chin lying beside the bier of White Blossom, which was strewn with broken blossoms. Over the proscenium top hung cages of birds whose sudden twitters had an electrifying effect upon the audience. The stage front and sides were decorated with plum and apple blossoms, and this scheme of dressing was carried over the orchestral pit, which was covered in, and the top covered over with the same flowers.

The ushers throughout the house were garbed in Chinese costumes. The Chinese scheme of decoration was carried out both within and without the house, the electrical lighting being carried out in rose pink.

At this première of "Broken Blossoms" three members of the British Cabinet attended, seven Ambassadors, twenty-four members of the House of Lords, forty-four M. P.'s, members of the Royal Academy and other notables.

Salt Lake Telegram Starts Guessing Fever

Desiring to create interest in motion picture stars, and incidentally making the first step toward the inauguration of a metropolitan theatrical page, the Salt Lake Telegram, one of the leading daily newspapers of Salt Lake City, Utah, recently started a "Motion Picture Players Guessing Contest" to cover a period of six days. The contest is open to all except employees of the paper and employees of any theatre or film exchange.

Each day for sixty days a photograph of some popular star is published, to be clipped from paper by contestant and the name of player as guessed by the contestant written in a space provided for the same. A series of prizes is being awarded by the Salt Lake theatres in conjunction with the prizes given by the newspaper.

Capitol Repeats "Pagliacci" This Week

"PAGLIACCI" in English and in theatrical form is being repeated this week as the opera portion of the Capitol theatre, New York bill.

The program states that the rendition of the dramatic composition by Leoncavallo is "by request," which of course there is no use telling you showmen may or may not present anything.

However there is a rather significant factor to be considered in the presentation of the opera since its initial rendition at this theatre. During the popularity of an opera grows as audiences become more familiar with it. It is fair to presume that even in the largest theatre in the world, located in the greatest city in the world, there is a regular patronage of each week which figures on seeing each change of bill. Will these people be satisfied with an opera which they heard sung but a short time ago? Whether they will or not will determine the fate of opera as a permanent portion of picture house programs for unless audiences will enjoy hearing the opera selections sung over and over, the repertoire of any house will consist of the limited number of such opera has to offer. The result of the Capitol experiment will be awaited with interest.

Posters Advertise Dempsey Picture at Prize Fight

With the co-operation of the Pathe branch office at Minneapolis the leading exhibitors of that city who are showing the Jack Dempsey serial "Daredevil Jack" have put over an exploitation stunt which has properly introduced the World's Champion in motion pictures to all the fight fans of the town. The exhibitors proceeded on the theory of going after business where the best results might be expected and they went right into the Gibbons-Roper fight in the Armour Annex where six thousand fans were gathered for the most important boxing match in that section of the country in many moons.

Before the fight started a great display of "Daredevil Jack" posters, two sheets, a six-sheet, and a banner, were suspended from the gallery at one end of the great hall. The display was the only bit of decorating in the arena, with the exception of sandly black and blue streaky affairs on some eyes in the preliminaries, and it caught the attention of every fan. In the audience of six thousand and were sixteen hundred Ford managers from various parts of the country, who were assembled in Minneapolis for a convention.

The posters and the banner remained in place after the fight and for a week following a social function with thousands in attendance was held in the hall every night. The stunt attracted a good deal of attention and it is believed that exhibitors in many other cities will work with similar fight promoters in getting the Dempsey posters prominently displayed at important bouts.

"Turkish" Girl Gets Attention of Salt Lake City

"A RAILED in the costume of her native land and creating a curious sight with her bright hued garments on the streets of Salt Lake, Sari Hadahismo, a little Turkish girl, heavily veiled, arrived in Salt Lake and registered at the Newhouse hotel.

This is the opening paragraph of one of the numerous news stories run in the local papers of Salt Lake City publicity for "The Virgin of Stamboul." At a cost of about $40 Manager William Cutts, with the assistance of his publicity man, Steve Maloney, put over a live bunch of publicity when it counted big; that is during the Mormon Conference. Thousands of people from all over the state flocked to Salt Lake during this conference and during the week preceding.

The conference proper opened Sunday April 4. The young lady who took the part of Sari attracted much attention when she mounted a gaily caparisoned ten-foot ram as was waiting at the hotel entrance and took all the public about the city.

It was intimated in the news stories that the mystery girl might be the girl for whom Ben Mahomet, Arab Sheik, was searching and who had eloped to the United States from her native land with a sailor, the reports of which were carried by the Associated Press.

The "Sari" suddenly disappeared and the following news story was run: "Registered at the Newhouse hotel only yesterday, Sari Hadahismo, a little Turkish girl who startled Salt Lakers in the lobby of the hotel yesterday when she appeared in full Turkish costume, has disappeared. Beseiged by reporters, Miss Hadahismo locked herself in her room after arrival and refused to see anybody. She refused to say anything about her alleged connection with Ben Mahomet, a sheik of Arabia." And end.

Then the following day appeared this story; "Sari has been discovered! The little Turkish girl who has been startling Salt Lake by appearing in a quaint costume of the East has been identified. She is a little girl representative of Sari, the beggar girl of Stamboul, the principal character of "The Virgin of Stamboul," which opens a week's engagement at the Kinema tomorrow." More space was given to the stunt and the adventures of the girl while playing her part.

In the window of a prominent music store of the city a young man posed as an Arab Sheik and smoked the typical water pipe while reclining on elaborate cushions. The only indication of the publicity was the word Sari on a card pinned above him on a rear curtain.

Teasers had been posted up all about town and altogether with the paid advertising the publicity packed the house at every performance. Long lines of people could be seen waiting for the show to open each day and the only difficulty was in accommodating the crowds.
Brooklyn and Milwaukee Furnish Excellent Ideas

Clever Advertising Used by Louis K. Sidney

WITH Holy Week in view, Louis K. Sidney, managing director of the William Fox Washington theatre, Detroit, arranged a thorough advertising campaign with the intention of making a poor week in show business turn out a winner. The attractions booked were Shirley Mason in "Molly and I" and as added features Harold Lloyd in "His Royal Slyness," Fox News, Mutt & Jeff, Washington Male Quartette, and a little child musical marvel of seventeen completed the program.

Six thousand postal cards with a photograph of Shirley Mason on one side were mailed to a selected list by a local addressing company. The postal cards were mailed from Chicago, addressed and carrying the following message: "Dear Frank: Just saw Shirley Mason in 'Molly and I' and its wonderful. Be sure and see it at the Fox Washington theatre. Love, Hazel." These were written individually, and were mailed to reach their destination prior to the opening of the picture. Much comment was aroused through this angle. 5,000 dodgers were used in the autos, during the week of the attraction's play dates. Much publicity was secured through the Police Commissioner stopping the theatre from distributing this style of advertising on account of using the line "By order of the Detroit Police Department, etc."

Another splendid publicity angle was a series of open letters addressed to the voters, and to the Mayor and the Detroit, United Railway. For twenty-five years there has been a fight on the present street car system. The newspapers carried front-page stories regarding the coming el'ct'on on same. The Mayor and the Railways had the town plastered with paper regarding the coming election and it is a bitter fight. The letters calling attention to the street cars for Shirley Mason proved a unique method of advertising and aroused great comment.

A special Molly matinee for girls named Molly was held Monday, when all girls endowed with that name were admitted as guests of the management. Of half a hundred Molly's attended, and postcards bearing Shirley Mason's photographs were distributed to each and every Molly who attended. 5,000 wrappers were used by Kresges 5 and 10 store—2,000 were used by the largest music store in the city, Grinnell Bros., for the same purpose.

The result was an excellent week's business for Holy Week.

"Edgar" Number Two Scores Big Hit

GOLDWYN, to use a phrase of the season, has hit the ball over the fence with the second number of the "Edgar" series under the title of "Edgar's Hamlet." If the show which Johnny Jones and his company of juveniles, including one dusky lad who does the ghost, doesn't furnish more hearty laughs than any comedy, no matter who is the star, that you have played in a good many moons then your efforts to provide your audience with something to chase away the blues is wasted effort.

This is assurance for the theatres which have booked the Edgar series that they have made a good buy. It may also be taken as a hint for those who haven't that unless they want to let one of the best bets of the season get by it is time to get out the fountain pen.

Novel Lobby Display for "Hawk's Trail"

A novel lobby display to aid exhibitors who have booked "The Hawk's Trail" is available from the producers. The device has for its main base a life size plaster cast of a hawk, dried in a clay vase. Suspended from the back of the statue is a series of evening colored silk skeins of lengths sufficient to span the depth of the average theatre lobby. The imitation flier when suspended over the entrance of lobbies suggests something of the motion of the predatory bird after which it is fashioned, and the skeins running from its bill when fastened to various points of the side walls and ceilings of the arcades end at illustrations that depict different situations of the drama the scheme aims to advertise.

How Carpenter Won Front Page Publicity

GEORGE CARPENTER manager of the Paramount-Empire theatre, Salt Lake City, recently reached the much to be desired goal of the publicity man, the front page of the newspaper with his exploitation of "Excuse My Dust."

This is the story which the Salt Lake Herald gave Mr. Carpenter and the Paramount Empress and also describes Mr. Carpenter's stunts in the interest of the attraction booked for his house, "Transit of a classy coupe down Main Street Saturday at the dignified pace of three miles an hour created considerable comment and likewise hilarity, because utterly unconscious therein sat two prim ladies while on the back of the electric vehicle was prominently displayed a pennant bearing the legend 'Excuse My Dust.' Small boys gleefully raced past while the drivers of cars which passed the slow moving coupe smiled back.

"Within half an hour all sorts of gasoline propelled buggies from the plebeian 'Henry' to the aristocratic twin six were sporting similar pennants the drivers of which for the most part being utterly oblivious of unsolicited adornments flaunted across the gas tanks. Then the police took a hand and investigated until the solution was forthcoming with the laconic statement on the part of a disinterested party that he guessed George Carpenter of the Paramount-Empress was pulling another advertising stunt."

Mr. Carpenter subsequently admitted that such was the case. 'We had five hundred of those pennants printed and I turned some of our boys loose to tag the automobiles parked on Main street, and the fun of the thing is that while we expected to get arrested and secure some free publicity thereby for Wallace Reid in 'Excuse My Dust' which starts today at the theatre, the automobile drivers took blindly to it and in a number of cases even drove up to the theatre and asked if it had a few more pennants to spare, as they had a friend who owned a speedy car and they knew he would like to tack one on the back and cut loose down the jake. "Before six o'clock the five hundred pennants had been distributed with the result today if a car passes another and flaunts 'Excuse My Dust' in the face of the slow-going vehicle, the owner of the latter will know that it is not intended as an insult, but is simply another of those advertising dodges on the part of the versatile motion picture exhibitor."
How Grauman's Rialto Broke A Record in Pictures!

The exploitation campaign which "Why Change Your Wife?" received at Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, had no small part in its record breaking run at this theatre.

On this page is shown two of the displays arranged for the engagement. On the opposite page is a story giving in detail the exploitation stunts originated and put into practice by the Rialto publicity men and Al Price, Famous Players-Lasky exploitation expert on the West Coast.
Grauman's Rialto Gets Business by Use of Novelties

"Why Change Your Wife?" Stunts Instrumental in Extending Engagement

"Why Change Your Wife?" Stunts Instrumental in Extending Engagement

THE pre-release showing of "Why Change Your Wife?" at Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, has proven to be a great success, thanks to a number of things among which was a fine picture and an exploitation campaign which even Los Angeles thought unusual.

Many novelties in publicity were used with telling effect.

Before the opening of the picture at the Rialto, it was arranged with a number of automobile owners and an automobile distributing agency to carry a banner saying "Why Change Your Wife?" Grauman's Rialto next Sunday night was for the individually owned machines. The agency carried a banner with the following line: "Why Change Your Wife?—when you can buy her (Name of car) and make her happy—Grauman's Rialto Next Sunday." A teaser campaign in the newspapers was carried for a period of three days reading "Why Change Your Wife?" the vital question of the day." This was followed by a three-day ad, previous to the opening, reading: "The vital question is answered in Cecil B. DeMille's new Paramount Aircraft Picture this Sunday, Grauman's Rialto.

Scene stills from the production were selected and then colored in oils by a superior artist. Instead of framing these oils, velvet drapes, blending in color with the colors of the specific picture, were procured. Because of the beauty of the pictures, some of the leading Broadway merchants were glad to give them a featured display in their show windows. In each case, an announcement card was used.

The five daily newspapers were extensively covered with display copy and special publicity stories.

An "Essay Contest" on the title, "Why Change Your Wife?" was instituted by the Los Angeles Express with $250 in prizes awarded in the following amounts: First prize $100, second $50, third $25. The first five best essays to receive $10 each, and the next five in order to receive $5 each, the winning essays to be published at the termination of the contest with the names of contestents. Among the judges were Judge Taft, of the Superior Bench, Rev. C. C. Lawton and one leading society woman and one leading club woman. The contestants had to be married, or have been married, that they might know whereof they write. The announcement in the paper at the beginning of the contest read as follows:

Overture Novelty Presented at the Rialto

DR. HUGO REISENFELD, managing director of the Rialto, Rialto and soon of the Criterion theatre, is presenting a decided novelty at the Rialto this week in a film accompaniment for the overture number "Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody."

A motion picture of the orchestra in action playing this composition, of Dr. Reisenfeld directing and of several of the soloists performing as the strains of the composition lessen on the instrument, all timed by fixing the speed of the projection machine to synchronize with the piece's rendition, has been made and projected as the orchestra plays. This includes a picture of Bela Nyary, the cymbal soloist, who has been added to the Rialto orchestra personnel for this week and who has an important part in the rendition of the number, period, fig. on his peculiar instrument.

The fact that the idea is new, that the synchronization is most perfect and that the individuality of Director Reisenfeld and of Professor Nyary stand out, makes this a most interesting bit of stage craft.

"Why Change Your Wife?" $250 in Cash Prizes for Best Essay.

The Evening Express in an effort to combat the increasing number of divorces and maintain the integrity and sanctity of the home, has arranged to devote a column to the subject each week. The column will be open to the printing of opinions from its readers as to the best ways and means to accomplish this. Cash prizes will be paid for the best essays offering solutions of the divorce problem, such as legislation, the conduct of the husband towards the wife and vice versa; a higher code of morals for both sexes; willingness to realize that individual tastes may differ and yet fundamental principles be agreed upon; recognition of the fact that the complete attainment of the ideal is impossible; courtship of such duration as to insure that the contracting parties are thoroughly conversant with one another's characteristics; an unselshol love that is based on mutual respect rather than mere sex attraction, and such other remedies for the divorce evil as may suggest themselves to the contestants for prizes.

No personalities must be used and essays must not exceed two hundred words. Only those essays which the editor considers worth while will be printed each day. Mail all essays to the editor, Los Angeles Evening Express.

In the next day's issue of the paper on the drama page appeared a two-column, two-inch ad reading "$250 in Cash Prizes will be paid by the Evening Express for the best essay on 'Why Change Your Wife.'"

The same copy appeared each day of the contest and on the stipulated page appeared one or more of the essays received from the contestants. The space covered by these essays was usually a column and a half to two columns.

At the close of the contest, the picture of the winners of the first three prizes were printed in the paper. It proved a very interesting campaign both for the newspaper and the playhouse.

Suggestions for the Small Exhibitor

Charles E. Brady, house superintendent of the Liberty theatre of Spokane, Wash., has come through with a reply to our request, with some presentation suggestions designed especially for the small town exhibitor that should be read with interest: I credit by every showman who comes under the category mentioned above.

These are the suggestions that Mr. Brady offers:

"It is the smaller house that has no large stage on which to present a prologue and no modern electrical equipment to create an atmosphere that I offer these few suggestions. I have tried them in a small house and I know they have box-office value that will appeal to your patrons."

The lights in your lobby can be dipped in various colors. Green is very good for the ordinary romance and love story for the oriental and mystery picture, the use of red and yellow will create the atmosphere. For storm scenes and tense dramatic action, drench your house as much as possible, even to putting all house lights except your exit lights. The use of different lighting effects in this manner will help wonderfully to hold the attention of your audience.

In the lobby of your theatre you have your largest opportunity for your presentation. Create in your lobby the principle scene of action of your picture and you will accomplish two things. You have an advertising medium that has no equal and your patrons are immediately cast into the atmosphere of the picture when they buy their tickets. Carry this idea into your inside lobby as much as you can. Even if you only change a few lights in your lobby the creation of a new and different atmosphere is going to help your different pictures. I realize all pictures can not offer you a good chance to attract the eye of your patrons, but don't overlook the ones that do offer these opportunities.

Manager Ashmann, of Pathé's Chicago office, reports remaining heavy bookings for the second series of Harold Lloyd's two reeles. According to Mr. W. A. Chalmers, the first series of six pictures which ended with "The Eastern Westerner," first proved to the greatest box-office attraction that ever had to offer and, realizing this, exhibitors are eagerly awaiting the forthcoming releases.

L. Y. Crump has joined the feature sales of the Pathé Exchange, and will cover the South Side. Mr. Crump formerly was connected with First National.

"The Woman He Chose" has entered the second week of its definite run at the Randolph, Chicago, and, as it is playing to constantly increasing crowds, indications are that it will be there for some time to come. The picture has received remarkably favorable criticisms from writers of the Chicago press without exception.

"Why Change Your Wife," De Mille's big picture, with Charles Swanson, has proven so successful at the Randolph theatre that Jones, Lurie, & Schaeffer have given it a clear field to run as long as it likes, by setting back all future bookings. It entered its second week on the 17th of April.

Star Walk, for many years manager of the Wilson Avenue theatre, has been named manager of the Randolph, succeeding Walter Moore, who has retired by reason of ill health in New York. He is a broad smile when he rolled into Chicago, as he carried few important industrial film contracts in his pockets.

Jester Comedies are to play an important part in the entertainment of downtown movie fans in Chicago as Lee Herz, of the Silver Film Exchange, has booked, with four loop theatres for the series. The theatre which will play them are: The Star, Boston, Bijou Dream and State-Congress.

Irene Comanoff, editor for Constance Tulheaded, recently brought the special color scenes which will be put into prints of "The Love Expert" in the Rothacker Chicago laboratories. The same day John L. Hylton, secretary of the Rothacker Film Company, met the California LIMITED and relieved J. D. Williams, who has been in charge of Anna Stewart's latest, "The Cat's Pajamas." After several weeks, William F. Abbe joined his brother Oscar on the Rothacker camera force in Chicago, having taken the crack at Esplanade. Their newest cameraman is for International Harvester Company and General Pershing.

Manager Max Levy, of Robertson-Cole Chicago office, has released word that their screen cornet will appear in Chicago on May 30th at the Curzon, and the publicity staff is at work to exploit his coming to the limit.

While the construction of moving picture theatres is far in the lead of that of theatres in other lines in Chicago, the movies are not going to entirely overshadow the legitimate as evidenced by the continuance of plans last week, for one of the leading theatres to be erected here by A. H. Woods. Under his immediate supervision the corner of North and Western avenues will be occupied by a theatre of the name of "Theatre" is to be improved and rehabilitated and run as a first-class moving picture house.

Manager Stimson, of the Court theatre, Pekin, Ill., has purchased the Princess theatre at Peoria. The theatre is to be improved and rehabilitated and run as a first-class moving picture house.

Carl Hartialk has been made manager of the Chicago office of Reckert Pictures Corporation, and has taken over his new duties. Mr. Hartialk was manager of Bechive Exchange when Beehive was taken over by the new Reckert organization, and is occupying his old quarters.

Abel H. Kaufman, president and general manager of Kaufman Specials, Memphis, Tennessee, was in Chicago last week looking over the market and while here closed contracts with the Capital Film Company for that company's latest and also several for Tennessee and Kentucky territories. Mr. Kaufman reports business in the south going strong and that exhibitors generally are making money. He, like many exchangers, notes a great demand for two-reelers and other short features.

The Virgin of Stamboul," which opens at the Playhouse on April 20th, is making a splendid booking record in the Chicago territory, according to Manager Lessman of Universal. Three of the big Chicago circuits have booked the picture solid for all their houses. They are Ascher's, Labrith & Trina and Schönstedt.

Mrs. Frank Brown, who shot her band dead Thursday night during a fruit auction, has been exonerated by a coroner's jury. On the stand she swore she took the gun after he had hit her with an ink bottle. She was an official of the Motion Picture Operators' Unions.

The Chatterton Opera House at Bloomington, Illinois, has been thoroughly renovated and cutout new equipment installed and will be reopened on April 26th, "The Virgin of Stamboul" being the feature picture on that occasion. A. L. Ruff, manager of the house for Hall & Griffin, owners, will install a fourteen-piece symphony orchestra and promises an adequate prelude to the opera production to be offered hereafter. He also states that only the biggest and best pictures will be screened at the Chatterton.

J. W. Howland, manager of the F. Grubb interests in Macomb, Illinois, for several years, has resigned his position. He has not formally announced his future plans but it is understood that he is all set.

Aaron J. Jones of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, is paying a flying visit to New York following the return of his partners, who have been enjoying a long vacation on the Pacific Coast.

Jack O'Toole, Chicago manager for United, is spending several days at the home office in New York conferring with officials on forthcoming productions.

Floyd Brown, Indianapolis manager for Brazil and D. J. Cruberry, manager of the Minneapolis office, gave Harry Weiss, of the newly-formed Superior Screen Service, a party to celebrate the launching of his new enterprise. The outing was held at the Chateau in Evanston, Illinois, and among those attending were: J. H. Harris, of Chester Outing; J. F. Friedman, of Friedman Film Company, Indianapolis; N. N. Jacobs, of First National, Indianapolis, and several others. Harry recently went to New York writing to kick himself and when questioned said that it was because he had not gone into business for himself sooner. Mr. Weiss now has a total of nine salesmen on his payroll, having added the following to his force: R. E. Weiman, for Indiana territory; A. E. Sanders, for Wisconsin; Harry T. Hartman, Milwaukee, and George Berry Appointment, for southeastern Michigan and the northern peninsula of Wisconsin. The film will be made during the week and Superior Screen Service offices will be opened in Milwaukee and Indianapolis shortly.

Sam Katz, of Baldwin & Katz, is expected to return to Chicago from the west coast within a few days.

The Van Ronkel says there is no truth in rumors which have been floating around for some days that he has resigned.

Among out-of-town visitors in Chicago last week were: C. A. Robertson, of New York, of the Van Wort-Robertson Company, owners of a string of theatres in Indiana, and N. B. Willard, of Lincoln Square Theatre, Detroit, who booked up enough pictures to last until June, and Miss Maude Roberts, representing the Roberts circuit of Olney, Casey, and other towns in southern Illinois.

Work on the new Barbee Theatre, which will be the first of the new luxe theatres to open in the old Chicago Loop, is being rushed by three shifts of men. Twenty-four hours per day and seven days a week, Mr. Barbee is opening his doors early in April. "She Loves and Lies," featuring Norma Shearer, has been booked for the opening engagement, and Manager Ben Beadle of Select, is eager to have one of his pictures as the first introduction at the handsome new house.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer report that "Jackeeberry Finn," a Paramount-Artistic product, is booked all house records at the Randolph on Saturday and Sunday and the big attendance continued throughout the week.

Ross C. Cropper is in Chicago for a week, having returned to the city after going to New York with Frederick J. Ireland and others in regard to matters concerning the newly organized Redcrest Picture Corporation.
Cosmopolitan to Produce Broadway Plays

Cosmopolitan Productions is going in for the production of stage plays as a side line to its motion picture activities, according to a statement issued from the office of Henry M. Hobart, vice-president and general manager.

Stage productions will be made on an extensive scale, and it is planned to have at least two shows on Broadway at the opening of the season this fall. Following their run on the stage these shows will be pictured and released as Cosmopolitan Productions. The first of these will be a three-act comedy version of Harry Horsefield's famous cartoons, "Abe, the Agent."

Bray Pictures Takes Larger Quarters

Due to the rapid expansion of its Industrial Division, The Bray Pictures Corporation has been forced to seek larger quarters for the Western Studio. The new location is at 7514 N. Ashland Avenue, Chicago, where they have secured new space in a new and modern building.

The new studio is in charge of E. Dean Parmalee, vice-president of the Bray Pictures Corporation. Jack Norling will have charge of the Animated Technical Department. The camera room, developing and printing departments, and the taking of actual photographs will be under the direction of Walter Schaefer.

Fox Star Starts Work on Second Picture

Vivian Rich, William Fox's newest star, has started work on her second Fox production, "A World of Folly." Frank Beal, who has been absent from the Fox corps of directors for some months, returns to direct Miss Rich in this new drama.

Playing opposite the star is Augustus Phillips, who makes his Fox debut as leading man for Miss Rich. He supported Viola Dana in many of that star's successes.

Wagner Writes for Ray

Popular Magazine Writer Docs Scenario for First National Star

Rob Wagner, who has been writing short stories and informative motion picture articles for the Saturday Evening Post, has at least turned to the screen and has made his first scenario for Charles Ray.

Although Mr. Wagner, under his recent arrangement with Arthur S. Kane and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is appearing mainly in suitable stories adapted from plays of reputation and big novels, the star's admiration for the work of Mr. Wagner and for the latter's unusual popularity among millions of Post readers has led to the acceptance of two original scenarios from the pen of the humorous writer. The initial First National vehicle in which Arthur S. Kane will present the star is "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway," adapted to the screen from the play by George M. Cohan.

Because of the stress laid by exhibitors on the value of vehicles that are known generally throughout the country and not merely in certain localities, good story material from the Saturday Evening Post has long been considered particularly desirable by producing organizations.

New Series for Workers

Rothacker Makes Pictures to Be Shown to Employees of Big Firms

Exhibitors will never see a series of motion pictures which the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. is now producing, but the films are of great importance to the exhibitors, inasmuch as the pictures address themselves to the working men and women who have considerable dealings with the young lady who sits behind the tickets.

A number of big employers commissioned Waterrson Rothacker to produce films which would help employees see themselves which would inspire workers to improve their condition by winning competition. Originally Mr. Rothacker suggested the films to the employers, but recently several whom Mr. Rothacker did not approach have taken up the idea.

Within the last two months seven such pictures have been made and as many more are now on the Rothacker production department's schedule. These pictures will be shown to employees only, and invariably they will be exhibited at the plant.

A corporation which operates a chain of retail stores employing hundreds of girls has had a five reel playdate made which is now touring the country, making stops at every city where the corporation has a store, in order that all employees may see the film. The picture preaches the doctrine of efficiency. Three other large concerns are also having similar pictures made to be shown to their employees.

A steadily increasing demand for pictures of the great outdoors is said to have been reported to the Pathé headquarters during the last three months. The Edwin Carewe production, "Rio Grande," to be released by Pathé on April 26th, is declared to be an ideal picture to meet this demand.

Second "Jiggs" Film Due May 16th

It has been announced by the Pathé Exchange that the second of the International "Bringing Up Father" series of comedies, "Father's Close Shave," will be released on May 16th.

Additions to Casts of Goldwyn Features

Additions to the casts of "Officer 666," the celebrated Cohen & Harris stage hit, and "Milestones," the famous play by Arnold Bennett and Edward Knoblock, were made at Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's Calver City Studios, last week. Jeanie Calboun has been assigned to the role opposite Tom Moore in "Officer 666" while Friscella Brouer will portray the part of Sadie, and Hardie Kirkland that of the police captain. The "Milestones" production has been augmented by the inclusion of Corky Leach, George Swan and Jack Devone.

Charles Simone Will Resume Production

Charles Simone, one of the pioneer producers of the industry, announces that he is planning to resume production work during May. For this purpose, he will establish himself in New York, terminating his exchange activities in Albany. He has been holding managerial posts for the last two years.
Metro Enlarges Studio
Seven Acres and Five Buildings Are Added to West Coast Plant

PURCHASE of seven and one-half acres of ground south of Metro's present West Coast studios site in Hollywood, Cal., is announced by Metro officials, together with the statement that work will be commenced at once on the construction of five new studio buildings. Chief among these new structures is to be an enclosed stage of steel, concrete and glass construction, 250 feet long and 100 feet wide.

An appropriation of nearly $250,000 had been made for these building activities. Besides the stage there will be put up buildings for the property department, a carpenter's assembling shop, cutting rooms, a film vault and isolated quarters for the scenario department, it is declared.

Three adjoining city squares and one-third of another square in the Los Angeles suburb are now owned outright by Metro Pictures Corporation. Within two months practically every foot of the seventeen acres now covered by the property will be occupied by stages, laboratories, technical workshops and other structures that go to make up modern motion picture studios.

In addition, Metro has at its disposal a location park of sixty-five acres north of Hollywood in the beautiful San Fernando Valley. This is utilized for big exterior settings, such as streets and small villages, with a natural mountainous background.

Loew Bookings for "Sex"
Metropolitan Circuit Contracts for New Louise Glauin Production

Nicholas Schenck and Fred Mitchell have signed contracts for the complete Marcus Loew metropolitan circuit booking of seventy-seven days for J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glauin production, "Sex." This contract was made with Mark S. Nathan, New York exchange manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, by Mr. Schenck in person and foretells a heavy advertising campaign to be made by the Loew theatres under their aggressive publicity manager, N. Grandlund. The Loew pleton, Wis.; the Strand, Sioux Falls, S. D.; the Virginia, Valley, Cal.; the Colfax, Petersburg, Va.; the Hill, Newark, N. J.; the Star, Elgin, Ills.; the Orpheum, Green Bay, Wis.; the Capitol, Chester, Pa.; the Capitol, Macon, Ga.; the Regent, Saginaw, Mich.; the Bijou, Battle Creek, Mich.; the Fischer, Davenport, Ills.; the Washington, Richmond, Ind.; the Victory, Kokomo, Ind.; the Starland, Anderson, Ind.; the Col- dinal, Galesburg, Ills.; the Or- phoeum, Rockford, Ills.; the Majes- tic, Beloit, Wis.; the Majestic, App- lington, Wis.; the Majestic, Aris- ton, Ind.; the Grand, Valparaiso, Ind.; the Wisconsin, Des Moines, Iowa, and the Bijou, Columbus, Ohio.

"Sex" opened auspiciously on Sunday at the Goodwin theatre, Newark, N. J.; where Miss Glauin's previous J. Parker Read suc- cess, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," smashed all house records during its four-day engagement in January. Moe Kider, head of the power be- hind the Goodwin, heralding the coming of "Sex" with a big new- paper and billboard advertising campaign.

Roy A. Grombacher, managing director of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, Wash., has booked "Sex" for a week's run in early May and has already started his drive on the production with first page newspaper teasers, while James Clen- mer in Seattle is making ready for a large ad on "Sex" such as he used in heralding "The Westerners" in the fall.

Eileen Percy Made Star
Fox Signs Leading Lady for Long Term; Picture Not Yet Announced

With whom she has been associated both in Fox and in American Film Company photographs, Eileen Percy's announce- ment has not yet been made as to what story will be used to introduce the newswoman to the screen.

Miss Percy is said to have a delightful personality, and a face and figure that show excellent advantage on the screen. Although still in her early twenties, she has had a wide experience on the stage.

She went from the Gest musical show to motion pictures, playing opposite Douglas Fairbanks, with whom she remained one year. Robert Warlick was the next star she supported, and then Metro signed her for a picture.

Work on the first Eileen Percy picture will be started within the next fortnight at the William Fox studio in Hollywood. Her stories will be of the light comedy type—a line of work for which, it is believed, she is admirably suited by both nature and experience.

"Stolen Kiss" Called Realart's Finest

The best thing Realart has of- fered" is the statement made by one New York critic in regard to "The Stolen Kiss," the recently re- leased Constance Binney feature.
Flock to Watch Carpenter Work

The interest in the appearance of Georges Carpenter, on the American screen finds its reflection in the number of people who are visiting and competing to visit the Solax Studio in Fort Lee, where Carpenter has been busy daily for the past few weeks. While the sporting fraternity greatly in evidence, the large number of women viewers is best proof of the fact that Carpenter's clean and attractive personality is best suited to his particular scenes. If one were to begin to name the sporting editors who have spent considerable time with the evidence, it would be necessary to name nearly every one of the most prominent sporting writers in New York, it is declared.

Such has been the great demand for admission to the studio on one pretext or another, that the studio'straffic has increased far beyond the yield previously. It is estimated that more than four hundred people were used. The studio was later converted into a big gymnasium in which Carpenter will be seen for the first time in the picture in his fighting role.

Continuing on the paddie's early efforts before the camera at the Fort Lee studio, Robertson-Cole declared:

"The most astonishing thing to the habitues of the studio is the ease with which Carpenter works before the camera. Nothing shocks him and he is a natural pantomimist, according to the other actors in the drama. Despite the fact that Carpenter speaks but little English, Director Adolphi has had no difficulty in making himself understood. Around Carpenter is acting as an interpreter, but owing to Carpenter's high intelligence, Cooper has little to do."

While it is not proposed to disclose the story of the drama before the picture is completed, it can be said that it is quite different from anything heretofore attempted by the studio. However, sporting enthusiasts will be able to see enough of Carpenter's speedy work with the paddle to get a better idea of the French contender for the world's lightweight championship. It can also be said that the story is good fiction and not a repetition of stunt incidents. When Carpenter's oeuvre moves on the screen, there will be a logical reason for it, not an imaginative excuse to display his fighting prowess.

Critics Agree on Metro Films

A CONSENSUS of critical opinion in the motion picture trade papers and the daily press as compiled by the Film Daily reveals that the third round of its series, "Terror and Better," pictures Metro has surpassed its previous efforts by a wide margin.

With the appearance of "An Eastern Westerner," last of Harold Lloyd's first series of two-reel comedies for Pathé, the release has been scheduled for June, in May, and bookings on the second series have received a strong impetus. Among the first of the first series of newspapers of the United States, outside of the Strand and Capitol, which signed two weeks ago for the New Lloyds, is the Merritt of Milwaukee. During the past week the complete series of six was booked by the New Orleans Exchange over the entire Saenger circuit, one of the most powerful in the South.

Wire Briefs From Coast

Sadore Bernstein, the former manager of Universal City, has been appointed general manager by Carl Laemmle. He entered upon his new duties on April 19th. On the evening of the 19th, Mr. Bernstein was the guest of honor at a banquet tendered to him by Mr. Laemmle and the members of the producing staff.

Eddie Chine, former director of Mack Sennett and director of the Sunshine Comedies for the past year, has signed on with the Metro Pictures Corporation as supervising director. Metro has under contemplation the construction of a special comedy stage, which shall be used by four comedy units. The first of these companies to use the new stage will be the unit led by Buster Keaton.

The names of the four directors to work under Chine's supervision have not been announced as yet.

Stroheim in East Takes Charge of Editing

Eric Von Stroheim, the Universal director, has come to New York to supervise the final cutting and editing of his latest production, "The Devil's Pass Key," which is a Universal-filmed picture of Persian life, love and intrigues. Mr. Stroheim says that his new picture is an improvement on "Blind Husbands." In the way of characterization, setting and versimilitude.

Fox Studio in Full Swing

Twenty-eight Sets in New York Building With Room for More

IN spite of the fact that finishing touches still are being put on various sections of the immense new Fox studio on West 55th Street, production operations have suffered little interference so far as reporting for various Fox features are concerned.

At the time of writing, according to the Fox officials, twenty-eight full sets are standing on the studio floor of the 55th Street building, in use by directors or awaiting their turn in sequence. In emphasizing the size of the studio the Fox officers call attention to the fact that with these twenty-eight sets standing on the floor, there still is room for as many as twelve good-sized sets in the space unoccupied. Some of the sets now standing are being used by Dell Henderson, some by Harry Millarde, some by George A. Beranger; others are in use in productions being directed by Richard Stanton and Charles J. Brabin.

Work on the new laboratories is reported as progressing favorably, and it is thought that Fox feature films will soon be completed under the same roof where they are staged and photographed. Equipment for the special novelty subtitles has already been received at the building, and will be installed in conjunction with the laboratories on the ground floor of the building.

 Paramount Film Finished

George Fitzmaurice Makes Successor to Popular "On with the Dance"

COMING at a time when the memory of "On With the Dance" is still fresh in the minds, the announcement that George Fitzmaurice has just completed his second production for Paramount-Artcraft is of much interest to the trade and public. The same quartette that was responsible for "On With the Dance," Onida Berge, scenarist; Mae Murray and David Powell, featured players, and Director Fitzmaurice co-operated on the second production.

Persons who have viewed the picture in the studio projection room are said to be pleased with the result Mr. Fitzmaurice has obtained. Like his first special production, they say, it has an entertaining story with gripping heart interest, and dramatic situations that at times reach the highest pitch; in addition to the featured cast are such names as Holmes E. Herbert, Macey Harlan, Alma Tell, Frank Losee and Lawrence Johnson, a versatile child actor, last seen in "His House."

Atmospheric shots, that always abound in Fitzmaurice productions, include a picturesque beggar's corner of the streets of Constantinople; a harem, realistically reproduced; an old patriarch praying in a mosque. One of the biggest scenes is an embassy ball in Constantinople, for which several hundred extras were used.

Read Units Going Full Blast at Ince Plant

The J. Parker Reid, Jr., units are reported to be working in full force at the Ince studios, Culver City. Hobart Bosworth is filming "Buckoo McAllister," a South Sea Island story, under direction of Roy H. Marshall. The entire company will go to the Santa Cruz Islands for exterior locations. Wesley Ruggles has been engaged to direct the new Louise Glamm production, which is as yet untitled. James Kirkwood will play the leading masculine role. Beautiful gowns will be a feature, it is said.

Production Record Set by Simplex Plant

The week just past, according to Mr. E. M. Porta, general manager of the Simplex plant, saw all records broken for machine production since the building of the Simplex Projector was first started.

"It is nothing short of marvelous," said Mr. Porta, "to think that we should see a record-breaking week of machine production two months following a disastrous fire which deprived us of a five-story building. The loss of such a building, fully equipped with new machinery and tools, was naturally a severe blow, and came at a time when we were getting into our stride in the over-production program we had planned.

"A blow of this sort would have halted temporarily at least, some manufacturers with a less efficient organization, but to see the greatest number of Simplexes that have yet been manufactured in a week's time going out of our factory in spite of the fire surely speaks volumes for our organization."

Aerial Scenes Will Be Filmed in Storm

Vitagraph reports that all is in readiness for the filming of what is described as one of the most hazardous scenes ever attempted in picture-making. Two aeroplanes are to be sent up in the midst of an electrical storm, according to Vitagraph. One plane will be manned by a man and a girl; the other by a cameraman, his equipment, a searchlight, flare bombs in spite of the fact, the necessary hand to manipulate these accessories.

The scenes are to be taken in connection with "The Girl Out of the Sky," featuring Wallace MacDonald and Marguerite De La Motte under the direction of Tom Terris. Everything is ready for the storm scene, at Catalina Island, California, says Vitagraph—everything except the storm.
Pathe Sales Drive a Success

A REMARKABLE tribute has been paid to Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in the record breaking business done during the March competition, known as "Brumnet Month," the winners of which are announced this week by Director of Exchanges Elmer R. Pearson.

In a driving finish, which brought up its totals even in collections and new business to $124 per cent above the average for November, December and January, the Albany Branch in the Eastern division, captured the team competition for its section. When the final figures were tallied, Branch Manager R. M. Moran, showed an increase in collections of 75 per cent, and a 49 per cent increase in the matter of new business. The Washington office, managed by E. R. Champion, was runner-up to Albany, with a total increase of 55 per cent.

In the Central Western division, where the competition resulted in a much closer race than in the Eastern territory, Milwaukee carried off the honors, with a total increase in collections and new business of 84 per cent.

It was in the Southern territory that the greatest competition developed, with Oklahoma City, managed by E. P. Pickard, winning with the astounding increase of 238 per cent, and Los Angeles, guided respectively by E. E. Heller, and D. J. Culp, fought stubbornly for second honors, with both coming out close to a tie, showing an increase of 140 per cent, against 130 per cent for Texas territory.

Broadway House for Kaufman

ALBERT A. KAUFMAN, who has formed a producing alliance with Marshall Neilan, arrived in New York recently from California for the purpose of closing an arrangement whereby he takes over a big Broadway theater primarily, with the purpose in mind of working out several new ideas he has in connection with the public presentation of Dorothy Phillips and Victor Holhauer and Agnes Ayres Productions.

In this connection Mr. Kaufman stated that it was not his intention to become interested in the Exhibiting field, but that his plans involving the purchase of a New York theatre were formed solely for the purpose of giving his productions their national premieres here for long runs. He said that the theatre he is negotiating for is right in the heart of Times Square, and admitted that it was not a picture theatre.

In his idea in taking over a New York theatre, he is to give to his productions presentation and exploitation along lines that will make and prove "long runs." Mr. Kaufman has several ideas along these lines which he would like to work out.

"In short, the presentation here would act as a showwindow for my pictures, not only in so far as they are featured in the theatrical themselves are concerned, but also as regards the physical presentation and exploitation. I plan to have one of the best known showmen handle this theatre in a manner that will facilitate the presentation of the pictures throughout the country in a way never before attempted."

As to his producing plans, Mr. Kaufman said: "As soon as I possibly can, I will return to California to start work on the initial Dorothy Phillips-Holhauer production. I feel that it is premature to give details concerning this picture, but I will say that I have just finished a film with Osie Scholl, author of "Heart of Humanity" and "Right of Hand.""

Mr. Kaufman, who resides in the studio with Marshall Neilan, stated that the latter is just finishing his third independent production following "Don't Ever Marry," and has already started on the fourth. "Don't Ever Marry," said he, "will easily prove a bigger attraction than even "The River's End," and will disclose something absolutely new in film plays.

The initial Phillips-Holhauer picture, which was stated by Mr. Kaufman, will be produced on a big scale, so that it can be presented to the public on an elaborate plan, mounted by a large national publicity campaign. This standard will be followed in other Phillips-Holhauer pictures.

In connection with the distribution of his product, Mr. Kaufman said: "I am not thinking further than the production of my first picture and its premiere here. When I get back I will devote all my time to the making of a picture which I consider has most unusual possibilities."
Simplex Notes

Mr. Harry Asher, Executive Head of the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, was at the Simplex Factory last week conferring with Mr. E. M. Porter, Simplex General Manager on matters that will eventually find their expression in a well organized drive covering the southern section of New England.

Mr. Asher reports that not only is Boston being thoroughly Simplexified as Fall River, Lawrence, Lowell and New Bedford are beginning to answer the call for Simplex. In one day, so Mr. Asher reports, eleven orders for Simplex were received last week for theatres in the cities enumerated and in each case they represent replacements of machines of other makes previously installed.

The Boston Motion Picture Supply Company now located at 51 Broadway, Boston, has leased the corner location formerly occupied by the Select Picture Corporation at the corner of Church and Shawmut streets and when the artists now working out the new contract, Simplex have finished the new home of this Boston Supply House will be hard to duplicate either for location, equipment or size.

The present quarters of this company are now regarded as the flagship in New England, but with Mr. Asher's plans in effect, concerning the new building, Boston will surely have occasion to be proud of its lending supply house.

Several Simplex officials plan to go to Boston within the next few days in order to suggest the working out of various details in the new establishment as are followed in other Simplex outlets at Simplex Distributors through the country.

J. Frank Brockliss, the well-known English producer, and the head of the house of J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., of Wardour street, London, has just completed another round trip across the Atlantic and comes back this time with reports of many sales of Simplex Projectors, for which their company are exclusive distributors in Great Britain.

Mr. Brockliss states that the main difficulty seems to be the preponderance of orders over deliveries.

Pathe's Releases for May

Keenan, Lewis and Henley Pictures Are Scheduled for Release in May

ENCOURAGED by reports from branch managers all over the country to the effect that motion picture attendance is reaching greater levels than ever before, the Pathé Exchange has arranged for the release of four new productions during May. Frank Keenan will be seen in "Dollar for Dollar," Hobart Henley will present "The Miracle of Money," and "Sherry," an extra special feature, comes from Edgar Lewis, whose production of "Other Men's Shoes" is now meeting with the greatest popular favor in every territory. In addition to the three productions, another Pathé extra special will be released, the details of which will be announced shortly.

"Dollar for Dollar," to be released on May 2nd, is a Keenan drama of high finance, society and politics. It is a play with touches that reach the emotions in a manner so well exemplified by Mr. Keenan in previous productions.

"Sherry," the latest Edgar Lewis production, will be released as a Pathé extra-special on May 30th, according to Pathé, and it will be airing production to succeed "Other Men's Shoes." It is the story of a man's regeneration, of his battle for his own soul.

"The Miracle of Money" Hobart Henley is said to have produced a picture which reminds one of his best efforts in the creation of "Pauline Frederick, Will Rogers, and Frank McIntyre features. The story is from "Marrying Off" and it is described as a quaint tale rich in philosophy.

Comedy Praised at Initial Showing

The first indication of how the public will receive "Down on the Farm," the new Mack Sennett five reel comedy, was made known recently when Mr. Sennett was wired by the manager of the Strand theatre, of Fort Wayne, Ind., where the production had an early release.

"We opened 'Down on the Farm' on Easter Sunday," wired the exhibitor, "and compelled to turn away business despite severe snow storms raging which swept entire Middle West. Opposition very strong. On third day with miserable weather still standing them up. Using barn yard setting, prologue, and rube orchestra and live animals. Expect tremendous week. Regards."

This reception to the new picture leads Hiram Abrams, of the United Artists Corporation to predict that it will exceed the popularity attained by Mr. Sennett's former picture.

Inter-Ocean Will Have West Coast Offices

An announcement of more than ordinary interest to the trade is embodied in a statement issued this week by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, according to which it plans to establish West Coast offices through which it will handle the distribution of motion picture accessories in that territory, and which offices will serve to expedite shipments of motion pictures and accessories to Far Eastern and Australian foreign countries. The large increase of business is given as the reason for the new offices.

Cosmopolitan Acquires Magazine Stories

Cosmopolitan Productions, through its vice-president and general manager, Henry M. Hobart, has purchased the literary rights to the works of Mark Twain. While he has signed a contract whereby all his stories appearing in Hearst's, Cosmopolitan, Good Housekeeping, and Harper's Bazaar magazines will, for an indefinite period, be subject to first call for motion picture purposes by Cosmopolitan Productions. Frank Bor- naze, director of "Humoresque," will direct the first of Boyle's stories.

Viola Dana and Motion Sils in a new Metro picture starring Miss Dana, "Dangerous to Men."

Simplex Notes

Mr. Harry Asher, Executive Head of the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, was at the Simplex Factory last week conferring with Mr. E. M. Porter, Simplex General Manager on matters that will eventually find their expression in a well organized drive covering the southern section of New England.

Mr. Asher reports that not only is Boston being thoroughly Simplexified as Fall River, Lawrence, Lowell and New Bedford are beginning to answer the call for Simplex. In one day, so Mr. Asher reports, eleven orders for Simplex were received last week for theatres in the cities enumerated and in each case they represent replacements of machines of other makes previously installed.

The Boston Motion Picture Supply Company now located at 51 Broadway, Boston, has leased the corner location formerly occupied by the Select Picture Corporation at the corner of Church and Shawmut streets and when the artists now working out the new contract, Simplex have finished the new home of this Boston Supply House will be hard to duplicate either for location, equipment or size.

The present quarters of this company are now regarded as the flagship in New England, but with Mr. Asher's plans in effect, concerning the new building, Boston will surely have occasion to be proud of its lending supply house.

Several Simplex officials plan to go to Boston within the next few days in order to suggest the working out of various details in the new establishment as are followed in other Simplex outlets at Simplex Distributors through the country.

J. Frank Brockliss, the well-known English producer, and the head of the house of J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., of Wardour street, London, has just completed another round trip across the Atlantic and comes back this time with reports of many sales of Simplex Projectors, for which their company are exclusive distributors in Great Britain.

Mr. Brockliss states that the main difficulty seems to be the preponderance of orders over deliveries.

Harley Knole's Co. Off For Charleston

After waiting patiently for two days for some let-up in the railway strike, Director Harley Knole and the Dorothy Dalton company were able to leave the city at 5:30 o'clock Wednesday morning for Charleston, S. C., where they will take second.ex-treme round to the cast of "This Man," Avery Hopwood's play, which is the star's second production for the Famous Players-Lucky Corporation.

Neilan Kills False Rumor

Foreign Made Pictures Will Be Released Through First National

MARSHALL NEILAN has been asked by the representatives of various motion picture companies to act as financial advisor in various production projects. The star's connection with the project referred to in the "California Daily News," and the statement that Neilan would go to Hollywood to work, has been denied by his office.

"I have under way a number of plans involving the production of some very unusual pictures, staged in the exact locales of the various plots involving some of the most famous landmarks in England, France, Ireland and Belgium and Spain. These productions will I believe, soon be announced his Excellency's picture, and it is described as a quaint tale rich in philosophy.
Premiere Staged by Grauman

EQUITY Pictures Corporation announces that the premiere at Grauman's Railway Barn, Los Angeles, Sunday, April 18, of Clara Kimball Young's new picture, “For the Soul of Rafael," made under the personal direction of H. A. Kimball Young, Manager S. D. Grauman, will be the first picture ever put over in Los Angeles to be made on the Sunset Strip. It is Mr. Keich's intention to see that no stone is left unturned in the making of a screen production of this magnitude.

Regarding the production of “For the Soul of Rafael,” which is said to be an elaborate character, the Equity Pictures Corporation has issued the following statement: “At the earliest conception, Harry Garson, president, and general director of the Garson Studio, planned to make the production as important to the screen industry as the novel was to American literature, and the combined efforts of star, director and producer have resulted in one of the greatest screen achievements ever accomplished. "For the production of the picture, the most skilled technicians and technical experts on every phase of the life and customs of the early Californians were secured as an advisory board, and Marah R. Ryan, the author, moved to Los Angeles during the period of production so that he and the producer could be in the studio and be with Miss Pickford and her company on all locations. The scenes were taken in the exact locations and the exact buildings described in the book. Every important mission from Los Angeles to Hollywood to Mount Shasta in the north were visited by the appropriate locales for the attractive story. "A number of the most dramatic episodes of the story, the Soul of Rafael, transparent in and around the missions during the celebration of the birthday of the New Year by the native tribes, the culminating of all the religious observances, which is the climax of our story, are set among the missions of the state."

The total cost of producing “For the Soul of Rafael” was enormous. The time required to produce this motion picture, six months, including the elaborate sets치, was carried out by Clara Kimball Young’s managing director, Harry Garson, and technical experts.

One of the most important factors in connection with the production is the unceasing watch which Mr. Garson maintained in support of Miss Young. Such names as H. Frank Glendinning, Junius S. Matthews, Ruth Kin, Bertram Grassly, Roscoe Arbuckle, Marie Eunice, Helen Sullivan and Edward M. Kimball are seen in the important roles."

Mary Pickford in Slavey Role

Her New Characterization Is Said to Be Best of Career

Mary Pickford as Amandac Afflick, a little cockney laundry drudge, in "The Duchess of Sables," her next release through United Artists Corporation, Mary Pickford reaches the greatest height of her inimitable characterizations for the screen. Already a great production the picture has been finished, and Hiram Albert Hall, who took an interest in the picture, the second directed by Miss Pickford for the Big Four, for an early release.

"What portions of the picture have already been shown to the members of the organization and from the stills that have already been issued for exploitation, advertisement and publicity, there is no reason to doubt that the character Miss Pickford portrays gives her greatest opportunity of her screen career with its inimitable characteristics. The character is a wonderfully appealing one, effective and triumphant in its every degree of simplicity, in its many moments of cheerful fun and hilarious antics, and of tearful emotion. Yet, the story draws its line cleverly between the changes, and the whole is filled with sentiment and pathos."

The reason the role of Miss Pickford portrays is so uniquely so well received is because she is almost unrecognizable, yet eliciting her with an art for characterization that is beyond imitation. There is more pathos and human nature compressed into this character than is found anywhere else in the characters Miss Pickford has ever done, and she has been, so carefully hammering at this production that the predictions are that it will be the best."

"The character of Amandac Afflick is that of a young English girl, born in a work-house and adopted to a French laundry woman. She has read and re-read the cheap novels, the literature that has come to her notice, all of which she have dealt with the upper social strata, until her dreams and her life are composed of the most fanciful imaginations, which invest her sadlly surroundings with all sorts of potential greatness. Such a character affords a most wonderful opportunity for the delineators of the part of Miss Pickford, and gives her that long looked for role of playing a character that will long last in the memory of her followers."

"The spirit of the primitive type has no complications that make it and no plot that thickens, just pathos alternating with humor in rapid succession so that you don’t know whether you are laughing or crying, and feel quite torn with conflicting emotions when the story finishes."

"Everyone, everywhere is anxiously awaiting this production since Miss Pickford has made it plain that she is going to exhale the picture that will be startling the Big Four pictures for besides the unique characterization and the charmingly appealing story, the setting will be fine, the cast well rounded out and the plot as a whole, the kind all people will talk about."

Seek Bessie Love Vehicles
Andrew Callaghan Comes to New York to Find Stories for Star.

Los Angeles, April 19, 1917. Bessie Love, screen goddess of New York, is going to visit New York producers to find a story for a motion picture. She is known for her roles in films and has been credited with bringing attention to a variety of stories and plotlines.

Mr. Callaghan, representative of the Players-Lasky Corporation, went to New York to present several stories to producers for possible adaptation. He met with great interest from the producers, who were eager to bring Love's talents to the screen.

Among the stories presented was a story about a young woman who discovers she has the power to control the weather. This story was well-received and is expected to be one of the first in a series of films that will feature Love's unique talents.

F. P. Lasky Corporation announce that they will release two new features shortly. The first feature is "The Cost," starring Bessie Love, and will be released on April 30. The second feature, "The Art," will be released on May 15.

Pathe News Claims New Speed Record

Pathe Exchange, Inc., claims a new record in projection by showing big current events on the screen after their occurrence. Three weeks ago, they showed the revolution in Persia; a week later, the revolution in Egypt. This week, they showed the revolution in Berlin. The film was released on April 7.

Exclusive Club Seen in Mayflower Picture

The stately Millionaires' Club, Sixtieth street and Fifth avenue, is the setting for the latest film from Mayflower Picture. It is considered an unusual privilege to obtain permission to take interior scenes in this exclusive club.

In the Mayflower presentation, Miss Sylvia Breamer enacts the title role. She has received thorough preparation to properly portray the part of the heroine, who is supposed to be endowed with supernatural powers. Conrad Nagle is the leading man.

Metropolitan Stars Start on Magazine Stories

Two of Metro's popular feminine stars, Viola Dana and May Allison, are starting their new pictures together at the Metro Studios in Hollywood, and both are based upon current literary material. Miss Dana is to do "Head and Shoulders," by P. O. Scott Fitzgerald, a story which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Miss Allison's new starring vehicle is "Behind the Truth," the novel by George Kibbe Turner, now running in the Red Book magazine.

Both of these vehicles are considered by Metro forces to offer great opportunities to the stars to display their peculiar talents.
Goldwyn Gives Its Schedule

According to Goldwyn's distribution system, which has been emphatically endorsed by exhibitors during the past year, definite release dates are not given productions. It has been found more satisfactory to make a number of pictures available to first run exhibitors at the same time in order that they may take their pick.

Every reader of the Saturday Evening Post is familiar with the stories of Octavia Roy Cohen, who has turned his creative genius to the writing of original scripts for production by Goldwyn. "Dollars and Sense," the first of his works prepared especially for motion pictures, is marked by the natural humor and strong human appeal that have given this author's stories such a high place in current fiction. Although it does not come under the head of a vehicle modeled to suit the personality of a star, Mr. Cohen conceived a central character in which the ability of Miss Kennedy has ample scope.

The "River's End" Scoring

Contracts, Totaling $300,000, Are Reported 46 Days After Release

It is announced that Marshall Nellan's initial independent production, "The River's End," released through First National, has reached the $300,000 mark on the forty-sixth day following its first public showing. Contracts, totaling this amount, are said to have been approved by the New York offices of the Nellan organization, and the figure is considered a record-breaking for gross sales on a production released in this manner to motion picture theatres in this short space of time.

It is expected by those who are in a position to know, that "The River's End" will reach a million dollars gross. This assumption is reached in view of the manner in which contracts are now coming in from communities large and small, not only for original bookings but also for return dates. In many cities the second and third run showings of this production, it is asserted, have reaped the benefit of the national popularity and advertising accorded it.

It is stated that small-town exhibitors are finding "The River's End," a particularly exceptional attraction.

Exhibitors in these small communities, through tie-up arrangements with Warterson, Berlin & Snyder, publishers of the song and the Cosmopolitan Book Corporation, publishers of the book, are enabled to secure free of charge a large supply of advertising material including cutouts, street bannners, lobby displays, slides, orchestrations, singers, window displays, store cards and other material which gives them enough advertising matter, gratis, to circums the showing of this production.
Feminine Appeal a Feature

"The House of Toys" Was Built to Appeal to Women, Says Hutchinson.

The multinational girl whom Henry Russell Miller made the heroine of his story, "The House of Toys," believed it would be romantic to be poor and live in a cottage with the man she loved while he climbed the ladder to the fame they were both sure was in store for him. But the young architect did not find this "dream girl" of his a very inspiring "helpmate" when his plans were turned down; when competitors got the business, and when the.Ooplah bank failed, And when, with the assistance of others who were ready to say "I told you so," the young wife decided he was a failure, our hero found another woman who did understand.

It has been the leading role. Paul Trenton heads the supporting cast.

Denver Has New First Run

Tabor Theatre Acquires Rights to First National Attractions.

DENVER is to have another first run motion picture house through the operation of a contract just signed whereby the Tabor theatre has obtained virtually exclusive rights to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit attractions.

This contract went into force Saturday, April 10, when the Tabor began its First National program with the showing of "The River's End," the Marshall Neilan production from James Oliver Curwood's book by the same name. "The River's End" will run for a week and changes will be made each Saturday, as at present arranged by the Tabor. In a formal announcement in the Denver newspapers a few days before the contract went into effect, Manager Thomas G. Vick, Roy of the Tabor theatre, explained the change in the house's policy as follows:

"Saturday, April 10th, the Tabor opens its doors as Denver's foremost shrine of the silent art and motion pictures, discontinuing vaudeville. Contracts have been entered into between the Vick Roy Amusement and Investment Company and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit by which we will stage the first runs of the First National releases."

"Many of the leading motion picture stars will appear on our screen including Norma and Constance Talmadge, Charles People Anita Stewart, Katherine MacDonald and many others, as well as several of the Griffith and Marshall Neilan productions."

The William Fox Rivoli theatre, which has been playing most of the First National releases in Denver, will continue to present features already contracted for.

Fox Plans For Further Foreign Expansion
Reports of action taken by his foreign representatives have just been received by William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, in connection with recent instructions by the producer regarding expansion of the corporation's offices and exhibitors' service in the foreign market.

Advices from both the London and Paris branches announce completion of plans for opening additional offices in several cities of England and France. Even Africa is invaded by the latest multiplex, with a branch office having already been opened in Algiers, and a fine business in this field is reported.

Two More Players for Hampton Pictures
Robert McKim and Claire Adams have been engaged by Benjamin B. Hampton on a term contract basis to appear in that producer's photo plays of famous novels. Miss Adams was an ingenue of the English stage, and has appeared in a few motion pictures before her try out in Mr. Hampton's Zane Grey story, "The Desert of Wheat."

Lasky Reports New Productions

UPON his arrival in New York this week, after a visit of several weeks to Hollywood, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, made several important announcements regarding the production affairs of the corporation in the first place, Mr. Lasky announced the title of the new super-special which Cecil B. De Mille has just finished at the Lasky studio in Hollywood is "Something to Think About," and Mr. Lasky predicted that this picture not only would give exhibitors and the motion picture-going public a treat to think about, but would prove one of the greatest photoplay sensations of recent years.

"I have seen 'Something to Think About,'" said Mr. Lasky, "and it is my opinion that Cecil B. De Mille has never done anything that can compare with it. By 'Why Change Your Wife,' 'Male and Female,' 'Old Wives for New' and others of his big super-specials, Mr. De Mille has educated the public to look to him for the most artistic handling of big, dramatic themes. But in 'Something to Think About' Mr. De Mille has a theme which is even larger and of a more profound and widespread appeal than that of any of the pictures he has already made. "The exact nature of 'Something to Think About' I am not at liberty to discuss at this time, but I will say that the picture treats of a big modern question which comes in close relation to the lives of all of us."

"Something to Think About" marks the return to the screen of that stellar actor, Elliott Dexter, who has completely recovered from his recent illness. Mr. Dexter has an important role in this picture, and his many admirers will be glad to renew their allegiance to him.

"Gloria Swanson, who has appeared in so many of Mr. De Mille's pictures, has a leading role in 'Something to Think About,' " Theod-ore Roberts, Monte Blue, Julia Faye and other well known players have prominent parts. The scenario is the work of Jeanie MacPherson, who has "Male and Female," "Don't Change Your Husband," and other big successes to her credit."

Mr. Lasky has announced the promotions of Robert E. MacAlarney and Howard Turrill. Mr. MacAlarney, who has been scenario editor of Famous Players-Lasky for several years, will take over greater responsibilities in the Eastern production activities of the company. Mr. Turrill, who also has been in the production department, will act as Mr. Lasky's personal assistant.

Mr. Lasky also announced that George MacFadden, who produced "The Sea Wolf" and "Kizzywoman," and who is now nearing the completion of Sir Gilbert Parker's story, "The Foundation of a Savage," will shortly begin on a special production of William Van Allen Moody's great stage success, "The Faith Healer." This production, it is expected, will prove a lasting successor to George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man." Milton Sills, originally chosen by Mr. Moody to play the title role in the stage production, will appear in the title role in the screen version. Mr. Moody already is in Hollywood collaborating on the adaptation of the play to the screen.

George Melford also will produce the new screen version of Dumas Thompson's famous play, "The Old Homestead." Theodore Roberts will play the role created by DeForrest Thompson, while others in the cast will include Monte Blue and Mildred Scott.

Another interesting announcement was that Joseph Henshaw, one of the best known directors, who has made a number of the biggest Paramount Arcturus pictures, will direct Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in his new five-reel feature comedies.

Burton King Purchases Willard Mack Play
"Burton King, who has recently completed, "The Road to Arabey," his first picture as an independent producer, announces that he has acquired the screen rights to "The Common Sin," a new dramatic story by Willard Mack. Mr. Mack, who has a number of well known screen successes to his credit, is writing the continuity of this story.

"The Hidden Path," Mr. King's second independent production, is nearing completion.

Perfecting Publicity Plans

Important Place Is Assigned to Press in J. Parker Read's Drive

Work is progressing rapidly, and it is stated, on J. Parker Read's publicity campaign for the Louise Glauin and Hobart Bosworth productions, in an announcement just received from Culver City, the place that has been assigned to the press is especially emphasized. The statement from the head office follows:

"Mr. Sig. Schlager, Mr. Read's personal representative, has been touring the country for the past two months and has completed arrangements with hundreds of the country's most important and influential newspapers whereby they will enlist their aid in an entirely new and novel exploitation stunt. Possibly the most important of all is the trade paper campaign, and elaborate preparations are being made for the advertising layouts. Mr. Read fully realizes that the only way to get in personal touch with the men in whose hands rest the success of his productions is through the medium of the trade journal.

"Mr. Read's policy of fewer but better pictures is being adhered to and already Hobart Bosworth and Louise Glauin started on the year's special productions. In addition to Miss Glauin's and Mr. Bosworth's production, two all-star photoplays of big proportions will be made under the Read banner. Coincident with this announcement, Producer Read has set up a new press department at the studio and inaugurated a direct to exhibitor department and will be responsible for the promotion of the Louise Glauin and Hobart Bosworth films."

Jose Will Direct Farrar

Associated Exhibitors Prepare for Initial Offering of Star

Edward Jose, who will direct Geraldine Farrar's productions for Associated Exhibitors' release.

Edward Jose has been engaged by Associated Exhibitors, Inc. to direct Geraldine Farrar's initial production for that organization. Mr. Jose has just finished directing Anita Stewart in "The Yellow Typhoon." It is expected that production of Miss Farrar's first Associated picture will begin very soon—as soon as she returns to New York from a Southern tour. The Associated Exhibitors have made no announcement of the title or nature of Miss Farrar's first vehicle under their banner.

Mr. Jose is believed to be one of the most capable directors in the field. He has directed such stars as Norma Talmadge, Elsie Ferguson, Pauline Frederick, Anita Stewart, Lilian Cavallieri and many others, and he has produced several big spectacles with all-star casts. His directorial genius is responsible for numerous highly successful photoplays, and it is believed that in his new connection Mr. Jose will be given greater opportunities than ever before.

Mr. Jose's stage and screen experience dates back considerably more than a score of years. He was born in Antwerp, Belgium, and studied at the Paris Conservatory for pianists. His twenty years of stage experience in France, England, Belgium and South America included a long term as stage director for Sarah Bernhardt. He directed all the plays at the Theatre Antoine in Paris for several years. His screen career included connections in a directorial capacity with Pathé, Schricker, Arterait, Famous Players and many others.

New Screen Proved Success

Says Glifograph Has Solved New York Roof's Projection Problem

With the installation of the newly scientifically constructed Glifograph screen in many of the Loew theatres, exhibitors are giving more attention to projection. One of the most severe tests given projection was on the New York Roof during the run of John Barrymore's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," when capacity was played to at every performance, it was stated. The New York Roof has always presented, perhaps, the most difficult problem in projection known. The Roof is a block wide, and the screen is in the center with half a block of seats on either side. With the customary flat screen in use, it was almost an impossibility to get patrons to sit anywhere on the Roof except in the center sections. It is asserted, the many boxes and seats on the right and left of the center sections remaining un_filled.

Flynn to Direct Mix in "The Untamed"

After completing "Big Jim O'Kane," the fifth Fox feature in which he has directed William B.21 and has been declared its greatest story in which that dashing Western actor has appeared—"The Untamed," by Max Brand.

The Mix-Flynn Company will leave Hollywood early next week for the California mountains. It is expected that seven weeks will be spent there making the exteriors.

Universal Serials Are Going Strong

The new Universal serial, "The Moon Riders," is causing much favorable comment by the exhibitors who have booked it, states Universal. It is full of real western action. Art Acord, who plays the lead, is well known as "Buck Parvin," the screen cowboy hero of the stories which ran in the Saturday Evening Post a few years ago. Supporting Art Acord is Mildred F.22 and "Follows the Beauty." The second episode will be released May 3d. The thirteen-episode serial of "Elise and the Fearless" is ready for release.

Charles Urban Offers Single Reel Novelty

Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America, has devised a new kind of screen entertainment, the distribution of which in the United States and Canada will shortly be announced. The novelty will be known as "Movie Chats" and its aim is to offer pictorial information in the character of one who has traveled much and observed much. Mr. Urban's staff includes Norah Redmond, Carl Horion Pierce, and Henry McMahon.

Geraghty Will Write for Famous Players

Thomas J. Geraghty, scenario writer, has just signed a long-term contract with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, according to an announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, First Vice-President. He will be attached to the scenario staff of the company at the Lasky studio and his first work will be the scenario of "Burglar Proof" for Bryant Washburn, Paramount-Artcraft star, which picture will be made following "The Blue House," on which Mr. Washburn is now engaged.

"His Temporary Wife" Winning Bookings

Fulfilling the prophecies made before its showings, "His Temporary Wife," the Hodkinson all-star production, is bringing in a steady stream of contract bookings, according to the producers. Following its big week engagement at Tom Moore's Strand theatre, Washington, D. C., "His Temporary Wife" played to excellent business at fully fifty first-run theatres.

Two interesting scenes from "Bullet Proof," a Universal feature

R. H. COCHRANE, vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has taken vigorous objection to published reports of the National Motion Picture League urging a ban on serials. Far from agreeing that serials are detrimental to moving picture progress and harmful to certain classes of patrons, Mr. Cochran maintains that there is just as much need for good serials as for any other film product, and that high-class serials are coming into their own in the best houses.

The National Motion Picture League, explained the film official, "has been fit to convey to the public a series of reports emanating from various public school principals blaming certain phases of the motion picture industry. I am hearby in accord with all attempts to better the industry, but I find it unnecessary to take exception to certain activities of this League. Where official or unofficial organizations are formed to further the interest of the screen, they deserve encouragement and cooperation by film men and by the general public. Such organizations, however, have their greatest scope in aiding the exhibitor to present his pictures under the most acceptable conditions. Where there are adequate laws regulating motion picture exhibitions, they should cooperate with the exhibitor to obtain the maximum possible observance of such laws. Where there are no adequate laws, it is to their interest to further proper legislation."

"The average exhibitor is only too willing to improve the conditions in his theatre. He cannot be held responsible for the individual actions of each of his patrons. He is warned, however, for volunteer screen improvement societies to take upon themselves censorial authority. There already are sufficient censor boards—more than enough, in fact. It is equally unwise, however, for volunteer organizations to attempt to influence the policies of the picture producers. Film manufacturers take good care to make only the kind of pictures the public wants to see."

The National Motion Picture League has recently disseminated reports condemning serials on the ground of sensationalism, and because they are alleged to form the "motion picture habit." The League further pretends to trace a deviant reaction among juvenile delinquents.

Nothing could be more erroneous or absurd. Serials have a well-defined place in motion picture programs. Any attempt to cast dispersion upon them is to exhibit ignorance of the reasons why serials are popular.

The serial is the continued story of the screen. In serials the plot, characterization and action can be developed to an extent not possible in a five or six-reel photodrama. Just as a man delights in picking up his weekly periodical the evening of a week and reading the installment of some popular novel, so the motion picture fan relishes the weekly episode of his serial. It is about as conducive to the "motion picture habit" whatever kind of a disease that may be, as a Saturday afternoon trip to the public library is conducive to the bookworm malady.

"Terror Island" is Released

Houdini and Endi Bennett Productions on Paramount Schedule

ONE of the real high spots of the Paramount-Artecture schedule, it is declared, is "Terror Island," Houdini's second feature production which, along with "The False Road," a Thomas H. Ince production that starred Enid Bennett, which was released April 18.

Arthur H. Reye and John W. Grey, who wrote Houdini's successful Paramount-Artecture thriller, "The Grim Game," are the authors of "Terror Island." The latter, moreover, is said to be a unique creation of its kind, in that it not only fits the peculiar talents of Houdini to the letter better than did "The Grim Game"—but it also involves a thoroughly romantic story in which the love element is uppermost.

The writing of the scenario was entrusted to Walter Woods, one of the most experienced of the Famous Players-Lasky staff screenwriters, who won, perhaps, his highest honors when he put "The Grim Game" into screen form. James Cruze, who has won distinction with his production starring Wallace Reid, was the director. Scenic locations had to be dug up, at least five hundred extras were used, and the action throughout was of the lightning speed, dangerous type that taxes the nerves and ingenuity of a director to the utmost.

The story of "Terror Island" presents Houdini as the inventor of a secret submarine device with which he hopes to salvage the cargoes of wrecked ships.

Finkelstein Rubin Book
"The Sagebrusher"

On the heels of their success with Benjamin H. Hampton's Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold," Finkelstein and Rubin, the Northwest exhibitors with a chain of first-run houses in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, have given Mr. Hampton's newest W. W. Hodkinson release, "The Sagebrusher." Their approval in the form of a big contract-booking whereby the Emerson House production will be given early presentation for week runs at the Finkelstein and Rubin houses.

Barret McCormick, the prominent Indianapolis showman, has also hooked "The Sagebrusher" for a week's showing at his Mister Smith theatre.

Springfield Operators Get Wage Increase

Springfield, Illinois, motion picture operators have been given an increase in pay and a shortening of hours. The new scale, which went into effect April 1, calls for $30 a week, with two operators in all downtown theatres, each man working a six-hour day. This applies to the Lyric, City, Princess and to the Vaudeville, which will be opened in the fall.

The second run theatres pay the first operator a $32.50 scale, with a man and a half in charge. This means that there will be three operators for two theatres. Theatres included in this arrangement are Royal, Savoy, Amuse-U and Capitol.

New Scenic To Be Made By Marion H. Kohn

Closely following his announcement that he would shortly take over the production and distributing of a present new weekly, Marion H. Kohn president of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, has stated that he is about to enter the scenic field. Death Valley, made famous in many novels has been picked by Mrs. Kohn as the first target for his cameramen.

GEORGES CARPENTIER
RIng TogS AT LAST

For the first time since his arrival in America, Georges Carpentier will fight in ring costume next Monday evening in the Solax Studio, Port Lee, N. J. The appearance will be part of Carpentier's American society drama, which is being directed by John G. Adolfi, and which is to be distributed by Robertson-Cole.

The many efforts made since Carpentier's arrival in America to get him into the ring to show his physical development have been of no avail, owing to the terms of his contract with Robertson-Cole, says a statement from the office of that organization. To the fight scheduled for Monday night 500 well-known New Yorkers, sporting editors, trade-paper and newspaper writers, sporting scribes and critics have been invited. Carpentier will meet a real fighter, it is announced, and thus the bout is expected to possess all the elements of a genuine ring encounter.

"Buddy" Post Comedies Issued by Goldwyn

"Buddy" Post, in two-reel Capitol Comedies, to be produced by the National Film Corporation, will be distributed through Goldwyn exchanges, beginning at an early date, according to an announcement issued by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation this week. The first of the pictures starring the giant comedian is being completed at the Coast Studios of the National Corporation. Whether or not the working title of the initial comedy will be retained, "Love and Lott" is undetermined. In his new series of Capitol Comedies, "Buddy" is directed by Mark Goldine, who also directed Neal Page, Helen Howard, a clever ingenue, has been selected to play opposite "Buddy."

International Film Service Co. Inc. presents

“Jiggs In Society”
Adapted from Geo. McManus famous series “Bringing Up Father”

with JOHNNY RAY
Produced by Christie Film Co. TWO REELS
The old saying says it can’t, but here’s a ripping story based on the fact that it can.
A murder is committed in a motion picture studio. A film turns up, which, when projected, shows the girl star of that studio shooting the murdered man. And because of the fact that the camera was a liar, you have a white-hot fifteen episode serial, with arrests, escapes, chases, imprisonments, plots, villainy and action galore.

PRESENTS

GRANDE

From the famous play by AUGUSTUS THOMAS

PERSONALLY DIRECTED BY EDWIN CAREWE

Underneath the great white southern moon! The night calls her to romance. Her warm Mexican heart hungers for it. There before her is Romance, in an American! Training bids her hate; inclination bids her love; caution bids her beware. How can she know that her conflict of emotions springs from the commingled blood of the two races, racing in her veins?

A CERTAIN SUCCESS—FOR YOU!
A "best seller" as a book, a best seller to your theatre public.

"SHERRY" from the famous novel by George Barr McCutcheon personally directed by Edgar Lewis

The man "who lifted himself up by his bootstraps"!
They say it can't be done. Here was a man who did.
They say "they never come back." Again "they" are wrong.
Sherry was prodigal with his money and his friendship. When the first was gone the friends went also, save one or two "who didn't count for much," with others. And yet he set himself to win, and he won, in spite of his unsaintly reputation. His first victory was himself; and the second the Girl.

STATE RIGHTS EXPORT

Transatlantic Sells Feature

C. H. Hoagland Describes "Common Level," New State Rights Picture

Plans for the sale of "A Common Level," a six-reel special production made by Transatlantic Film Corporation, are now in full swing, according to an announcement of Herbert C. Hoagland, vice-president and general manager of the company. The picture will be distributed on a state rights basis, and Massachusetts and several other states have already been disposed of.

The picture is a product of two countries, some of the scenes having been made in Europe and others in America. Charlie Whately and Edmund Breese are the featured players and Burton King directed while the story is from the pen of Lloyd Lonergan. Care in production is evident throughout and it is said that in some scenes fully 8,500 people appear before the camera. The cost of the feature is well above the $200,000 mark.

Plan Serial's Exploitation

Canyon Pictures at Work on Campaign to Push "Vanishing Trails"

The Canyon Pictures Corporation, which has just announced that "Vanishing Trails," the new fifteen episode serial, produced by Colonel William Selig, featuring Franklin Farnum and Mary Anderson, will be state righted, and are already at work on a big exploitation campaign for this production, is stated.

Jack Weinberg, president of the company, left for a trip to the coast last week, where he will confer with Colonel Selig regarding future productions, featuring Franklin Farnum, the popular character, and will en route also visit many of the prominent state right buyers. J. M. Goldstein, secretary and treasurer of the company, will handle other sales from the New York office.

The success enjoyed by the two-reel Farnum Westerns produced at the Selig Studios, led to the production of "Vanishing Trails," and Mr. Weinberg is taking many new western stories to the coast with him, which will be used in future Farnum productions.

In addition to a contributing staff, which includes such writers as Frederic Chapin, author of "The Lost City," William E. Wing, author of "Vanishing Trails," E. M. Bower, Bertram Sinclair and many others, the company should have a list of very pretentious material. Leon de la Mothe will direct Mr. Farnum in his new productions. Mr. La Mothe also directed "Vanishing Trails."

Maurice Meyers will handle the publicity and advertising campaign on the serial and the new Farnum productions. The company will engage in direct cooperation with the state right buyers, and they are planning a press book comprising nearly forty pages, according to reports.

Broadway Calhoret Used In Jans Production

In order to supply the proper atmosphere and details for "Madam And Men," the eight-reel special produced by H. A. Kofte for Jans Pictures Inc., Herman F. Jans, president, rented the Palais Royal, one of Broadway's cabarets, for two days for the purpose of dancing scenes. Director Kolfe, the players, and four hundred extras were on hand and the cabaret was transformed into a busy eatery.

According to Director Kolfe, the cabaret scenes are some of the most important in the production and he feels that in order to bring the proper atmosphere into the story it would be better to secure the scenes from the real thing instead of building a set. Owing to the fact that thirty or more of scenes had to be taken the cafe was rented for an extra day.

Southern States Sold For "The Confession"

George H. Davis, owner of "The Confession" the National Film Corporation production featuring Henry W. Bostwick, has announced the sale of Tennessee and Kentucky territory to Colonel Fred. L. Perry, president of the Big Feature Rights Corp. He has also sold Ohio rights to the Grandy Film Company of Pittsburgh.

Shanahan Off On Trip To Sell Production

R. C. Shanahan, sales manager for Wistaria Productions Inc., started last week on the first leg of his trip to the country. Shanahan plans to show "Neglected Wives," Wistaria's latest production, in practically every exchange center in the country.

New Publicity Manager for American

Grace Wynden-Vail, who recently completed the publicity for Numa Pictures Corporation production of "The Return of Tarzan," is now working with the American Cinema in like capacity. During this past week she has covered the activities of both companies, but will soon sever her Numa affiliations. Mrs. Vail has had splendid training for her work, having served her apprenticeship in newspaper work on dailies in Madison and Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Battle Creek, Michigan, and Chicago. She handled publicity for the Crescent Amusement Company at Nashville and Sudoksum for Jake Wells in Atlanta, and for Gaumont at Jacksonville.

McLaughlin Busy Casting for New Piciture

Robert McLaughlin, author of "The House of Children" and "Hidden Charms," both state-right productions made by Argus Enterprises under the direction of Samuel R. Bradley, and distributed by Robert W. Priest through The Film Market, Inc., is in New York securing new players for his new picture production to be made by Bradley Features, Inc., and his Cleveland summer stock company.

Hank Mann Comedies Are Sold Abroad

The Paris office of the Arrow Film Corporation has just concluded a deal whereby it has sold the Arrow-Hank Mann two reel comedies to Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Spain and Portugal. These comedies have also been sold for South America, New Zealand, South Africa, India, Burma and Ceylon.

Publicity Manager Returns From Auto Trip

Agnes Egan Cobb, of Schommer-Rosenbach, has returned to New York from a motor trip to Washington, where she visited the various exchanges. She left for St. Louis to see the All Continental, where Miss Cobb is now exploiting, is being handled by the Screen Art Picture Corporation of Philadelphia in that territory.
Preparing Five-Reel Comedy

FINE ART PICTURES, INC., of which Murray W. Garsson is president and Charles F. Scherwin secretary and treasurer, will prepare the five-reel super-comedy production, "Up in Mary's Attic," for independent exhibitors of the country. This picture is described as original, clever, and of a type of comedy never before offered the market. It is a five-reeler, built to sparkle, and sparkle it does, if precedent of some of the prints are indications of what is to come, says the Fine Art Pictures.

"Up in Mary's Attic" will receive more concentrated exploitation than any other five-reel comedy ever manufactured, according to executives of the Fine Art organizations. A vast quantity of posters, printed matter and other accessories have already been placed upon order, it is declared, while an extended advertising campaign will be started shortly in the trade press.

The Fine Art Pictures concern has the following statement to make about its forthcoming release:

"Up in Mary's Attic" takes its plot from the story of the beautiful girl in the --- but the story is one of its most scintillating features, and must not be divulged. Suffice it to say that charming Eva Novak and Harry Grabby, the unimitatable comedians, never had more delightful parts in any picture, and never did either of them appear to better advantage than in this special production.

"The super-comedy will be ready for showing within six weeks," he believes. With more than sixty thousand feet of negative to work from, Elmer J. McGovern, who edited "Mickey" and a score of other shining successes, has started to work. He has said that it will require more than a month to whip the feature into best shape.

Educational Gets "Torchy"

Contract Calls for Thirteen Two-Reelers; Release Every Four Weeks

E. W. HAMMONS, vice-president and general manager of Educational Films Corporation, announces that his company has acquired the "Torchy" comedies, produced by Master Films, Inc. The contract calls for thirteen of these two-reel comedies, from the stories by Sewell Ford and starring Johnny Hites, to be supplied in a year. They will be released every four weeks, the first to be available soon after the opening of Educational's new exchanges.

First of these comedies, titled simply as "Torchy," was recently given a pre-release showing at the Strand theatres in Manhattan and Brooklyn, where it was given enthusiastic reception by the fans and won unusual praise from the daily newspaper and trade presses. President Charles C. Burr, of Master Films, Inc., has been able to give Mr. Hamous ample assurance that the other comedies to be produced will be fully up to the same standard.

Johnny Dooley Coming in Five Part Parce

According to announcement from Rabin Pictures, Johnny Dooley, the Ziegfeld Follies star, will soon make his appearance in a five-part farce comedy now being completed under the direction of Jack Schelte, who supervised the shorter length comedies which served to introduce Dooley to the screen.

Practically all of the picture has been filmed and the final scenes will be photographed in Philadelphia when the Ziegfeld Follies Company arrives in that city to play an engagement at the Forrest theatre.

President Charles C. Burr, of Master Films, Inc., has been able to give Mr. Hamous ample assurance that the other comedies to be produced will be fully up to the same standard.

The Educational "Torchy" comedies are expected to have an unusual appeal to the exhibitor not only on account of the excellence of the productions themselves, but because of the widespread popularity of the star. These stories have been appearing in leading magazines and newspapers for several years and already seven volumes of the stories have been published by N. J. Cloade, who is one of the officials of the producing company.

Inter-Ocean Acquires "The Gift Supreme"

Private showings of "The Gift Supreme," recently acquired by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution, have disclosed a production which, in the opinion of many Inter-Ocean officials, is one of the finest pictures it has had the privilege of offering to foreign buyers in many months. The story was adapted to the screen from the "best seller" of the same name by George Altman, England, under the direction of Ollie Sellers.

Southern Theatre Does Well With Serial

From the National theatre in Ybor City comes the spontaneous appreciation of "The Hawk's Trail," starring King Baggott, Grace Darmond and Sheba Mitchell, and produced by Burston Films, Inc. The first episode of the serial was shown for two nights and Monday and Tuesday in advance, and the advance ticket sales were broken, according to the manager by W. E. Drummond, of Special Features Company.

Five-Reel Comedy For B. S. Moss Circuit

"Tittle's Punctured Romance," the five-reel comedy classic, featuring Charlie Chaplin, Marie Dressler and Mabel Normand has been booked for the entire B. S. Moss Circuit of theatres; according to an announcement this week by Gardner Pictures Inc. The week of April 17, it played the Broad- way, N. Y.
Benny and Annette Put on Boxing Bout

Benny Leonard, the lightweight champion, recently met Annette Kellerman at a dinner party on the Coast. "Can you swim?" asked the Diving Venus of the pugilist. Benny deliberated, and after a pause responded, "Some, can you box?" Annette replied she could, but would like to know a little more of the game. A lesson was forthwith arranged, and Benny and Annette put on the gloves. Be it said to Benny's credit, that although Miss Kellerman proved to be a shifty opponent, the only time she landed on Benny was when they both posed for the still camera.

Arrow Six Reeler is Offered to Buyers

The Arrow Film Corporation reports a new six-reel feature called "The Daughter of the Don," which is to be offered to State Right buyers. It deals with the twists between the Californians and the Mexicans. There are said to be some very sizzling scenes in this picture and through it all runs a love story that will have a big appeal to all classes of motion picture fans.

The Arrow reports that when the print of this subject had been in this office only a short time, two big sales are reported.

Burton King Completes Cast for New Film

Madelyn Clare has been signed for the heavy role in "The Hidden Path," Burton King's second independent production. This completes the cast, which includes Grace Darling and Rod La Rocque in the leading roles; William H. Turner, James Cooley, William Corbett and John Nicholson. Lloyd Lorimer wrote the continuity.

"Blind Love" Sold for Northern New York

Aywn Film Corporation, handling the distribution of Gerald F. Bacon's "Blind Love," starring Lee Cotton, has sold the northern New York territory to the Robins Film Corporation, Utica, New York. The Robins Film Corporation will present Bacon's picture as a special attraction.

Jans is Planning Exploitation

NOW that the second of the help the Pictures, Inc., featured in which Olive Tell is the star has been completed and is ready for screening, the company arranges its plans for special exploitation and publicity on the photoframe.

Much is to be made of the title "A Woman's Business," an adaptation of Charles Beach Davis' popular novel "Nothing A Year." Various ways in which this title can be used for advertising and publicity purposes will be carefully explained and outlined in the elaborate campaign book now being prepared.

This campaign book will contain many mutual features that will help the exhibitor. Every effort is being made to get away from the cut and dried ideas that have been used in press books for so long, and to introduce novel and original exploitation ideas that will go a long way toward bringing the business to the box office during the run of this Jans feature.

Special attention will be given to various ways in which the theatre manager can tie up with local merchants, organizations and clubs while many new ideas for the advancement of advertising will be suggested. Newspaper advertising will be prepared that will not only advertise the picture itself but will also advertise the theatre in which it is playing and the balance of the bill to be presented at the same time. In other words, the material presented in the campaign book, "A Woman's Business," will not only help the exhibitor obtain publicity on the picture but on his theatre as well.

In addition to all the publicity and advertising suggestions outlined in the campaign book Jans Pictures, Inc., are making arrangements whereby the home office of the organization will co-operate with exhibitors in the matter of exploitation.

Special Campaign Book for Olive Tell's New Picture

Exhibitors who book this picture through the various independent exchanges, no matter where located, can depend on the heartiest kind of assistance from the home office of the producers in "putting the picture over." Experienced exploitation men will have this matter in charge and the exhibitor may rest assured that the best in the way of exploitation will be made available for them at all times.

Herman B. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., knowing the exhibiting business as he does from actual experience, believes that the arrangements his organization is making to help the exhibitor in putting the company's pictures over will develop into the finest kind of co-operation that has ever been instituted in this regard.

Dodge Sells Oil Production

Capital Film Acquires World's Rights of Texas Oil Field Story

"Witches Gold," the first of a series of pictures made in the atmosphere of and based on the stirring life and dramatic environment of the great Texas oil fields.

The scenes of the picture were personally directed by M. A. Dodge and the entire company was taken from California to the Northern Texas oil fields on two trips to complete the exterior scenes in the oil fields where the two great wells have been brought in during the last year or two and make the setting of the picture realistic.

Mr. Milligan believes that the Capital Film Company has a genuine idea in this picture as the subject of oil is the liveliest fiction topic of today in the United States and the public generally is deeply interested in oil, in fact every other person you meet has some shares in an oil company, he states. Mr. Milligan sees great exploitation possibilities for the production and declares that the picture will make good advertising given it.

Other announcements of interest to the industry are expected from the Capital Film Company within the next two weeks.
Inter-Ocean Plans for 1920

Year's Releasing Schedule Said to Contain Many Big Productions

A WIDE variety of subjects is offered to foreign languages this year by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, according to a statement issued this week from the New York headquarters of the company.

The 1920 list of Inter-Ocean releases is said to embrace a number of "one of a kind" productions which will be offered exclusively for foreign distribution from the ranks of many well-known producers. In this connection, plans have already been made with a number of independent producers for the acquisition of several properties, the titles of which will be announced as soon as details are perfected. While none of the names of the producers in question has been divulged, it is understood that they are well-known producing organizations specializing in the production of high-grade independent attractions.

Competition among Inter-Ocean's 1920 list of releases is the series of Louis Tracy Productions now in the course of production by Gibraltar Pictures, under the direction of William Worthington. The first of this series of pictures, "The Silent Barrier," has already been completed and will be distributed for foreign distribution in foreign markets. The reputation of Louis Tracy as a novelist and a journalist is not confined to America and England; his works have been translated and are known in many lands. Among Mr. Tracy's works which will be transferred to the screen are "The Barrillet Mystery," "The Terms of Surrender," "His Uncle's Luck," "Mike's Blindway," "Diana of the Moorland," "Chaplin's Daughter," "The Wheel of Fortune," "The Red Years," "The Postmaster's Daughter," "The Message," "The Captain of the Kansas" and "Karl Krom." "The Gift Supreme," recently acquired by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution, is another of Inter-Ocean's 1920 releases. The production was made by the McCauley's Photoplays, Inc., for producers of "Beauregard," a picture which has been successfully distributed in foreign territories by the Inter-Ocean sales department following the release of "The Gift Supreme," the producers will film another production, which, under the terms of a contract, will be taken over for foreign distribution by Inter-Ocean. Production of the new picture has already been started, though the name of this release has not yet been decided.

In addition, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation will, in all likelihood, take over a number of other productions for foreign distribution in the course of the year.

The production will be backed up by an extensive advertising and publicity campaign in the domestic and foreign trade press, and foreign trials, to be conducted under the supervision of A. L. Feinman, in charge of Inter-Ocean's advertising and publicity division.

Thirty Reelcraft Exchanges

New Producers and Distributors of Short Subjects in Many Cities

REELCRAFT PICTURES CORPORATION, the recently organized producer and distributor of short subjects, lists thirty of the leading independent exchanges as distributors of the Reelcraft program.

Chaplin Comedies Are Being Well Received

The offices of Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., report continued interest in their four-part Chaplin Comedy—"A Burlesque on Carmen," and the "Champion," "Bitey Elopement," "Work" and "By the Sea."

Victor Kremer, president of the organization, now touring the country in the interest of these pictures, has consummated a deal whereby the Standard Film Corp., of St. Louis, acquired the four short length Chaplins.

Arrangements were also consummated this week between Sid Grauman, manager of Grauman's Theatre in Los Angeles, and Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc. whereby the "Champion," starring Charlie Chaplin, is to be shown for two weeks or more at Grauman's theatre in Los Angeles. The length of the engagement is unprecedented inasmuch as the "Champion" is a two-part comedy.

Movie May Go on Stage

Offer is Received by Owners of "Democracy—the Vision Restored"

ANY inquiries from distributors, state rights buyers, and exhibitors are arriving daily at the offices of the Democracy Photoplay Company regarding the drama "Democracy—the Vision Restored."

"The eagerness of shrewd state rights buyers in many parts of the country for this screen attraction would seem to point to that field as the logical first avenue of release," states Lee Francis Lytarger. "However, I am in no haste to tie up my picture with exclusive contracts in any territory, at least for the present time. Primarily, I claim to have an excellent offer advanced by a leading theatrical manager to present 'Democracy—the Vision Restored' as a regular legitimate theatre attraction in New York and other important cities of the United States."

Our-Door Advertising Started By Pioneer

The first step in the plan recently approved by the Pioneer's General Staff for a country-wide exploitation of its product through a medium of out-door advertising was made last week. Broadway was invaded by two huge illuminated signs, one on "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" with Sheldon Lewis, and the other on "Bubbles" in which Mary Anderson plays the leading role.
Kellerman Film Shows
75-foot Dive
A seventy-five-foot dive from the mast of a full-rigged schooner yacht into the rather tempestuous waters of the Pacific Ocean off the coast of Balboa, California, was the feature, it is stated, of the final week of scene shooting for Annette Kellerman’s newest starring vehicle, which the living Venus is making under the Sol Lesser banner.

The Kellerman picture, which is the star’s first modern comedy-drama, has been sixteen weeks in the filming and has already run up a cost-sheet in excess of $225,000, it is asserted.

Albert Capellani Has Started Production
Albert Capellani has started on his first Cosmopolitan production, “The Inside of Mr. Cup,” by Winston Churchill. The cast consists of W. P. Carleton, David Torrence, Jack Bohn, Richard Carlisle, Marigaret Clayton, and Margaret Sodions. Dan Pennell is Capellani’s assistant, and Al Ziegler is the cameraman of Balboa Beach, California, scenes are being taken at the Cosmopolitan studio, in 127th street and Second avenue, while lesser interiors are filmed at the studio in West 125th street.

Director Edwards Dies
While on Vacation
A telegram received last Wednesday by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced the death in Honolulu, Hawaii, of Walter Edwards, for the past three years a director of Paramount Artcraft pictures. The message was very brief and omitted all details as to the cause. Mr. Edwards was on a vacation on the island.

David Kirkland Sails for Europe May 15
Another member of the motion picture profession joined the transcontinental movement yesterday when David Kirkland, director for Constance Talmadge in the John-Emerson-Anita Loos comedies, anounced that he will sail to Europe on May 15th.

“School Days” is Larry Remon’s newest Vitagraph comedy

Charlotte Merriam in
“The Honey Bee”
Charlotte Merriam is an actress of seventeen who is seen in the vivacious role of “Blondie” in “The Honey Bee,” with Mme. Marguerite Sylva. During her two years in the motion picture industry she has made an enviable reputation for herself in comedy parts. However, Miss Merriam has a decided preference for dramatic work and is working toward that end.

“The Silver Horde” is Booked for Capitol
Rex Beck’s latest, and, according to all reports, his greatest production, will have its first showing in New York at the Capitol theatre, where it has been booked for the week beginning May 9.

The success of the production at a number of pre-release presentations in large western theatres justifies the faith, it is stated, which the Goldwyn executives manifested in “The Silver Horde,” by placing it in the class of specials.

The picture is in seven reels that unfold a dramatic story in an Alaskan setting.

Forestry Department
Praises Picture
To supplement the many expressions of exhibition approval voiced about “Jack to God’s Country,” the Carwood-Carver attraction distributed by First National Exhibitors’ Circuit, the Canadian Department of Interior Forestry has bestowed upon the producers warm words of thanks.

The instance in the picture which accounts for the attention of the Branch of Forestry was at a point where a member of the Canadian police has trapped an outlaw at the latter’s fire-side in the Canadian woods.

“Slam Bang Jim”
Brings Box Office Returns
A heavy volume of business continues to come in on the latest American comedy-drama starring William Russell and a strong supporting cast put it over with great success and the producers report that this picture is bringing good prices and long runs.

Elmo Lincoln Coming
In New Serial
A new serial proposed for Elmo
Lincoln, the star in “Elmo the Mighty” and “Elmo the Fearless,” the two Universal serials, will be .called “The Lightning’s Eye.” The story and scenario are by Philip Hubbard and A. H. Gooden.

Harry Ham, foreign representative for Marshall Neilan.

Neilan Party to Work
During Ocean Voyage
Harry Ham, Marshall Neilan’s foreign representative, has just arived in London to make advance arrangements for the production of European subjects made under Mr. Neilan’s direction. Passage has been engaged for an entire producing unit which will accompany Mr. Neilan abroad, and a large part of the boat will be reserved for the exclusive use of the film people. It is stated. During the trip the company will be busy going over the scripts of the pictures to be staged abroad, and much of the preliminary work in connection with the actual shooting of scenes will be attended to meanwhile. It is planned.

Activities at the Neilan studio in Hollywood are being speeded up so that a third production following “Don’t Ever Marry” will be completed before he leaves.

Morey Made Manager for
Robertson-Cole
M. F. Morey, known as one of the most capable executives and as one of the best salesmen in the motion picture industry in New England, has just been appointed manager of the Boston exchange for Robertson-Cole to succeed E. F. Knaurke, resigned.

Howe is directing "Temp Orders," featuring Billy Engel and Jessie Fox, and Fred Fishback has just finished making a comedy featuring Jimmy Absolute which will be released under the title of "A Movie Hero.

INCE STUDIOS

A WESTERN story which gives Emil Bencent the name part in "The Boss of the Big Peninsula" was put in this week under the direction of Fred Niblo. Many of the scenes will be laid on the California coast, number of night shots of camp life.

The title for the five special production featuring Lloyd Hughes, originally "Wheelbarrow Webber," has been changed to "Homemde Folk," and is now ready for release. Rowland Lee, who has appeared in several Thomas H. Ince and J. Parker Read productions has been selected for the featured role in a forthcoming five special production. Definite title for this film has not been selected. The direction will be in charge of John Griffith Wray. Lee will be accompanied by playing opposite Emil Bencet in "The Woman in the Suitcase.

Lewis Stone and Lloyd Hughes have been cast for leading parts in the first of a series of Louis Joseph Vance stories, "Brave Revet," to be filmed by Thomas H. Ince. This story, laid in New York settings is now being scene-rowed by Earle Reed.

Douglas Maclean and Davis May are now working in "The Yavana Villas," adapted from the Hershall S. Hall short story of the same name. Agnes Christine Johnson wrote the continuity for this farm life comedy. The title role is derived from a breed of flaxly chicken which will be used in the picture.

John H. Ince, scenario editor of the Ince Studios, was at San Diego this week to witness the premier performance of his newest stage actor, "Old Johnny," which was produced at the Strand theatre in that city.

GARSON

FROM the return of Harry Garson, Clara Kimball Young and Herbert Somborn, from a business trip to Chicago, preparations were made for the filming of the contract of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero play, "Mid Channel," at the Garson studios. The direction of this Harry Garson production will be taken by Mr. Garson, and the cast to support Miss Young now selected includes Percy Gomez, as leading man; Bertram Grassby, heavy; Edward M. Kimball, Mrs. Katherine Griffin, Eileen Robinson and Helen Sullivan. The name for the play is derived from the strip in the middle of the English channel which is always rough, and Pinero likens it to a period in the lives of many married couples when they are between the ages of thirty-five and forty-five. At that period the rough portion of married life. The play itself was an English society drama, and on the American stage it served as the starring vehicle for Ethel Barrymore.

Particular significance is attached to the booking of the Garson production, "The Soul of Sassenach," which has been booked by Sid Grun-

F. P. LASKY

ETROM the Famous Players-Lasky studios comes the announcement of the renewal of the contract of Lila Lee, the entire cast for Tom Geraghty as scenario writer, Frank Capra, as character actor, and the selection of Victor Daniels as a leading woman for Roscoe Arbuckle.

According to the announcement, Lila Lee is to continue in the class of roles she has been playing for the past several months, and similar to the one she is now taking in the William D. Taylor production of "The Boy." It is understood the contract covers that original once made with this young actress.

Viora Daniels has been with Famous Players-Lasky for the past eight months playing minor parts of importance with the Lasky unit, and her appearance opposite Roscoe Arbuckle in the screen version of "The Life of the Party," gives her her first leading woman role on the screen. Joseph Henden is to direct this from a script prepared by Walter Woods. The Roscoe Arbuckle picture will be released as a Paramount-Artcraft release.

Tom Geraghty is now writing his first scenario for Paramount-Artcraft under his new engagement which will be, "Burglar Proof" for Bryant Washburn, and will be made immediately following the filming of "A Full House." Fred Jackson play now in production with Washburn. Geraghty came west for Famous Players-Lasky about three years ago, and after a period of one year with that company did free-lancing. For the past six months Geraghty has been with Douglas Fairbanks, his most recent release being, "When the Clouds Roll By.

Frank Capra, who has been with Douglas Fairbanks for the past two years, is to make his re-nowned appearance with the Famous Players-Lasky screen, in the Roscoe Arbuckle subject, "The Life of the Party."

William C. de Mille has begun the filming of "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," with Tom Meighin in the title role. Meighin arrived in Los Angeles late last week from New York after playing in the film version of "Civilian Clothes." The story, by Leonard Merritt, has been prepped for the screen by Olga Printzlauf.

Frank B. Chamberlain, general service manager of Famous Players-Lasky, has been on the coast for the studio for the past several days after making a tour of the Intermountain exchange. He was accompanied by Mrs. Chamberlain.

It has been definitely decided that William D. Taylor will direct following the filming of "The Boy," which Taylor is now working on, will be the screen version for "The Famous Players-Lasky venture in notable English stories by the author known as Pan. No cast for this film has been selected to this time.

VITAGRAPH

ONE of the most spectacular thrillers ever made on the west coast for a film that was taken last week when William Duncan destroyed a complete bridge over a 200-foot span across the canyon adjoining the Vitagraph studio's plant. This will be used in the Duncan serial, "The Silent Watchman." The bridge was first wholly demolished by dynamite, and caught fire, making a huge conflagration. Early Williams, for Chester Bennett and Camran Jack MacKenzie have spent a week searching for locations for this star's new story, script for which is now being prepared by J. Grubb Alexander. K. N. Bradford is now writing continuity for the script. James Oliver Curwood super feature to be made by Vitagraph, which will be made under the direction of David Smith. Many of the scenes for this will be taken at Portland, Oregon, and Miles Welch will play the leading role.

Director Tom Terriss and Company are back from Palm Springs for a two week stay at the studio to make interior scenes for, "The Girl From the Sky," an adaptation from the Government Morris story, "Trumpton Island." As soon as interiors are completed the company will go to Catalina Islands for a stay of two weeks. Wallace MacDonald and Marguerite de la More are the principals.

"The Veiled Woman" serial company, under the direction of Webster Callision, are working at Balboa, California. Antonio Moreno is the featured player of this unit, and Pauline Curley is playing opposite. "The Hidden Danger" serial unit with Joe Ryan and Jean Page, are working on location at Chatsworth. Joe Rock, who has played "straight" in two recent comedies made, has again returned to his eccentrie make-up for the next Big V Comedy which is being directed by Grover Jones. "Chick" Reiner is directing Earl Montgomery who takes the part of a plumber's helper in the comedy being made; and Jesse Robins has just finished a burlesque cowboy comedy with Jimmy Au-crey.

METRO

Plans providing for the additional expenditure of $250,000 for buildings and equipment at the Metro West Coast studios have been given the approval of Marcus Loew, and the work of building is to commence shortly.

The first improvement at the studios to be started will be that of the erection of a new building to be occupied exclusively by the scenarist staff. This will be apart from other buildings, and adjoining will be a garden enclosed and separated entirely from the other part of the studio.

Eliot J. Clavson, late continuity writer for Goldwyn following several years with other west coast companies, has been made a member of the Metro scenario department.

The version screen of "The Mating of William Ash," a play by Mrs. Humphrey Ward, which was the starting vehicle for Grace George, is being prepared for Metro by Percy Heath, who has just written the script for "Heed and Shoulders," the Viola Dana subject.

The Best Lytlet Company has returned to the Metro studio for interior scenes for "The Temple of Dawn," following two weeks work on East India location scenes made of Hollywood. Shure of the image of Buddha was the setting used this week by the Lytlet Company. The image is considered a very remarkable bit of sculpture work, and by experts is considered authentic.

Reiner and assistant have gone to San Francisco to select locations for scenes of the Drury Lane melodrama, "Hearts Are Trumps," and the production work is to be started shortly.

GOLDWYN

The Goldwyn studio this week saw the beginning of two new productions. Tom Moore playing in "Officer Cee" with a cast that has Jeanie Calhoun as lead, Pricilla Roman and Harvey Kirkland, as captain of police. The other sub-theme put in production is "Rose Aviva," starring Maehel Norgaard under the direction of Victor Schertzinger. The players to support Miss Normand are Hugh Thompson, Doris Pavan, Tully Marshall, Eugene Besserer, Buster Tree and Pearl Curran.

Director Paul Scardon is continuing on the filming of "Milestones," and to his already big cast has been added Carolee Kirkland, George Swain and Jack Dawnean.

The Pauline Frederick production, "Madame X," directed by Frank Lloyd, has been finished and after a short vacation the star will begin work on another story which will be the last for her under the present contract. Rumors have it that Miss Frederick has contracted with Fox, National, but no authentic statement has been made.

The first scene for the Mary Roberts Kinscher picture, "Euphrates Builders," have been shot by Director E. Mason Hopper, and it is expected Al Green will next week begin the filming of another Jack Pickford subject.

Director Clarence Badger continues the filming of the Will Rogers film, "Vee Lloyd."

CHRISTIE

At Christie and Scott Sidney, who were in charge of the direction of the Chisholm serial release, "The Smart Alec," have completed the filming of this picture, and Director Sidney is now giving his attention to the editing. Manager A. S. Kirkpatrick, of Robertson Cole, was given a preview of the subject during his short stay in Los Angeles this week. At this time the film was in eight reels.

Work has been started on the next two reel Christie Comedy which will mark the return of Ray Fuller after a vacation of two months. Jimmy Harrison is to play the opposite lead, and other principals are Charlotte Marian and Edly Barry. William Beaudine, who directed the filming of "Petty Coats and Pants," which is believed the greatest laugh maker from the Christie plant, is in charge of making this new picture.

BRUNTON

The mammoth new dark stage at the Brunton studio is nearing completion, and is shortly to be ready for Occupancy May 1st.

WHAT IT IS—

Consists of two large rooms. One, 70 x 125; other, 62 x 82.

No post or obstruction in either room. Both rooms may be thrown together if desired.

Height of rooms varies from 20 to 30 feet. There is also a large basement with 9 foot ceiling.

Complete equipment of the most modern type is being installed. Workshops, offices, etc., in abundance.

christened. This gigantic building, the largest of its kind in the world, has a clear stage area 120 feet by 120 feet in size, giving a total of 37,500 square feet, with thirty feet to the coves. Another improvement now undertaken is the extension of larger water mains, eight inch pipe being laid to all portions of the grounds. A large brick incinerator is being constructed, and will serve to destroy the waste matter of the big plants.

Robert Britton this week decided that the big studio should have a manager, and when a black and two white hands were requisitioned for pictures, he purchased them as a nucleus for the zoo.

Distant Farmer, and Director Cain Campbell are back from the high California mountains, where snow scenes for "Big Happiness," the Robertson-Coole pictures, were filmed.

Allen Dewey, of Mayflower, has gone to the National Forest reserve in Sutter County to take the job that will keep the continuity for the sixth and last production for this organization.

Here and There

The K & R Motion Picture Company, directed by George Kirchbauer, is now working at the Hurstley studio producing "Jack Randall, U. S. S. S.", Allyn Russell and Betty Lindley will be principals in this film version by Capt. Harry de Windt.

Flannery Vidor, last in "The Other Half" and "The Family Honor," will be seen in King Vidor's second independent production for release through First National Exhibitors Circuit, "The Jack Knife Man," by Rille Parker Butler, author of "Pigs Is Pigs."

Marie Walcamp Back from Orient Trip

After a six months' tour in the Orient, taking scenes for a new Universal serial, "The Dragon's Net," Marie Walcamp and her company have reached San Francisco safely. She was met in person by Carl Luecke, president of Universal, who steamed out the harbor as guest of the Collector of the Port, and boarded the Japanese steamship Tenyo Maru, bearing the Walcamp party, long before it docked.

"The Star's the Thing" Kane

PICTURES of prominent persons who have won fame and fortune in any position in life appearing in cinematography, or the press are viewed with a certain interest. The counterfiet presentations of Charles M. Schwab, John D. Rockefeller Jr., John D. Rockefeller Sr., Thomas A. Edison, Henry Ford, Victor Herbert, Charles Dana Gibson, and others put in commerce, art, music and social life command attention whenever they appear. Patriotism and ambition evoke applause when the names of the earth, warriors and statesmen pass in review before the camera.

But the deeds of all these, which make them famous, are performed out of view of the public. Great business deals which make a millionaire, mighty inventions which make an Edison among the immortals, a lifetime in the service of humanity shining down for an Addams, the world becomes cognizant of through results not from seeing these great feats in the doing, not from taking part in the accomplishment. The printed page, the spoken word are the means which make these personalities famous, and when these publicized portraits, the short new glimpses in the cinema, the public's brush endeavor to vivify their personalities. One doubts if they are folks just like ourselves. They are not 'camera wise,' and cannot live the imagination.

How faint are these impressions of individually compared with the actual through cinematography. How inadequate is printer's ink and fleeting glimpses now and then in photographs to implant the impression, the character, the individuality when weighed against constant appearance by trained artists in today's great Forum of Personality—the motion picture!

A created work in this art form is restricted to itself. There cannot be any relation between the two. They are not inter-dependent. Each is complete. Neither supplements the other. One cannot help the other. The only connecting link is individual, a person, a live, animate being.

Now, suppose this connecting link to be an author. He cannot compete with the player in the personal character. How remote is his chance to impress his individuality compared with that of the interpreter of his works. The author is a name. He does not appear. Memory does not hold him as a constant factor, but the recurrences, the iterations, the endless stringing of the imagination by the actual sight of the favorite player implanting him in the mind of the cinemagoer.

By stars are meant those created by the public. They are the only kind that draw persons, irrespective of the plays in which they appear, to the theatre, viewing their pictures. There can be no other kind.

To my mind Charles Ray is the greatest example of the screen-made star. He has been more than seven years in the films getting to his present position. His training has been slow and arduous. Full, rich and complete. Instructed by the public to see him has made him a star.

Fairbanks Launches a "Desert Yacht"

ONE of the strangest sights that ever east a shadow over the Arizona desert was that introduced to that country some time ago when Douglas Fairbanks and a full crew of 75 people arrived near Polacca to film scenes in his next picture "The Madonna," which will be released by United Artists Corporation. It was the spectacle of a sea-going yacht, all rigged out and ready to break the billowy waves, so to speak. The yacht had been built in exact replica to a palatial and luxurious sailboat. A huge truck frame was utilized and the yacht was built solidly thereon. When it wended its way across the desert, the men in the distance looked like ocean waves, the illusion was almost complete, for the blending of colors with the yacht in the foreground, lent a vivid impression of the moving ocean transferred to the dryest spot in America.

This strange craft plays an important part in the plot of "The Mollycoddle.

The new Capitol theatre being erected at Davenport, Iowa
Capitol, of Davenport, Will Set New Mark for 60,000 City

Rapp & Rapp are the Architects for this Latest Enterprise of the Blanchard Amusement Company

It is doubtful if another city of 60,000 population in the United States can boast of such an achievement in the line of theatre building as that which is about to be completed at Davenport, Iowa, through the co-operation of H. C. Kahl, Davenport capitalist, and The Blanchard Amusement Co., Inc.

The new Capitol theatre, now being erected and which is to be completed by October 1, is to be positively the last word in theatre construction and will stand out as an enduring monument to civic pride, home loyalty and far-sightedness.

Located in the heart of the business district at the corner of Third and Ripley streets, having a frontage of 175 feet on Third street and a depth of 150 feet on Ripley, it constitutes a notable contribution to Davenport's business growth.

The theatre is a part of a ten-story office building, the total cost of which will be $1,800,000. The net cost of the theatre, it is estimated, will be $600,000, figured on a basis of $200,000 for the ground and $300,000 for the building. The cost of the office building is estimated at $1,120,000.

Work on the new building is now well under way. Ground was broken in September, 1919. Today all the steel is in place, the brick work in the rear is finished and the white terra cotta, which is to cover the entire building, is being put on. The exterior of the building is ornate and most pleasing to the eye.

It is expected that it will be completed about October 1.

The architects are C. W. and George L. Rapp, Chicago, and they have apparently left nothing out of their plans that might in any way contribute to the utility or beauty of the theatre or the luxury of the appointments.

The theatre is entered through an outer lobby of great height, splendidly illuminated with crystal fixtures. The side walls are paneled to a height of ten feet with beautiful imported marble, above which is a pilaster and column treatment in French Caen stone extremely effective in its proportion and color.

Passing into the inner lobby, stairs on either side rise to the balcony foyer, and one is here impressed by the height and spaciousness increased by the colonnade above, opening to the mezzanine foyer.

Caen stone walls are contrasted with the dull green border of the art marble floor, the warm grey of the marble stairs and the dull gold in which the pilasters and cornices above are brought out. Through arched openings on both sides, one descends to the women's and men's retiring rooms, the former in late French Renaissance and the latter with a heavy beamed ceiling, red tile floor, English style. Here one also finds the nursery equipped as a play room, with a maid in attendance, the convenience of which is obvious.

The inner lobby opens into the beautiful lower foyer serving the lower floor. Since the axis of the auditorium is at right angles to that of the lobbies, this broad foyer sweeps away into a grand curve, and its damask panels, mirrored pilasters and harmonious lamps lend a pleasing and elegant effect. This is enhanced by the French windows through which one catches glimpses of the lower floor auditorium.

From the inner lobby one ascends to the mezzanine foyer or the grand promenade, the architecture of which is adapted from two of the most famous playhouses in Europe, erected in the seventeenth century and still regarded as architectural gems for their beauty and proportion.

The effect of a luxurious dressing room is here achieved with its marble fireplace, its brocaded divans and chairs, its south wall alternated with French beveled mirrors and silk damask panels and its northwest made up of arched openings looking out upon the house. Through these openings an excellent view of the splendid dome in the under side of the balcony is obtained.

The dome is illuminated by concealed reflectors and colored lamps at its base, so that, seated in the grand promenade, one can watch the play of colors on the ornamented surfaces of the dome, colors ranging from deep purple to delicate rose soft amber. This dome gives a sense of spaciousness and height to the portion of the main floor beneath the balcony that is often lacking and a sense of width and openness to the promenade.

The walls of the auditorium under the Music Will Be Strong Feature At New Capitol

Music is to be one of the many big features at the new Capitol Theatre, Davenport, Iowa, the formal opening of which is to take place about October 3. As a matter of fact it is the desire of the owners that everything possible be done to make the programs there perfect works of art.

In keeping with this policy a contract has been awarded for the finest make of pipe organ which will be installed at a cost of $60,000. Messrs. Kahl and Blanchard made a long and careful investigation and sought the counsel of the best organ experts in the country before placing their order. As a result they made a contract for one of the largest organs in the United States and it is said that there are none anywhere that are more complete or that have a better quality of tone.

It will take five freight cars to transport the organ from the factory to Davenport. There are 5,693 speaking tubes, 209 stops, four manuals, great, swell, orchestral and solo organs and the pipes range in size from that of a lead pencil to the lowest bass of 39 feet. The largest pipe has a diameter of ten inches.

The contract calls for four weeks' time in which to make the installation. It will require two weeks for tuning. During this time no one, not even workmen not engaged in tuning, will be permitted in the building.

A corps of experts will accompany the organ from the factory in Hagerstown, Md. M. P. Moller, head of the concern that makes these organs and one of the world's foremost manufacturers of pipe organs, will have personal charge of the installation. After the organ is installed one of the finest artists in the country will be engaged to play it.

Speaking of the musical features of the Capitol theatre a member of the Blanchard Amusement Company said:

"We are planning other big things in a musical way for the Capitol, and will shortly make an announcement which will bring great pleasure to all music lovers."
The Fabrikoid Process adds beauty and long life to fabrics, some heavy and rugged, others dainty as linen—all pliable, scuff-proof, stain-proof and water-proof.

In the finest moving picture theatres — Fabrikoid Upholstery

It is ideal from the viewpoint of both owner and audience.

Fabrikoid is made in styles and colors to conform to almost any decorative motif. Its Delft blue or its soft gray, for instance, are in great favor with interior decorators. Then there are browns, greens, maroons.

And Fabrikoid always retains its original charm of grain and color, for it does not fade or stain and can be washed as you would clean woodwork.

Beside being perfectly germ-proof, it is thoroughly comfortable; it never gets soggy or sticky.

Insist on Fabrikoid in your new theatre, or if you plan to re-upholster your present house.

Samples showing different styles and colors will be sent upon request.

Buffalo Boasts Attractive House In 1200 Seat “Capitol”

South Park Amusement Company Sets Fast Pace for Neighborhood Houses

ONE of the most attractive neighborhood houses in Buffalo is the new Capitol theatre, recently opened by the South Park Amusement company on Triangle street, near South Park avenue. The delightfully attractive and cozy house represents an outlay of $125,000. The house has a seating capacity of 1,200, all on one floor. George Hall, George Hanny and William H. Fitzpatrick, Jr., are the principals in the operating company. Messrs. Hall and Hanny also own and operate the Maxine theatre in Seneca street, which they have redecorated and enlarged 400 seats.

Henry L. Spann, 606 Mutual Life building, was the architect of the structure and he has turned out a model neighborhood theatre for the exclusive presentation of motion pictures. Joseph Varga, decorator, has given his best to the Capitol and the result is most striking. The Linwood Construction Company built the structure.

The outside dimensions of the Capitol are go by 150 feet and the inside about 58 by 140 feet. The theatre is built of red tapestry brick with white terra cotta trimmings. The front is one of the most attractive in the city. At each side of the entrance are two large, white terra cotta-trimmed frames for the showing of the sheets on the current and coming attractions and smaller frames are placed in the pillars between the doors where stills may be shown.

A large porte cochere hangs out from the theatre and over the entrance with alternating large and small marine drop lights around the edge. Scroll work runs around the top of the marque and the words, “Capitol Theatre” are built into the front and electrically lighted. An attractive hanging arc is placed on each side of the front and street lights adorn the edge of the sidewalk in front of the Capitol. Directly over the porte cochere is a large copper beaded glass window, trimmed with a gold border. All of the border with “Capitol Theatre” worked in colors. Four doors lead into the lobby.

Not much space is used for lobby purposes, the architect undoubtedly wishing to get all the room possible into the theatre proper. The lobby is about 30 by 40 feet and is decorated with attractive tapestries and soft gold trim. The walls of the lobby are made of marble with dark marble borders. The ticket office is to the left of the lobby going in and is constructed of glass and marble and includes an automatic ticket selling machine.

The interior of the house presents a most inviting appearance. All of the leather upholstered seats are on one floor. Usco rubber flooring is used and both direct and indirect lighting is available. Massive old gold electric clusters hang from the ceiling and quaint brass side lights of French design are placed at intervals along the side walls. The walls are of bronze color, trimmed with old gold borders and terra cotta cornices. The stage is fairly large, the size of the picture being 128 and 186 inches. The distance of throw is 108 feet and the angle of projection practically straight. A Fred Burnham screen is used. At each side of the stage are two large marble trimmed openings in which beautiful oil paintings changed frequently, are placed and strikingly lighted by indirect illumination.

The projection room is located in the mezzanine directly over the entrance to the theatre. It is 10 by 25 feet and has two Simplex machines and a spotlight in its very complete equipment. The room is well ventilated and there is lots of breathing space.

Direct and indirect heating systems are used and the forced ventilating system brings in 25,000 cubic feet of fresh air a minute. Ladies and gentlemen’s rest rooms are located on the same side of the front of the house and distill from the floor and are built into the walls at the front of the theatre.

On the right corner of the Capitol is a large colored electric sign with the name of the theatre in flowing incandescent bulbs. This sign is 35 feet in length and can be seen for many miles up and down Triangle street.

A ten-piece orchestra, under the direction of Eric Hurder, furnishes the musical accompaniment for the picture entertainments presented at the Capitol and soloists are presented from time to time.

The Capitol is in the center of one of the fastest growing sections of the city, a district so far removed from the Buffalo downtown that a neighborhood motion picture theatre solves the amusement problem for most of the residents in the vicinity. The theatre brings to them, shortly after first run, all the big productions shown uptown and which can only be seen by taking a long trolley ride and which even by auto consumes quite a period. Under this situation the Capitol should enjoy unusual prosperity. The house is in excellent hands, both Messrs. Hall and Hanny being veterans in the film exhibiting game, having established the Maxine theatre in Seneca street when the industry was in its prime. They are familiar with every phase of the business and this experience will be of decided advantage in meeting the problems which may come up at the Capitol from time to time. The Maxine has been taken into one of the successful houses of the city and the Capitol undoubtedly will also enjoy great popularity in the coming months.

Schwartz, the proprietor, held a term lease on the ground and was doing a very satisfactory business and was reluctant to sell, but the bank needed the ground in connection with what they owned in order to erect the building they had in view, and their offer to Mr. Schwartz was too tempting for him to pass by. A large force of workmen started to dismantle the building the first of the week, and, as stated above, it is now a memory of the past.

Principals: EVERETT MELBOURNE PORTER—General Manager, Precision Machine Company—runs Simplex factory—wields a wicked cue—undisputed Kelly Pool Champion of the projector industry. Leaves nothing in his friends’ pockets but the lining. His last appearance was with the Munnbikin Company’s masterpiece, “THE MILLION DOLLAR CONTRACT.”

W. C. FRANCKE, at desk in adjoining office dashing off stories of Simplex achievements—sleeves rolled up—arms spattered with ink up to elbows—smile of pleasure shining through ink-smeared features—also barked on right and left by stogie bats defunct and unshattering.

Great commotion in outer offices causes everyone to run toward passenger elevator shaft from which loud crackle are sounding—streaming of cables are heard—crowd breathlessly awaits the coming up of tortured elevator.

Door of elevator opens wide! H. H. Cudmore, assisted by elevator man in rear, squeezes through opening. Elevator released of about half weight shoots two feet upward.

H. H. CUDMORE—Heavy villain—General Manager, Argus Enterprises—Cleveland—Fighting weight something under 450 pounds in stockinged feet—with sheets on head. Favorite indoor sport is sitting down—taxi riding and sitting down. Mr. Cudmore has been playing leads in that dazzling melodrama, “THE CRYSTAL BEAD OR WHY DON’T I CHECK ADAPTER.”

WM. C. FRANCKE, Publicity Hound Precision Machine Co.—Spiritual, Medical and Kelly Pool advisor to E. M. Porter—Late Editor “Boston Bean Pot”—Press Agent for Greenwich Village—and recently done “his in "The Pirates' Den."

Cudmore falls back and Cudmore advances toward executive offices preceded by office boy two feet in advance with red flag. Stenographers and office attendants make frantic efforts to receive typewriters, adding machines and office fixtures that are shaken from their fastenings as Cudmore marches by.

Cudmore enters office of E. M. Porter, who hurriedly pushes oak table out for him to sit on. W. C. Francke is now shown attempting to pacify irate building superintendent who protests damage done to the elevator and insists that all heavy shipments be brought up on freight elevator—Francke tenders Pittsburgh stogie to superintendent, who places same in nearby cuspidor. Damage to elevator is estimated and it is deemed advisable to install a new one.

Francke casually walks into executive office in time to hear Cudmore challenge Porter to championship Kelly Pool game. Francke, as Porter’s trainer and manager, draws up Articles of Agreement on cover of stogie box.

SCENE II

Porter and Francke dressed for street go down passenger elevator number two and wait at freight entrance for Cudmore.

SCENE III

Thirty-fourth Street, in front of Simplex Factory—Snow and ice piled up—Car tracks frozen under layers of ice—Porter, Cudmore and Francke frantically signal to passing taxi drivers who often look at Cudmore and suggest motor trucks as conveyance for party. Francke finally convinces a weak-minded chauffeur that the robust, distinguished gentleman is a well-known ex-President.

balcony are treated with silk panels, on which are painted the figures of dancing girls. These are effectively illuminated by concealed lights in back of exquisitely colored draperies festooned at the sides and above. Above the balcony the side walls become three arches penetrations with medallions and lunettes adorned with mural paintings.

The main ceiling and that under the balcony are all illuminated with concealed coves and the surrounding walls, arches over proscenium box recesses and curves of the proscenium arch are perforated and have concealed colored lights behind them.

Perhaps the most striking feature of the house is the arrangement of orchestra and stage. The building is so designed as to permit the being converted into a legitimate theatre with a full stage at any time in the future, and advantage of this fact has been taken in the recessing of most of the orchestra behind the proscenium arch line, and the development of a curved colonnade with surmounting dome on the stage.

Between the columns one looks up at fine Italian scenes softly lighted from above the dome, the screen in the center being covered with warm silk hangings appliqued with silver. These curtains pull slowly apart and the picture projected comes out in full brilliancy on the screen. Orchestra and soloist may be illuminated with changing colors, may be in cold moonlight or warm red or soft rose, thrown from above the dome.

The lighting effects will have a wide range of brilliancy and color and may be varied to suit the feeling of the production.

The ventilation is thoroughly modern and provides for a cooling system which will, in the heat of summer, always give a temperature of 70 degrees.

The theatre will have a seating capacity of 2,500. A symphony orchestra of thirty pieces will be one of the many features. (The pipe organ is described in another article.)

The Capitol theatre, as already stated, is in the heart of the business section of Davenport and is located directly across the street from the Columbia and Opiuchm Circuit theatre. The Capitol will be operated by the Blanchard Amusement Company and J. H. Blanchard is managing director. The theatre will be devoted to motion pictures exclusively. It will be equipped with three concert stages—two of which are to be used for soloists if Alibi noted—porters and the other for dance teams. This theatre is but another evidence of the progressiveness of J. H. Blanchard who does little talking but who accomplishes big things in the amusement business.

H. C. Kahl, a Davenport capitalist, is the builder and owner of the property. He has had but one thought in the matter. It is this. Everything entering the building must be the finest and best that money and brains can produce.

him that looking alley is in next room—Porter removes hat, coat and vest, while Francke advises him to remove everything except collar and tie. The porter compromise by taking off shoes and putting hat on.

Porter receives final instructions from Manager Francke—it is secretly arranged by Porter and Francke that if indications show Cudmore winning, Francke is to sneak up behind him and strike him violently on head three times with expander, thereby driving Porter the game on a "strike-out." Colored attendant racks balls and quickly steps back and away from table after seeing look of determination in Cudmore's eyes. Francke makes final and careful examination of contestant's hands for hidden horseshoes or brass knuckles. Cudmore momentarily suggests that game be straight pool instead of "Kelly"—Porter and Francke go into executive session behind radiatos and agree that straight pool would be acceptable if Cudmore agrees to play straight. Porter wins toss-up for the "break."

Cudmore tears off three difficult shots in succession—Porter loses courage—cleeched by Francke, who frames up with elevator man to make Cudmore walk downstairs if he wins. Porter prepares to run. Sometimes agitated, Francke bIDS Francke two bits that Porter cannot run up seven balls in succession—Francke, with seven cents in his pocket, accepts bet—Porter wins. Francke calls for three cheers for Porter. Colorfully misunderstands, and brings Porter three beers. Cudmore drinks all three. Francke wipes off his lips and reproaches how good the beer tasted. Cudmore shoots and misses—Porter runs up five more—Francke—Porter faction elated—Cudmore disgusted—claims nail in his shoe bothers his shooting. Alibi noted—Francke suggests removing foot to avoid further contact with nail.

Porter still winning—Cudmore mops brow with table cloth from Park Ave. Hotel, which he pulls out of pistol pocket—complains of extreme heat—says he does better in outdoor shooting. Alibi noted. Porter still winning. Cudmore chews pain under vest covering large area of his front upholstery—Alibi noted.

Porter misses easy shot—Francke faints with pool rack around neck. Cudmore now agitated so that he shoots with bridge say he will "clean up." Colored attendant tells him where brooms and mops are kept—Francke revives and pushes nine of Cudmore's points back on wire—Porter's shooting cleans up table—Cudmore offers to let Francke shoot for him, at which Porter gets disgusted and the game is declared won by Porter, 47-3.

ALABAMA

Gadsden—A contract has been awarded to Mr. W. H. Maybou for the reconstruction of the Alamo Theatre. The building is to be completely remodeled and an extension of thirty feet to be added. Mr. Wood is manager of this theatre.

ARKANSAS

Haleville—W. L. Mosley and E. B. Brewer have started the construction of a new theatre in this town. The house is expected to be ready for use by the first of June.

CALIFORNIA

Los Angeles—Mr. Yunker, owner of the building on Stephenson Avenue, on which the Ivy Theatre is located, has decided to double present seating capacity of this house. It is understood that work required for this change will be commenced within the next few weeks. The Ivy at present has a seating capacity of 400, and when remodeled will comfortably seat 800.

Los Angeles—The Pasadena Theatre Company is to erect a $150,000 theatre on North Raymond Avenue, opposite Library Park. The new house will be known as the Raymond.

Napa—The Loew theatrical interests are negotiating for property on Main Street. It is reported that a $100,000 theatre is to be erected on the land.

San Pedro—Work has commenced on the foundation for the new $225,000 theatre to be erected on Sixth Street near Center. The plans drawn up by Archtects Pennel and Smith call for an auditorium seating 1,500 people with rest rooms, nursery, smoking room and store rooms.

San Francisco—An $85,000 theatre will be erected soon on Third Street near Minna Street. A. W. Burgeen is the architect. O. D. Baldwin is the owner. The house will have a seating capacity of 1,800.

Selma—A. B. Byrnon is purchasing material for the new airdrome and amusement park which the city will erect, the work commencing about May 1st.

Torrance—The contract for the proposed Auditorium theatre has been let to Reeve and Reeve. Excavation work will start at once. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 700 and will be equipped for both pictures and vaudeville.

CONNECTICUT

Ansonia—The building of the Ansonia Shoe Company is being torn down, preparatory to the erection of a motion picture theatre.

Derby—J. Hoffman of Derby Amusement Co. and John R. Shields, manager of Sterling Theatre, announce that work will soon be started on a new theatre in Derby. The new house will be erected on the site of the present Sterling Theatre.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Washington—It is reported that Tom Moore, owner of the Grand and Rialto Theatres in Washington, is to build a new house after his own design. The location has not been announced as yet.

ILLINOIS

Carlinville—The work of excavating for the new theatre on West Main Street is being rushed. Mr. Paul, who is building the new theatre, will also be the manager.

Duluth—The Old Opera House of this place is to be entirely remodeled and equipped at a total cost of over $30,000. It will be brought up to date in every respect with the idea of attracting the best patronage to a high class of motion pictures. Mr. F. O. DeMoney of Chicago is the architect in charge of the alterations.

Hillsboro—The Orpheum Theatre, now being completed by J. D. Williams, will soon be opened.

Kentucky—W. T. Pierre is building the new Peerless Theatre on Chestnut Street near the Parkside Hotel. Ralph Harris of Chicago is the architect. The theatre will be completed and opened about November 1st.

Murphysboro—Mr. Art Barth recently opened his new theatre at Carbondale.

INDIANA

Bicknell—The Grand Theatre Company is remodeling the building known as Volle's Garage into a new and up-to-date motion picture theatre. The new theatre, to be known as the Grand, will have many new and special features, one of them being a bowie floor. Mr. Willoughby is president of the company and Mr. Osterhage, the manager.

Fort Wayne—Mr. B. Borkenstein purchased the Wells Street Theatre a few days ago and will make extensive repairs on the interior before reopening it.

Indianaopolis—The Marcus Loew Realty Company has commenced work on the $300,000 theatre building to be erected on the East Side of Pennsylvania Street near the National Bank Building. Seating capacity will be 3,000.

Lafayette—A $250,000 theatre is to be constructed by the Luna Amusement Company. The seating capacity of the theatre will be 2,000 and will have a stage 40 x 60.

Newport—The Standard Theatre Company has let the contract for the construction of a theatre in Clinton, to have a seating capacity of 1,000 persons. Total cost is estimated at $150,000.

Vincennes—Bids for the construction of the Pantheon Theatre to be erected at Fifth and Main Streets, were opened a few days ago at the office of John B. Bayard, the architect. The building site is being cleared and work will commence shortly. The estimated cost of the theatre will be $100,000.

KENTUCKY

Fulton—The Orpheum Theatre, under the management of Mr. W. L. Chrisholm, has been recently opened to the public, after being renovated and remodeled.

Midlesborough—Otto Brown, manager for the Manor and Brownie Theatres. It announces the "Manor" will soon be rebuilt and modernized in every respect.

Shelbyville—Work is expected to commence shortly on the new motion picture theatre to be erected on Main Street between Sixth and Seventh, by Mr. Ivory Ethington. The theatre will have a seating capacity of more than 1,000.

LOUISIANA

Monroe—Miss Lillian Meyer of this city is preparing to erect a moving picture theatre on Grammont Street. The structure will be of brick and stone and will cost from $35,000 to $50,000.

Development of the Mazda Lamp for Projection Purposes
A New Series of Interest to All Projectionists

HISTORY OF THE ART
The coming of the Mazda lamp for projection purposes means to the motion picture field, what the new light-six or eight cylinder high efficient motor meant to the automobile industry.

The Mazda lamp itself, of course, is not new; but its successful application to projection is quite recent.

The Carbon arc came into existence about 1870, and has, until recently, where electric current was available, held the field as a light source for projection.

In 1879, an experimenter by the name of Heyl, arranged a series of photographic transparencies on the outer edges of a disc, and rotated it in front of the lens of a magic lantern.

It was just as if a strip of film had been pasted around the edges of the revolving shutter that is used with the present motion picture projector. In order to prevent blur when changing from one picture to another, a two-wing shutter was used. Heyl’s scheme was the forerunner of the present day motion picture projector.

In 1887, Reverend Hamblin Goodwin filed a patent for a continuous strip of photographic film similar to that used at present. In 1880, Thomas A. Edison perfected the first modern high speed motion picture camera. Following this Edison devoted much of his time to the projector mechanism. The taking and projecting of successive photographs thus made practical the development of the art that today furnishes instruction and amusement for millions.

ADVANTAGES
Many of the same advantages that have led to the present world wide use of the Mazda lamps for home, industrial and street lighting, make the Mazda projection lamp desirable. Ease, simplicity and economy of operation as compared with other illuminants, are among its chief characteristics.

The advantages of the Mazda lamp as regards projection are becoming well known. It gives a clear soft light; makes operating conditions vastly more healthful, produces a better quality of pictures, and costs far less to run, in most cases, than the arc. A popular misconception, however, places the operation of the Mazda lamp in its simplicity next to that of filling a fountain-pen. Nevertheless, in focusing the Mazda lamp with its somewhat smaller light source, the experienced projectionist will find his knowledge to stand him in good stead.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE MAZDA LAMP
Thomas A. Edison made his first successful electric incandescent lamp on October 21, 1879. The filament was made of paper, a carbon filament. It was not until slightly over a decade ago, however, that the tungsten filament was brought out, and not until a coiled concentric filament operating in a gas-filled bulb was introduced, that the beginning of exhaustive experimentation to produce a Mazda lamp for projection was begun.

Lamps of wattage from 20 to 2,000 and operating at amperages ranging from 1 to 100 have been tested out.

Many types, sizes and shapes of filament have been made and tried. Several different shaped bulbs have been adopted from time to time. The earlier bulbs were a combination of a round and a tubular bulb. The round or bulging part being necessary in order to keep the intense heat from softening the glass. Later, a hard or lime glass was used, which enabled the filament to be put into a tubular bulb with only a little over an inch separation between it and the side of the bulb.

The research and development work in the laboratories has been supplemented by many actual commercial installations. The lamp performance and screen results have been closely watched, so that the new Edison Mazda lamp embodies the results of both theoretical and practical investigations.

THE MAZDA LAMP FOR MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION
The filament of this lamp is enclosed in a tubular bulb of hard glass 9 ½” long from base to tip, and 2 ½” in diameter. The long tubular bulb is used for two reasons,—first, to enable the filament to be brought close to the condenser, and thus utilize more light; second, to reduce light absorption from blackening. When a filament is heated, and especially so at very high temperatures, it continually gives off gas.

New York City, N.Y.

Dear Sir:-

In reply to your inquiry as to the results we are receiving from your Powers Projecting Machines, will say that it is with pleasure we are able to report that same have been giving us perfect satisfaction.

We are using two of your machines for projecting our release prints and on each of these machines we are projecting in the neighborhood of thirty thousand feet of film per day. This amount of footage is in considerable excess to that which a machine would be subject to under ordinary conditions and, taking into consideration the rate of speed which we are obliged to run these machines in order to put through the required number of release prints per day, and also the perfect condition in which these machines are now in - after being in service for two years - demonstrates to us the perfection in the manufacture of these machines.

We must have perfect projection for our releases and have found, by experience, that the Nicholas Power Machines fulfill our needs to the fullest extent.

Yours very truly,

Determination of Resistance

In order to determine roughly the resistance of a piece of apparatus, such as a rheostat used in an arc circuit, readings may be taken with an ammeter and voltmeter and the value of the resistance obtained from Ohm’s law. A diagram of connections in which an ammeter is connected in the circuit and the drop of potential around the resistance is measured by a voltmeter is shown in Fig. 20. Then from Ohm’s law $R = V/I$, the value of the resistance may be determined. The above measurements may be made on any rheostat already connected in a circuit. In order to get more accurate results, however, a separate circuit may be made up as shown by Fig. 21. This diagram makes use of a variable resistance added to the circuit so that the amount of current may be varied by taking simultaneous readings a series of values may be obtained and from these an average taken for the correct value of resistance.

In order to determine the resistance of an arc meter may be connected as shown by Fig. 22, the simultaneous readings taken when the arc is burning properly. The resistance of the arc is determined by dividing the drop in potential across the arc by the current flowing through the circuit.

Another way of finding the resistance of an unknown piece of apparatus is by the comparison method, in which the drop in potential around the unknown resistance as indicated by a voltmeter is compared to the drop around a known resistance. No ammeter is required by this method, as the two resistances are connected in series across a constant current supply. The voltage drop around the two resistances is then proportional to their ohmic resistance as the same current is flowing through each. The diagram of connections is shown by Fig. 23. Then the value of the unknown resistance is to the unknown resistance as the drop around the known resistance is to the drop around the unknown resistance.

In order to measure accurately large values of resistance use is generally made of the Wheatstone Bridge which consists of a combination of resistances used in conjunction with a galvanometer. A simple drawing showing the method of connection and principle of the Wheatstone Bridge is given by Fig. 24. The unknown resistance is inserted in section $R_4$. The current flow in the two parallel branches of the circuit is then varied by means of changing the value of $R_3$ so that the circuit is balanced, that is, such that there is no potential drop between the point $A$ and $B$ as shown by the galvanometer.

In the circuit of Fig. 24 the value of $R_1$ is to $R_2$ as the value of the adjustable resistance $R_3$ is to the unknown resistance $R_4$. If the values of $R_1$ and $R_2$ are equal then the amount of $R_3$ which shows no deviation of the galvanometer needle is the desired value of the unknown resistance.

Description of the Galvanometer

A galvanometer is an instrument used for measuring small current flow or the existence of a very low drop in potential between two points. Because of its sensitivity, it is very useful in determining when the circuit of a Wheatstone Bridge has been balanced. There are two principal types of galvanometers, known as the Arc type and the moving coil or D’Arsonval type.

The tangent galvanometer is made up of a series of turns of wire which is mounted with its plane vertical and placed parallel to the earth’s magnetic meridian. A magnetic needle is pivoted at the center of the coil. When a current passes through the coils the needle takes a position which is a resultant of the magnetic field of the ground and field set up by the passage of current. The magnetic field set up by the passage of the current is proportional to the amount of current flowing. Thus the amount of deviation of the plane of the coils of wire is an indication of the current strength.

This action is illustrated by Fig. 25 in which $H$ is the magnetic field of the earth and $M$ the magnetic field produced by the passage of current. The position of the needle is then proportional to the current flow through the galvanometer coils.

The D’Arsonval Galvanometer is made up of a fixed magnet and a suspended movable coil which is caused to turn when current is passed through the coil. The movable coil is suspended by a fine wire which furnishes one lead to the movable coil, the other lead being formed by a wire dripping into the mercury cup at the bottom. The principle of this instrument is shown by Fig. 26. The figure also shows a mirror on the suspension wire used to indicate very slight deflections by reflecting a ray of light on a calibrated scale.

Problems to be Solved

25. If the ammeter of Fig. 20 reads 8 amperes and the voltmeter indicates 92 volts what is the value of the resistance?

26. The following readings were taken for the circuit as shown by Fig. 21: 5 amperes, 13.5 volts; 12 amperes, 33 volts; 18 amperes, 49 volts. Find the average value of resistance.

27. Two voltmeters A of 10,000 ohms resistance and B of 5,000 ohms resistance are connected in series across 150 volts. What will be the reading of each?

28. For a certain current flow the drop around the known resistance of 10 ohms, Fig. 23, is 25 volts and that around the unknown resistance is 60 volts. Find the value of the unknown resistance. What current is flowing in the circuit?

vapor, which, coming in contact with the relatively cooler surface of the glass, may form a black deposit. The farther away from the filament we can allow this cooling and deposit to take place, the less is the likelihood of the light to be absorbed due to blackening. Further, the long bulb helps to get rid of or dissipate the heat.

The filament, instead of a straight piece of tungsten wire as in an ordinary vacuum lamp, is wound in a spiral or helical form. Many people call the filament "four little springs."

In the making of the filament the wire is actually wound as closely as possible on a long thin rod, or as it is termed in the factory, a "mandrel," much in the same manner as a person winds a piece of string around his finger. The mandrel is then taken out, and the wire bent into position.

While the spiral or spring of wire itself is only 1/32" long and occupies when bent into four parallel coils, a space of 4/10" square, the wire itself when stretched out is almost 1½" in length. Thus, by coiling a long piece of wire, we are able to concentrate the light within a small area.

As will be shown later this 4/10" square is the "useful area"—and practically, only light from this area can be used in projecting the picture. Thus, it is desirable to crowd the maximum amount of light into these dimensions.

This, of course, means making the filament as brilliant as possible, and putting individual loops or coils as close together as practicable.

The brilliancy of the filament depends upon how hot it is run. The temperature at which a filament can be run depends to a certain degree upon its diameter. It is obvious that a piece of wire the size of your finger can be run much hotter without danger of burning out than one the size of a hair. A thick hot wire means a high amperage.

Putting the filament close together necessitates low voltage. Two wires carrying 100 volts, for instance, could come much closer together without danger of the current jumping than two such wires carrying 1000 volts.

Hot Weather Means More Typhoon Sales

Exhibitors throughout the country are realizing more and more as the summer approaches that it is absolutely necessary to have a cool and well-ventilated theatre. This is not only among owners of large houses, but smaller houses as well. There was a time, a few years back, when the question of ventilation did not seem to bother the theatre owner. However, times have changed, and the keen competition of the present day makes it necessary that every theatre owner put his house in proper shape for the approaching summer weather.

Fire Valves and Soldering Kinks

G. Waldo Remenowitz, Strand Theatre, Sioux Falls, S. D.

Just a few lines to let you know that I am still at the same place and have not forgotten the News.

While at work today I had a Projectionist from out of town call on me. We were talking about different equipment and he said, "We have just installed a new motor generator and I do not know the first thing about one of them." He then asked where he could get a set of electrical tools that would not cost him a lot of money. I recommended Hawkins Electrical Guides and also the News Practical Electricity.

I can see no reason why any Projectionist should be without a set of Hawkins Electrical Guides. They cover the field and can be bought for ten dollars a set of ten-tvds. You can also buy them on the installment plan. One dollar down and a dollar a month. This is twenty-five cents a week or three and a half cents a day. They are for sale by Theo. A. Velde & Co., 72 Fifth Ave., N. Y. C.

In March 27th issue, George Burkard was telling about the fire valve on his Picture showline cutting. This trouble is caused by bent reels or magazine out of line with the upper spoolcket. But you will find that most of it is caused by bent reels. We went to work at a small house in 1912 and found that the upper valve was completely cut through. We took it out and cleaned both of the cut edges with a piece of emery cloth, also the outside of the valve on both sides of the cut. Clamp one side in a vise and line up the other half so that it leaves a crack of about 1/32 of an inch between the two pieces. At one end turn the two pieces together with solder. Then take it out of the vise and square the two pieces up. Take a piece of blottet, card-board, or some twine and put it in the vise as you would a piece of film in threading. Push this up tight against the crack so that it will form a bottom on the crack. You are now ready to finish the soldering. Clamp in the vise and start at the other end and work to the end that you soldered first. Remember that you must reinforce it a little on the outside. After you have this soldered take out the packing and with a piece of fine emery cloth folded (so that the eraser enters first), slide this into the valve and work back and forth until you have the inside smooth. If done right this will make a neat job and will prevent the brass valve. I soldered up two valves and I know that the first one was as good as ever a year later. The second one was still in use five months after I soldered it and as good as the day I put it in.

Some Projectionists do not realize what can be done with a soldering iron. In 1916 I solded the valve that holds the intermittent idler bracket on the projectors. This was broken on, and as the party who sent the head to me to repair could not afford to put much money into it, I solded it up for him and saved him $8.50, the price of a new framing carriage. This machine is still in use with the same carriage.

Remember that pair of tension shoes that you discarded because they were out of true, or the aperture plate with the worn track? Next time you have a pair like that do not discard them. Go to the hardware store and buy a two-surface milledstone (fine and coarse). Turn the coarse side up and rub the shoes back and forth until you have them almost trued up. Then turn the stone over and finish on the fine side. Always finish with plenty of oil and a lengthwise stroke. There are a great many things that the Projectionist can do if he will take the time and use his head to think with instead of just a place to put his list.

I will call this enough for this time and will try to write again in the near future.

Reply: Hawkins Guides are but one of the tools for the Projectionist. The ten books contain a mind of information and if a man can absorb all the facts contained in the 300 or more pages, he will be able to qualify for a position considerably better than that of a Projectionist.

Your contribution on the subject of "worn-out fire valves" is received with thanks. We are sure that others having similar trouble will welcome your suggestions.

We sincerely hope that our readers, after hearing your story of the soldering experience, will not become convinced that soldering is so easy. You seem to have had excellent success with your iron, but others are not apt to be so fortunate. Soldering in itself is an art, particularly if the parts to be joined are at all delicate or if the finished product must conform to certain measurements. Nevertheless, as you say, a soldering iron is a handy appliance to have about a shop and can be used in many cases to save broken parts that otherwise would have to be thrown away.

Trouble due to bent and unstable reels can easily be done away with by having reels of your own for projection purposes. Let the producer send his films out on any reels that he has in stock but discard them when projecting. It requires time and trouble to rewind onto a second reel, but the results in every way are worth it. There are a number of excellent reels on the market that are far ahead of any exchange reel in trueness, durability and workmanship.

It will pay any exhibitor to expend $3 on a couple of decent reels.

Fulco Starts Intensive Sales Campaign

Leading off with a well arranged folder featuring the leading products of the E. E. Fulco Co., Carl H. Fulco, Sales Manager of the firm, recently launched a sales campaign that will no doubt bring in actual results. The Fulco line of theatre equipment has been increased by the addition of several new products, one of them being the copper terminal for use in projection rooms. This terminal is ingeniously made and saves the conductor securely and effectively. It is easy to apply and gives a neat appearance after assembly.

Carl Fulco has made a number of trips to different parts of the country installing Fulco distributors and from all accounts the United States is well covered with dealers featuring Fulco goods.

The Paragon of Motion Picture Screens
The Gardiner Velvet Gold-Fibre Screen

A RRAHAM LINCOLN said, “You can fool some of the people all of the time and all of the people some of the time, but you can’t fool all of the people all of the time.” You, Mr. Exhibitor, we know, are not trying to fool the people by not giving them the best picture. Perhaps you do not know how to improve your picture on the screen. We can show you the road to the best projected picture if you will send today for our little booklet that tells all about the Gardiner Velvet Gold-Fibre Screen. The booklet costs nothing and may save and make you many a dollar.

The Chicago stage lamp, Fig. 9, is unusual in having the flame carbons at right angles.

The Joyce flame arc lamp has been used somewhat in industrial moving picture work.

The Klieglight, Fig. 11, is a high amperage (30 to 40 amperes) lamp, with horizontal carbons. The lamp is mounted on a pedestal with casters and is used in side lighting. The lamp is very powerful and so is usually diffused by a large glass screen. A low weight lamp with vertical flame carbons is also made. The portable Klieglight is shown in Fig. 10.

This lamp is especially used for overhead lighting, and in a stand form for side lighting. These lamps give a greater effect by 20% than some of the flame arcs having only one arc on 110 volts.

The Simplex lamp is a twin flame lamp which is very portable and can be carried around in a suitcase. This lamp is designed for 15 to 25 amperes.

The Universal or Majestic lamp has two flame arcs in series and these are placed next to the economizer. The lamp can easily be directed to throw its light to any part of the stage.

The Macbeth Company is well known in photo-engraving field and have recently produced a tilting lamp, which is apparently of considerably greater efficiency than their usual photo-engraving lamp. The lamp is designed so that the light can be directed to any part of the stage, both vertically and horizontally. The tilting lamp is designed to burn on A. C. and D. C. and, in case of 220 volts, two in series.

The Scott lamp, Fig. 12, is a revival of the inclined gravity feed lamp at 15 to 20 amperes, and have two arcs in series in each lamp.

The Wohl Duplex hanging lamp is shown in Figs. 7 and 13. This lamp has two flame arcs in series and our laboratory tests show a mean spherical candle-power of 6,700 with no reflector with the lamp taking 30 amperes on 115 volts (direct current). With the reflector, the horizontal beam candlepower is 22,000 according to tests made by Mr. Perris of our laboratory. In motion picture studios these lamps are provided with suitable woven glass diffusing screens or large tracing cloth diffusing screens. The Wohl Broadside, Fig. 14 is a stand lamp taking 30 amperes with four arcs in series arcs. A very portable low weight lamp is also made. A complete description of all the American lamps would fill a book so we will pass on to foreign lamps and spot lamps.

Sun-Light Arc Shows Worth at Directors’ Ball

At the Ball given by the Motion Picture Directors’ Association at the Hotel Biltmore on April 10th a novelty was introduced by the use of several Sun-Light Arcs as sources of illumination by which motion pictures of the festivities were taken. Private projection of the films taken on that night give sufficient proof of the aptitude of the arcs for such purposes.

Not satisfied with the taking of “sets,” President Harmer arranged for views taken by spot flood and back lighting. In all the demonstrations the illumination measured up to the full standard desired.

Representatives of the Technical Department of Motion Picture News viewed these films and without exception were impressed by the results obtained. One interesting feature was emphasized when the camera was focused directly in the center of the arc without causing undue halation. Only a fiery ball appeared on the negative and the details outside of this spot were unaffected. These demonstrations are but a few of those that have been promised by the Sun-Light Arc Corporation. Mr. C. G. Nesbit, Eastern Sales Manager, predicts some of the greatest advances in the motion picture industry to occur within the next few months.

“Pollyanna” Opens New Texas Theatre

To Mary Pickford’s “Pollyanna” goes the honor of opening the new Lamb theatre in Ranger, Texas. This theatre is the best building erected to screen drama that has been built in the oil fields of Texas. It was handsomely decorated throughout with carvings. It was formally dedicated by the Mayor and other prominent officials of the city.

The Hulsey Lynch interests entertained the orphans from the different homes in Dallas at the Old Mill to see Mary Pickford in “Pollyanna.” Several of the large automobile concerns took upon themselves the job of conveying the kiddies at different times throughout the day to the theatre.

The Music Editor is always at the service of the readers of these columns.
J. S. Zamecnik, the Musical Wizard

With the exception of Sol P. Levy we don't know of any other composer but J. S. Zamecnik who has been able to write successfully and produce every conceivable class of music, excluding grand opera. The above gentlemen have written popular song hits, concert music, film music and have proved that they are just as efficient in writing music suitable for hotel and dance purposes, as well as for the motion picture theatre.

It is hard to say which of Mr. Zamecnik's compositions is the best emanating from his pen. He has written such an abundant amount of music suitable for all purposes that we can not review his works individually, but in sections. His concert orchestra editions published by Sam Fox Pub. Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, as well as a great many numbers written for the Sam Fox Famous Library Edition, are but a few of the numbers we may justly say are indispensable to the motion picture theatre, also for any other enterprise where music is needed. Among the popular hits written by Mr. Zamecnik are: "My Caro Lore," "Amorita," and many others.

For the motion picture field, he has recently written a folio, called "The Same Fox Loosel Leaf Playphot Edition," an excellent book consisting of dramatic and incidental music revealing musical quality practically unexcelled.

Mr. Zamecnik was born in Cleveland, Ohio, and studied with various theaters in this country and abroad. He was a member of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, with Victor Herbert, and was musical director of the Cleveland Hippodrome where he collaborated in the production of spectacular shows and comic operas. Mr. Zamecnik can boast of the distinction of having won a $2,500 prize in a California song contest.

At the request of many of the leading Photograph directors who have used his Concert Numbers (Sam Fox Concert Edition) so exclusively, he is writing another set. Likewise, the Photo Play Edition will be augmented by new dramatics, however, of a different nature. The motion picture profession, therefore, can look forward to much meritorious music from the pen of this versatile composer.

Mr. Zamecnik is a hard worker and besides his own music he writes for several well known de plumes. His enthusiasm is best expressed in his own words: "I have my very heart and soul in all that I write. My melodies are the voice of my emotions and I am extremely happy over the fact that my musical expressions find such a welcome response in the hearts of my fellow musicians and thousands of music lovers."

Mr. Zamecnik has written exclusively for the Sam Fox Pub., Co. of Cleveland, Ohio.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR’S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer’s opinion enclosed with every exhibit and of any opinion received by him in the Box Office Reports.

And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received by the picture. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received by the exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but who have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the “Flash-Backs,” being comments on films released prior to December 29, 1919.

(National Picture Theatres)
JUST a Wife" is the initial National offering and is an adaptation of the stage play by Eugene Walters. Roy Steward, Kathlyn Williams, and Leatrice Joy are the featured players.
As a playgoer it offers another example of crassly maladroit stage success. Or at least, it is a picturization of a story that has not the necessary screen qualifications. The basis of the story is the theme of a man loving the woman who can bring him domestic happiness rather than her who brings business success. The psychological effect and character transformation were probably worked out on the stage largely by dialogue, and they are only half worked out in the screen version, in a sickly, anemic fashion, by a few subtilites. The gradual birth of love in the hearts of the man and his wife, is poorly pictured. Action is palpably and lamentably lacking. John Emerson marries to further his career; Mary Lee, to escape poverty. Neither loves the other. Eleanor Lathrop, however, a business partner of Emerson's, is deeply in love with him. This is the triangle, such as it is—two women, and a man who loves neither of them. Eleanor is not a vampire, and Emerson is not susceptible to such charms as she possesses. Is there any wonder that the interest lags—lags despite the "big business" element that is introduced and the dizzy tale of the hero's rise as a financial power?
The picture has been given a careful production and the usual good photography and interior sets. Roy Steward fits his new type of character very well, but is given few opportunities to impress. Leatrice Joy has been well cast, and Kathlyn Williams, in an ungenial part, naturally cannot be congenial. A very much unheard of and convenient husband, by the way, is brought from Alaska for this third peg of the Triangle in the end. The stage play might please sophisticated theatregoers on account of the smoothness and cleverness of the playwriting, but short of these qualities on the screen, it will only equal the average.

"Edgar's Hamlet"
(Produced by Goldwyn from the Booth Tarkington Stories—Two Reels)
GOOD as was the first Booth Tarkington "Edgar's Hamlet," principally because of the presentation of Shakespeare's immortal tragedy by "Edgar" and his chums, albeit that there is a short sequence prior to the show which introduces you to Mr. Tarkington's characters in a school room with "Edgar" speaking a piece with not any too great success, pictorially we mean. This is the idea for the show originates. How it is developed, even to the use of a couple of mother's best hats and dinner gowns for costumes with dire results for both wearing apparel and boys later, is part of the stuff of which the picture is made.
The performance itself is a wonder. Staged in "Edgar's Pal's" barn with an audience of children who are as clever actors as Johnny and his show troupe there is a laugh in every scene. This over and over again comes some more great stuff when the parents we have mentioned from whom the hats and gowns were borrowed without the formality of asking, find out what has happened. If this picture doesn't please your audience, young and old, and men and women, they are unappreciative.
J. S. Dickerson.
"Three Gobs"
(Priama Colored Scenic and Educational—One Reel)
"Three Gobs" derives its title from the fact that it purports to be a partial chronicle of what three gobs have done since the Navy saw and did on a U. S. battleship.
The offering is quite a novelty for the reason that it combines very nicely the virtues of the colored scenic, the educational subject and a current events strip.
The colorings given the various strips fit in rather harmoniously, there is much that is really interesting which is shown concerning the big cruiser and the topical part is contained in the fact that it is one of Uncle Sam's best ships for which the "three gobs" have been selected on which to be given their naval training.
The reel is worthy of being featured to a considerable extent and will pass with any audience which enjoys this type of stuff, as more than a filler.
J. S. Dickerson.
"The Gift Supreme"
(Republic—Inter-Ocean)
WHEN they named this picture they probably didn't know at the time that it might have another meaning to those who book it.
Now, we're not going to say that this feature is out of the ordinary if we compare it with some others that have seen, but for down-right amusement, the kind that will interest, stimulate and thrill, this film should be a "gift supreme" to the exhibitor.
Why? Because the story, which was written by George Allan England, and which, although not new, is treated in a way to arouse the emotions; because it was directed in an artistic manner, even in its finer details; because it has a good star in Bernard Durning, whose personal magnetism, coupled with his ability to net and catch up the heart and emotion movements in the store, and in doing this he recreates the old baseball saying, "take your time," are an added attraction; and because it has a cast which, when mentioned, little more need be said. Among those who are mentioned, and whose roles are Seen Owen, Melbourne McDowall, Teddy Marshall, Eugene Reasons, Lou Cluney, Jack Curtis and Dick Morris.
The characters are drawn from the two extremes of life, the rich and the poor. Length six reels.
Frank Leonard.
"A Fool and His Money" (Selznick)
PUT a young American, a very rich and decidedly two-fisted American, in the most archaic old-world, atmosphere of Central Europe, surround him with strangely clad attendants, and prove he so grossly misinformed soldier can drum such a happy-go-lucky hero, and you have a "best seller" of not so many years past. George Barr McCutcheon did all this, and the novel has come to us in photoplay form with Eugene O'Brien as the star. And if the novel proved popular, there is no reason, apparently, why the picture should not duplicate, for it is just as picturesque and just as amusing.
A successful American novelist lays an Austrian castle where he may work undisturbed. The interior scenes of this castle are remarkable for their size, furnishing and faithfulness of detail. The novel, of course, has not the splendid or grandeur of the Austrian Tyrol, but are evidently the best that could be obtained. A mysterious lady is hiding in a unused wing of the castle. Our novelist discovers her and learns her history. She is the oldest American wife of a foreign Count, and has fled with her kidnapped child to the castle, protected by the servants who once knew her as their mistress. The Count himself arrives as a guest at the house party, and accidentally discovers his divorced wife's whereabouts. He summons the police and after a single combat with the American, in which he is beaten, there is a chase over the mountains for the frontier. A few soldiers fail to stop the runaways and they reach the Italian border, where there is safety and, of course happiness for the ex-Countess and the novelist.
The star fulfills all the requirements made upon him, which however, are not unusually dramatic or emotional. The retainers in the castle are especially well cast. All Eugene O'Brien admirers will be well pleased, and all others will find average entertainment in this picture, although this type of story is not as popular as it was a decade ago.

MARRIAGE COMEDY cartridge many bright moments

It is a leap from such a dramatic subject as "The River's End" to the light and breezy comedy, "Don't Ever Marry," but Marshall Neilan has negotiated it fairly well so that he may be called a director whose versatility is not of the single-track order. This being his first effort, it must go without saying that what might be due to rhyme and reason by a director of light stuff, it is difficult or impossible for him to be bursiped by him. Mr. Neilan has been fortified with a complicated story concerning a matrimonial mix-up and allowing for some unwatered fishliness which he has boldly bisected or exaggerated, the piece is a creditable offering. Of course the idea is quite preposterous and accepting it from that point of view this is the kind of stuff which everyday people, and the father and before the bride and groom cannot present the food films, files from intruders, there is offered a lot of highfalutin comedy. One must be quick-witted to appreciate all the compounded details for, there is scarcely a moment when the action isn't proceeding at top speed.

The bridal chamber at a hotel: to say nothing of the lobby, the elevator, the hall, compose most of the backgrounds, and those against these settings are a peppery bell-ho, a trick house detective, a runaway girl, about to be married, a few trite papas, a two-seater personage from the West, and a divorcée. The plot becomes involved with a counterplot or three, and it is a mad chase from the moment that the new arrivals arrive at the place to the time that they recover the passive betrothed. Neilan might have dispensed with certain wilder subtitles for the sake of dramatic unity. Still the picture is easily followed by those who see the introductory flash. A cast of conspicuous ability deserves much of the credit for getting the comedy over. Matt Moore, Marjorie Daw, Wesley Laufer, and Greta Spatafore are the players who enhance the highlights. You may classify it as a fast moving, mirth provoking comedy.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Don't Ever Marry" is the title of the matrimonial satire which Edgar Franklin wrote and wrote with more serious nature has here for the screen with a cast that includes Matt Moore, Marjorie Daw, Tom Guise, Adele Farrington, Thomas Jefferson, Jr., Herbert Standing, and William Berke. It is quite a department for Mr. Neilan that he shows his versatility in the fact that he is as easily at home in comedy as in stories of a more serious nature. "Don't Ever Marry," is the tale of the hizzingenes; which take place within twenty-four hours after a secret marriage, when for reasons best known to themselves, two other women claim the young groom as their lawfully wedded husband.

This is an uproarious comedy from the opening scene to the closing episode. The humorons plots, which are not dependent upon the grotesqueness of any character, Mr. Moore and they are not dependent upon the grotesqueness of any character, are never out of place in the story and have kept the picture Neilan has transferred all of the highlights of the story and has kept the picture Neilan has transferred all of the highlights of the story and has kept throughout. The cast may be called genuine all-star material when it comes to names which are familiar to every picturegoer. And these players take advantage of the highly amusing complications in a manner which stamps them as artists of the first order.

"Don't Ever Marry," the latest production offered by Marshall Neilan, is an uproarious comedy and it comes to this theatre next week. It is a farcical rendering of Edgar Franklin's sparkling cast is made up of Matt Moore, Tom Guise, Adele Farrington, Thomas Jefferson, Jr., Herbert Standing, and William Berke. SUGGESTIONS

You can exploit this feature as Marshall Neilan's latest. Then you can go into detail concerning the fact that this director is equally at ease within the limits of his versatility is proven here. Let pictures of all scenes in it. Use these to tell the story of the same name and the production is a surprise coming. THE TOLL GATE
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Quite Entertaining Picture with Hart as Good-Bad Man

William S. Hart is quoted as saying that his first independent production, "The Toll Gate," is the picture he ever made, which makes us wonder if he has forgotten that his graphic introduction and "The Polo Party Girl's Husband." True is it a rugged type of story and that Hart, more or less in presenting a line for dialogue which follows the beaten track. Hart, who collaborated with his director, Max H. Tell, has unearthed something new in the shape of idea or treatment.

He has written himself a new, fast part, which gives him plenty of opportunity to reveal his dynamic personality. And in taking advantage of it he has allowed the action to drag at times in order that shade and mood may be expressed to the minuet detail. There is a quantity of suspense in "The Toll Gate." It wouldn't be in the stereotyped narrative, but in the compelling power of the star himself. Which is another way of saying that the picture is Hart's "hook, line and sinker." With a less magnetic and talented actor it would only pass as an average work as well as ever.

It is perfectly obvious from the start that he will be reformulated and regenerated through the influence of a worthy woman—a woman who does not dig the plot, but is a partner in the adventure until the end. at which the drama has been fully digested by the spectator. The picture induces us to bring out the loneliness of his life, tho' they are the kind which are easily assuaged. He has twisted on a new twist for the convention, and riding away into the dying sun with her he goes his bumpy way along, an ocean ship may not grow to admire such an unusual outfit. Thus the pathos of his life is completely throughout. The action which departs his bandit life is highly colorful and calls for hard riding and swift shooting. And here is where "The Toll Gate" is strong. Hart is supreme in that line of work. The acting of his assistant is reasonable; especially in the case of Anna Q. Nilsson and Jack Richardson. The technical efforts are also praiseworthy. Length, 5 reels. Lawrence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William S. Hart, the best known delineator of Western characters on the screen, will appear at the theatre next week in "The Toll Gate," which is the first of his own productions under his new Famous Players contract. Mr. Hart considers the picture his finest contribution. Lambert Hillyer, a director, considers it the greatest picture in which he has ever appeared—an opinion which is shared by many. The Toll Gate is the story of a bandit whose better nature asserts itself at the last. As Black Deering he is deadly pure, a don of his sheriff's pose. He escapes them at one point by making a leap of over sixty feet from a cliff into the river below. But again they pick up the trail but he eludes them by riding his Plano pony into the bed of the river and following the stream into a subterranean passage.

After a series of thrilling episodes he gives himself up to the law. A generous sheriff allows him to depart over the Mexican border to freedom. "The Toll Gate" is an impressive drama of self-sacrifice and red-blooded manhood as well as a glowing picture of Western fact that has passed away. Mr. Hart gives his customary vigorous performance and his support consists of Anna Q. Nilsson and Jack Richardson. Mr. Hillyer directed the picture.

PROGRAM READER

William S. Hart, who comes to this theatre next week in "The Toll Gate," is said to have the most powerful dramatic role of his career as Black Deering, the bandit chiefman in the story which was written by Lambert Hillyer and himself. Mr. Hart considers the picture his finest contribution, and his opinion is upheld by observing critics who have seen it. It is a typical tale of the frontier days, when the fast breed roamed at large. The star appears in a role which fits him better, perhaps, than any other—that of a typical bad man. As a quaher he no doubt looks the other, but the refusal of his code of honor. The picture is punctuated with thrilling stunts and red-blooded action and the interest is sustained throughout. Mr. Hart is supported by Anna Q. Nilsson and Jack Richardson.

SUGGESTIONS

You can bill this feature as Bill Hart's greatest and not go wrong. Mention that the star considers it his best offering to date. Mention that it is the first of his own productions, his greatest contribution, and his opinion is upheld by observing critics who have seen it. SUGGESTIONS

When you look for your best bet be sure to feature Keenan and introduce them as the greatest character actors of modern times. If you have not done so before mention his latest successes, "Brothers," "Dollar for Dollar," and tell them that this picture has a story with an appeal which will interest them. And let them know that the essentials of Keenan are necessary to give it the proper attractive qualities.

Of course the picture has its weaknesses but what feature hasn't. However he has enough heart interest, dramatic moments, thrills and suspense to make any audience welcome and take notice. To relieve the tense moments, there is also a produced enough light comedy scenes to give the mind the necessary relaxation.

And let us tell you a word about Frank Keenan's acting and direction. An American in a role of this kind where he repeats alternate with strong action, he couldn't better it. His acting and direction which required the taking of many close-ups and the drawing out of many beautiful set shows a carefulness in detail that would be hard to equal.

Keenan Puts Over Another Good Picture

Here's a Keenan picture which should give satisfaction wherever it is shown. The star's experience for years has taught him the value of human interest stories, and his drawing power as a box office attraction. He must have had this idea in view when he selected this story for it could have been anything to the essentials that are necessary to give it the proper attractive qualities.

"THE COST"
(Paramount-Arcaicraft)

Picture Is Disappointing Through Lack of Moving Moments

This picture will undoubtedly prove disappointing to those patrons who recognize David Graham Phillips as one of the few vivid story tellers of modern fiction. It strikes us that the moving moments which come far and few between. The adaptation follows the story closely—a story which is well known and familiar to the memory of several years. But the damsel is to become confusing because the assortment of situations through the story, the moral values of "The Cost" are well emphasized in this way compensates for the lack of dramatic interest. The story is nothing but a lesson to those contemplating matrimony. There are no contrasting parties to it are vivid, and总而言� is comes near being a tragedy. Yet the picture is always a gauntlet even with worldly men and women, long. This is the lesson that the picture teaches and from this angle it is interesting and valuable. Looks with despondant young girl who marries a young man and his wife re-united with her former admirer presented with a plot effective manner, though she might have been more consistent with her characterization. Seven years should have revealed a difference in her appearance. Ralph Kellard as the husband is more eloquent. The length, 6 reels—Lawrence Reid.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The story of a girl who marries a young man against her father's wishes, with his promise that their marriage will lead him to reform is the theme of this Paramount production. David Graham Phillips is the author of this vital story, which is a favorite with the public. The subject is handled contemporarily in pointing out the lack of moral justification in the social situation and the selfishness of the characters. The story is filled with interesting and stimulating situations with their worthless husband. He has taken the part of the moral and kept the action moving. The cast features Violent Henning in the leading role and Phil Hashin in the supporting cast.

PROGRAM READER

A David Graham Phillips story is always interesting. This latest lamented author knew how to paint life as he saw it, consequently when a subject of his reaches the screen it is bound to make good entertainment because of its wealth of moving moments, its fine characterization and its excellent moral. "The Cost," regarded by many as his greatest story, which has been shown on the theatre next with a cast that includes Violent Henning, Ralph Kellard, Bernard Gray and other players of recognized ability. While we can't go into details concerning the plot it is said that it features a girl who marries against her father's wishes. The story of her folly is brought home to her and the spectators in a dramatic manner.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is an author whose name means much in popular fiction, so it would be well to explain why we think a great deal of David Graham Phillips, who is bringing out his stories, particularly "The Cost." Feature is at once a society drama, which is the moral values that it is for which he has been remembered for his portrayal in "Everywoman," and Ralph Kellard, who is a favorite with the American public. We can't work up in exorcism through the story. Such catch lines as "If you think the cost of this is high, go down to the cost of the at the of the - and see what a girl's marriage costs." Another one is "The cost of living is $2. See 'The Cost' at the cost of the of the - and be satisfied with both.'"

“PARIS GREEN”
(Ince-Paramount-Artcraft)

Interesting in Homespun Story Despite Hokum

ONE need not look for any variations in the character of the hokum, awkward youth that is enacted by Charles Ray. This time Ray presents the type with all his customary charm and embellishes it with his usual panache, only reality—a stroke which even an arbitrary plot cannot destroy. The story is written as a study in a young man who has returned from the war and Paris, and up to the time he discovers that his old sweetheart doesn’t love him, the picture reveals as delicious comedy and appealing pathos as one would want to see. Then in order to supply a dramatic conflict, he finds that his young friend is engaged to the child of his former employer, a Parisian farm and Ray plays this bit with wonderfully effective appeal.

Again he shows his ability as a light comedian in the barn dance scene and in those moments when he attempts to make love with the aid of his English-French dictionary. These are the human touches which tone up the story and make it interesting despite the melodramatic hokum. The youth—the two girls and the rural folks—all these are genuine and the same may be said about the atmosphere of the old house. If the development of the plot had worked out differently the film might have been a knockout. The acting is splendid, especially that of Bert Woodruff as the youth’s father—Length, 5 reels—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Charles Ray’s latest photoplay to appear at the —— theatre next week is “Paris Green.” It is based on the story by Julian Josephson, the author of “Five Minutes to the End,” and the earlier reels of Corporal Luther Green, of Paris, Kansas. Bix (Bert Woodruff), his old sweetheart has become engaged to the child of his former employer, a Parisian farm hand. Ray plays this bit with wonderfully effective appeal. The film is genuine and the way to make love with the aid of his English-French dictionary. If the development of the plot had worked out differently the film might have been a knockout. The acting is splendid, especially that of Bert Woodruff as the youth’s father—Length, 5 reels—Laurence Reid.

“THE STRANGE BOARDER”
(Goldwyn)

Will Rogers Makes Another Entertaining Picture

IT is rare in any genre that a series of film productions should be as successful as the Will Rogers pictures. This is especially true of the Will Rogers personality upon the screen and his droll, quiet way of picturing the characteristics of the small-town picture that account for its success. And where did he get all this? Surely in his less-than-barbecue houses, throwing a bit of humor and telling jokes. It probably “is one of the best American comic talents on the screen" as we will see in this Will Rogers picture, “The Strange Boarder,” which was produced by Goldwyn and directed by James Mason.

THE CAST

Will Rogers
Irene Rich
Jenny Rogers
James Mason
John Hodiak
Jack Richardson
Lee Daniels
Louis J. Durham

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Will Rogers will appear in his latest Goldwyn production, “The Strange Boarder,” next week. Rogers again displays his talents as a character actor picking up the role of a real-life character in the guise of a film. The picture is a typical Ray offering and is crowded full of the customary human touches and homely simplicity. Mr. Ray succeeds again in making his character live and the farmer boy-hero is one of his finest cameos. In his support are Amee Ray in the opposite role, Gordon Mullen, Otto Hoffman and Geraldine Grass.

PROGRAM READER

Charlie Ray, the most human, natural actor on the screen, will come to the —— theatre next week to appear in his latest photoplay entitled “Paris Green.” This offering is similar to the previous Ray pictures in that it obtains the name and gets his nickname, “Paris Green,” because of a certain hour he spent in Paris while serving with the A. E. F. He returns to “zivvies” but finds that his old sweetheart has become engaged to the child of his former employer, a Parisian farm hand. Ray plays this bit with wonderfully effective appeal. The film is genuine and the way to make love with the aid of his English-French dictionary. If the development of the plot had worked out differently the film might have been a knockout. The acting is splendid, especially that of Bert Woodruff as the youth’s father—Length, 5 reels—Laurence Reid.

SUGGESTIONS

A Charles Ray picture is usually in demand among the patrons because they know what to expect. You can tell them in this instance that the star appears in the film again. The most important being the fact that he wears natural colors in the earlier reels, having just returned from the war. The catch lines are as follows: “He left Quigley Corners as Luther Green, but when he came back they called him ‘Paris Green’” and “Luther Green returns from Paris and changes his name to Bix (Bert Woodruff).”

A Will Rogers picture is usually in demand among the patrons because they know what to expect. This time the catch lines are “It is rare in any genre that a series of film productions should be as successful as the Will Rogers pictures. This is especially true of the Will Rogers personality upon the screen and his droll, quiet way of picturing the characteristics of the small-town picture that account for its success.”

CATCH LINES

See Charles Ray in his wonderful human comedy, “Paris Green.” Five reels of as delicious comedy as has ever been shown on the screen.

WE'VE NEVER HEARD OF A "PLAYED-OUT" SIMPLEX!!!

Nine years ago the first Simplex was put into commercial use.

Since then thousands of them have been installed.

Seems as though some of them should be showing signs of old age.

But every day we receive letters from users of our earlier models asking that their mechanism be equipped with up-to-date appliances: think of a nine year old picture machine ready for another period of faithful service!

And, do you know, it's quite a problem to pick up a second-hand SIMPLEX?

When next you visit your supply man's repair shop, see if you can find a "sick" Simplex—and then count the number of other machines that are on the shelf for "treatment."

THESE FACTS SHOULD PROVE TO YOU THAT SIMPLEX IS A SPLENDID INVESTMENT

The "Keyed" Ad

One of the facts to be regretted about picture advertising is the difficulty of "keying" copy and checking a paper's "pull" by direct results.

In this field only the "accessory" advertiser has the opportunity to definitely trace every cent of his advertising appropriation.

One reason why Motion Picture News carries the bulk of the "accessory" business and many exclusive accounts.

Ask such men as Dan Barton—of the Barton organ and Bartola instruments—what Motion Picture News advertising has done for them. Barton knows—keyed inquiries and directly traceable sales furnish the evidence back of his continued big space advertising.

Ask Barton how many exhibitors called on him in Chicago last week with the introduction, "I saw your ad in the News." Hear him tell you that—

YOU HAVE shown Cecil B. De Mille's latest production "Why Change Your Wife?" to large enthusiastic audiences.

De Mille's penetrating study of married happiness has found a reception never before accorded to a motion picture. It has broken records everywhere.

A few years ago De Mille created an epoch-making production, a picture just as penetrating, just as beautifully produced, just as universal in its appeal, as "Why Change Your Wife?"

This was "Old Wives for New." It was the first of his series on the marriage problem. But there were fewer theatres and fewer theatre-goers then.

Now you can show it both to those who saw it then and to those who didn't see it but wish they had.

They have seen "Why Change Your Wife?" They all want to see this study of marriage from a different angle. They will throng to see it.

New prints and a complete new line of accessories ready.
MARY PICKFORD reached the pinnacle of her success in “Rebecca.”

Never before and never since was there a play so suited to her, a part so delightfully expressive of her charm.

Show it now! Those who saw it want to see it again. Those who didn’t, want to see it now!

New prints and a complete new line of accessories ready.

OUT of New York's Ghetto — out of the squalor and misery, rose a song that flooded the world with melody.

A song of mother love. A song that needed no words, because it was played on the strings of the human heart.

Humoresque! A photoplay? Yes, but more than a photoplay — the melody of life itself!

Humoresque! That laugh on life with the tear beneath! The soul of a people, in a picture that untwists the chains that tie the hidden heart of harmony.

Humoresque! A photoplay that you will never forget.

VITAGRAPH
Hard to Forget—
— the bloody fight between two grizzly bears.
— the haunted hut of Tavish.
— the search for Marge in the wilderness — their meeting.
— the gruelling battle between two men in a bear-pit.
— the wolf-dog outlaw, Barce.
— Marge and David’s fight when caught in the Nest.
— the strange meeting far from civilization.
— the grandeur, beauty, thrill and adventure of it all.

VITAGRAPH
"With a choking gurgle the giant went down!"

"THE COURAGE OF MARGE O`DOONE"

BY

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

Fight!  Fight!  Fight!

In a bear-pit in the Arctic, David Raine faced the hulking, brutish giant of a mountaineer. Like cave men of the Stone Age, they began their battle for the possession of a woman. One saw her soul—the other her body.

Pitted against this mountain of flesh and bone, David's chances were slim. Blow after blow he landed on the brutish hulk... twice they circled the blood-spattered arena. David's face was warm with the gore of his enemy. But battered and swollen, the giant came on and on. David was not battling for victory—but for his life. He was literally beating himself to pieces, like a ship hammering on a reef.

Like a maddened monster the giant kept coming on, always trying for that fatal clinch. And David knew it. There was still one last chance—one hope. It was the horrible trick of the bush country—the so-called "knee break," that he had seen used before with terrible effect.

Suddenly he shot himself out—a hundred and sixty pounds of bone and sinew—straight as an arrow against the brute's knees, and the gory giant went down like a stricken steer—

That's one of the score or more big thrills and suspense moments in this big special Vitagraph production.
ALBERT E. SMITH presents

"THE COURAGE OF MARGE O'DOONE"

BY

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

The Call of the North!

And a clarion call it is that this splendid, vigorous story of the frozen Northland sends out from the screen after being picturized and made into a superb, big special photodrama production.

The magic of the motion picture turns the warm and glowing pages of a masterly story into a pulsing, living drama, whose sheer charm and realism carries one away to that vast white country “up there,” with all its grim glory and grandeur.

It breathes the breath of life into the staid and sturdy men and the courageous and beautiful women of this story. And in the deep rich colors and splendid hues, that the printed word could never find, it has painted a background for the romance and tragedy—the villainy and valor, the stirring mystery and the startling surprise.

That is the call of the North—and everybody answers it!

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone" is a northwest classic. Mr. Curwood has given us a great treat and a great book in this latest volume of his. This is a triumph in fiction of the Canadian Northwest."

The Philadelphia Press—

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone" is a story that never flags, that abounds in unexpected incidents, that is rich in the deep colors of the glorious country in which its scenes are laid. If you want to read a story that travels straight on like a bird on the wing, with a swift series of unforeseen and thrilling episodes and all of it painted against the splendid hues of the wide, generous westland, read "The Courage of Marge O'Doone."

Philadelphia Evening Telegraph—

"Those who like a story brimful of red-blooded adventure, who revel in the life of camp and trail, will enjoy "The Courage of Marge O'Doone."

New York Times—

"There is plenty of incident, plenty of fighting, and some love-making in the book, with a heroine of that extraordinarily beautiful, courageous, innocent and trusting type."

Los Angeles Tribune—

"Curwood has many stories of the north woods to his credit, but if he had never written anything except this latest of his novels, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," his reputation would be assured."

Boston Herald and Journal—

"When James Oliver Curwood flies scientifically northward a live story results. "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" is one of his characteristic narratives, rapid in action and of vigorous pulse."

Minneapolis Herald—

"Mr. Curwood has caught the very spirit of the vigorous life of the north woods, and never has he made that fact clearer than in this romance. It is on the whole a 'rattling good story.'"

Cincinnati Enquirer—

""The Courage of Marge O'Doone" is a stirring novel of the far Northwest. It is a tale of mystery and of love, with a heroine unusual in fiction—young, brave, and very naive, as she has lived all her life away from civilization."

New York World—

"The romance is written with great spirit. Mr. Curwood obviously knows the forest, and his descriptions of it are very vivid. He is a dauntless fighter, too, and never fails to give some stirring scraps. It is Mr. Curwood's best story and hard to beat."

The Times-Picayune (New Orleans)—

""The Courage of Marge O'Doone" is a man's story, full of fierce excitement and thrilling adventure."

Indianapolis Star—

"In "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," the author, James Oliver Curwood, presents to his readers a tale of romance and adventure depicting life on the Canadian frontier."

Oakland (Cal.) Tribune—

"A fighting tale. If you like strong, vigorous, red-blooded fighting stories, where blows and blood, hatred and murder show themselves, together with the great wild wastes of the frozen north, grizzly bears, fierce male-mutes, primitive men, and tender and beautiful women, you will like "The Courage of Marge O'Doone." It is a graphic tale, stirring, thrilling and unusual."

BY

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

A Photodrama of Mystery and Red-Blooded Adventure!

Directed by

DAVID SMITH

A Vitagraph Special Production
"The Courage of Marge O'Doone" is a vigorous, fighting story of primitive men and stout-hearted, beautiful women, fierce huskies and malamutes, red-blooded adventure and rare romance, surprise and suspense, mystery and thrills, staged in the vast white arena of the frozen North. It has all the zip and the zest, the drama and color in its score of highlights that makes it just what it is—a prize special photoplay production. It is a classic of the North—a masterpiece of dramatic writing made into a masterpiece of a photoplay.

It is a gem of the genius of JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD. A born thriller, it travels swiftly and breathlessly along, studded with smashing incident that keeps the suspense and anticipation on edge—makes you guess and guess wrong until the toppling and unexpected climax suits you. It never lags for an instant. One literary critic has proclaimed it a story ready made for the motion picture screen, another has called it hard to beat—declared it the best story that JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD has ever written.
DAVIDE:—She is a charming, vivid personality, with the eager eyes of youth. A new shrine at which the movie fans of America will worship.

In an absorbing, thrilling, pulsing picture of perhaps the most engaging topic of contemporary life today in the United States. The frenzied quest for OIL! in the great south-west.

"WITCH'S GOLD" is the most novel and dramatic picture of the year.

SOME of the biggest exhibitors in the country have devoted nearly a year to the development of our franchise plan. They have given their wisdom and experience, guided by sound business principles, to its completion.

We have proceeded with deliberation and caution, because we wanted to be right—wished to be sure that we might offer the exhibitor who seeks both good pictures and protection of his interests a fair and equitable plan, a plan whereby he might write an insurance policy on the safety of his investment.

Our plan is the direct result of the causes that have forced the observing exhibitors of the country to bestir themselves into action against interests that seek to destroy the stability of our prosperity.

Dear Mr. Christie,

WE DO NOT hesitate for a minute to say that "Save Me Sahie" is the very best laugh producer we have ever shown in this theatre except possibly those comedies for which we pay fifteen hundred per cent more than yours cost.

Christie Comedy means something to our patrons because the goodness of your product is consistent. They are clean, really humorous, full of fast action, and have definite, clear cut stories of merit. You very evidently take more pains in selecting stories, casting characters, selecting types and directing every one concerned than does any other comedy producing company.

Interesting Mystery

Says

Exhibitor's Trade Review

An interesting mystery picture, which is decorated with a quantity of fights, bewildering situations, masked men and trap doors. The picture moves with unusual swiftness and has been carefully and intelligently directed. The sets chosen strengthen the mystery idea. The players work with enthusiasm and the film should score heavily with fans who enjoy mystery dramas. Some of the rain scenes in which quite a bit of action takes place are so well done that patrons are likely to look around for their umbrellas.

The Reason Why

WHY does the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. advertise when it is the busiest poster producing concern in the world, and when we are now working night and day to keep even with our orders? We feel that we owe it both to the buyer of posters and ourselves to advertise. Ours is an educational advertising campaign undertaken as a mutual protection against the mediocre poster. We wish to implant into the poster buyer's mind the highest possible standard, wherewith he will judge all posters. Then we will have achieved that purpose.

Few people stop to consider that advertising is one of the great arts—and that poster advertising is its highest and most complex development. Indeed it is so highly complex that it is not possible for the average business man to have an expert knowledge of the qualities of posters, although he realizes perfectly well the great importance of having good ones. It is that fact which enables a lot of lithographers, advertising agents and publicity men to put over a lot of stuff that is quite valueless. This is pure waste, and these advertisements are written in an effort to overcome that waste!

The ultimate result of this campaign will be to convince the buyer that there are just two ways of getting great posters. One way is by making a life long study of the subject—the other way is to insist upon having RITCHEY posters!

Why the Guarantee?

In two cities, Baltimore and Spokane, exhibitor action that is almost of a concerted nature has blocked the course of percentage booking. Other sections, while not reporting definite action, give signs of a growing storm of opposition to percentage.

We can't say, after looking at many forms of contract on percentage, that we can blame exhibitors.

Percentage, in theory, means a gamble—a gamble in which both parties share. Percentage, in the show game, called for both parties to take a showman's gamble.

But there is little of the showman about most of the contracts we see—with their large guarantee, usually equal to or in excess of the amount an exhibitor would consider a fair rental for the production.

Percentage will not be hastened on such a basis.

Percentage must mean equity—else there will be no percentage.

The Right Idea

D. WILLIAMS saw deep into the seat of much of the exhibitors' troubles when he declared at Chicago, "Let your majority rule. Be good soldiers. Bury your personal whims and stand by your leaders as long as the majority votes them your leaders. If you don't like them, throw them out—if the majority feels the way you do."

Minority cantsankerousness has been the rock on which national exhibitor organization has always founndered.

But there are two kinds of majorities in exhibitor bodies. There is the supposed majority created by credentials committees, steam rollers, convenient proxies, etc. There is the real, all-wool majority of theater-owning exhibitors, each having his say, and no one else having a word.

Mr. Williams points the way; let someone else bar the way to politics; and then—may the majority rule.

The Direct Route

EVERYTHING in the picture business is tending towards direct action. Now it is the Associated Producers who have decided, after months of proposals from various other organizations, to establish their own distributing system.

We can state the opinion of many others along with our own when we declare that they have made the first step right in selecting Oscar Price and Fred Warren to guide their distribution.

To a certain extent any group of distributors are controlling their own destinies when they establish their own exchanges. But only to an extent measured by the character and ability of the men they place at the helm.

The Big Six—there are hints that the figure may be increased—have taken the first hurdle in line form.

Chicago's High-light

The outstanding point of the Chicago convention of independent exhibitors was the evident and impressive earnestness of those present, the sincere desire for a real national organization.

Politics may have attempted to enter the scene, but the stay was short. And as the convention found its footing and gathered coherent shape, personalities and politics beat a hasty retreat.

No self-seeker could stand long against the exhibitors of the South, presenting facts and figures from their own experience to show the need of protective, national organization. No politician could stand unabashed before the sincere self-effacing attitude of such men as Sig Samuels and Willard Patterson, who called the convention, or of Frank Rembusch, who shouldered the burden of chairmanship.

If the Cleveland convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association profits by the addition of the energetic men who gathered in Chicago, if, out of the three days session in June, there emerges a solidified national organization—exhibitors will be grateful for the calibre of their representatives in Chicago.
The “Battle Line” of the Independent Exhibitors of America

The I. M. P. E. of A. Brought Into Being at the Chicago Convention, as Outlined to Cincinnati Exhibitors May 4

By Frank Remnasch

The convention turned itself into a permanent organization, known as the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, elected a president and secretary and appointed a committee of twenty directors, from exhibitors who are to go to New York within three weeks and demand a “show down” from the producer-exhibitor.

We are all at once to buy our pictures from producers who agree to stay out of the theatre business, and who will apply to the Independent Exhibitors' organization, for admission to all producers, the independent producers.

The call for the Convention was sent out by Mr. Sig. Samuels and Mr. W. C. Patterson of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga. About a thousand exhibitors from all over America came together. Few of our laws or understood the motive of the call, and none of us can fully realize its importance without having been present.

The oldtimers could see at once that the largest and most representative gathering in our history of conventions faced Mr. Samuels as he called us to order.

Mr. Patterson immediately read a carefully prepared and most impressive statement of conditions in the Southern Atlantic States, which, when boiled down, summed up the following facts.

The exhibitors in the South woke up one morning and found that a large film company had acquired a chain of theatres, and by this invasion the Southern exhibitors were face to face with the menace of Producer-Exhibition. Competition.

The next move of the invader was an attack by him on all independent exhibitors. Their methods were most insidious and desirable. With their plans they forced one city after another to give up to them, just like an invading army.

By bluff and bluff the courage of the Independent Exhibitor is undermined, and he is faced by the alternative of selling his theatre to this Wall Street Monopoly or have Wall Street Monopoly or have Wall Street for his competition. Perhaps he sells out, or he may be red-blooded and decide to fight. If he decides to fight, he fights big odds and unfair competition of the worst kind.

The Monopoly puts in big attractions, adds special music, and, to cap the climax, they lower the admission prices in that city until the independent exhibitor cannot stand up under the strain.

Mr. Patterson stated that no exhibitor could battle against this Film Trust alone, and that their only purpose in calling the convention was to ask every exhibitor in America to join the South and help whip the invader and force them to get out of the theatre business.

The convention was then held, and by unanimous vote decided to stand together on the following lines:

1st. Producers must take one side of the road, and exhibitors the other. No one can be both exhibitor and producer.

2nd. Our only means of defense in this case is to apply force, therefore every exhibitor agreed to immediately cancel out all film service with producers who own or operate theatres, and to forever, and for all times hereafter contract only for service with independent producers, who are not in the theatre business.

In a general way, the means of defense are as follows: No matter what your relations, whether pleasant or otherwise, you are to cancel this monopoly service at once. Small town exhibitors have a particular advantage, and can insist wonderfully. "Stop your service, and Wall Street money will stop flowing against us."

You may be asked to share service with your local independent exhibitor who has been using producer-exhibitor service.

You may play a few pictures from your independent producer with which you are not familiar. Put on a little extra music with these pictures, present them better, and you will find results very gratifying. If you cannot get enough features put on a short subject or serial program. Seller an extra money you have with any independent producer and take their pictures exclusively.

Our pledge to our Southern exhibitors is: To stand by and help them to the last ditch.

Every independent producer faces the fact: "If the monopoly secures control of a large number of theatres, the independent producer is ruined, because there will be no market for his product.

It is, perhaps, this glaring fact that caused Universal Film Company, First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Louis J. Selznick, Select, Pathe, Vitagraph, Robertson-Cole, Celebrated Players and many smaller producers to come on the floor of the convention and offer aid, co-operation, and assistance to the independent exhibitors. These men pledged us to stay out of the theatre business, and therefore it is only fair that every other producer be forced to stand in the same light, or we cannot do business with them.

Never in the history of the industry has anything so important happened.

The result of this movement will be a greater and better motion picture. You must have noted that it seems the pictures of the producer-exhibitor are of a poorer quality each release, and that the pictures of independent producers are growing better and better. This is natural, because as was said in the convention: "Art is individual; Art is independent; Art must not be chained, or it will die."

Committee Favors Censoring Legislation Bay State's Ways and Means Committee Reports Favorably on Modified Bill

The decision of the members of the committee on ways and means of the State Senate, which was headed by Representative Lyman, of Easthampton, comes after a long hard-fought battle on the part of members of the motion picture industry throughout the State of Massachusetts and hundreds of proponents of the bill, characterized by one Boston newspaper as one form of "cranks."

Bitter controversy resulted at the hearing given the bill, after it was reported favorably by the committee on mercantile affairs of the House late in February of this year. Arguments denouncing the bill, were presented by opponents.

The cost of the project and the expense upon the State was clearly defined by Representative John I. Fitzgerald, who declared that it would cost $100,000 a year.

First National Survey to Appear in News

MOTION PICTURE NEWS has arranged with First National Exhibitors' Circuit for the exclusive publication of the results of an investigation First National has made, in every territory, of theater construction and remodeling to be done this summer. The first installment will be published next week.

The report includes information about new theaters now being started, or for which plans have been let, and of improvements, enlargements and generally important changes to be made in present theater properties.

The resume will be published as a series of articles, each one relating to a separate section of the country, and each one will contain invaluable data for producers, distributors and manufacturers of accessories, in addition to providing all exhibitors with a comprehensive indication of the trend toward a new era of theater construction.

First National made the survey as an important part of the information necessary to the inauguration of its subscription plan for the exhibitors who have not yet subscribed. In order to fill contracts with the independent stars and producers with whom it has contracts of the increased theater market, that will be equipped, early in the fall, to absorb, on a greater scale than ever before, the new standards of production values now being established as guides to summer activity in the studios.

In regards to the percentage system, I know of no subject on which the exhibitors of the country have ever been more united. From my correspondence, from many personal visits and from other sources, I know that the exhibitors are determined to resist to the utmost the attempt to force percentage terms upon them. They feel that they should not be content merely with offering passive resistance to this system. Some definite and affirmative action must be taken as quickly as possible after the convention opens to make percentage looking impossible.

The time to kill the forced percentage-booking methods is now, and it was through our own indifference and lack of resistance that the system was fostered upon us. We are now in great straits to find a remedy. Let us not repeat this mistake with the fight against percentage-booking. If we make an end of the forces that seem to be behind this drive, we won’t be compelled later on to lose a lot of time and money in finding a remedy. As a rule, remedies are late anyway.

The convention, I think, will also go on record in opposing the large profits and the influence now enjoyed by promoters. These promoters have no thought for the good of the industry. They take all they can out of the sound values of the industry, merely to fill their pockets and cash nothing as to how it may affect the theatre. Exhibitors have suffered no less than the public from these promoters, who thrive on chaotic and unsound business conditions. If any of these promoters have ever created any honest and lasting value for either producer or exhibitor, it must have escaped general attention.

We have made no attempts to invade either the producing or distributing field. We have bought no studios, bargained for no stars, acquired no exchanges. We have sought no money in Wall Street to promote new producing concerns to compete with any of those now existing. We have been entirely satisfied to devote ourselves to the building up of our theatres, to improvement in our showmanship and to the development of our patronage. We were not permitted to pursue our legitimate calling in peace and contentment. On all sides we encountered attempts to dictate to us in the conducting of our business and the management of our property. Arbitrary and exorbitant film rentals were demanded and our refusal or even hesitancy to pay them were met with threats of competition or the actual building of new competitive theatres. All the huge load of expensive salaries for stars and the rewards given to promoters, the penalties of overcapitalization, all the sins of extravagance, incompetence or wastefulness, were thrown

Sub-Franchising Plan Gets Under Way
First National Convention Results in Launching of New Distributing System

CONCLUSION of the joint conventions of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and First National Exhibitors' Council at the Hotel Congress, Chicago, last Thursday, marked the formal launching of the wide-franchising plan wherein approximately 6,500 independently owned and independently operated theatres will share in the utilization of the protective and guaranteed production source benefit upon which the plan is based.

Sub-franchising applications from almost 90 per cent of the independent exhibitors who had responded to the call by Willard Patterson of Atlanta for a national mass meeting were filed with the various First National exchange managers and members before the Council's sessions were finally adjourned on Friday evening.

Radical and extensive changes in the present system of film distribution are expected by exhibitor members of First National as the result of the sub-franchising plan. Speeches by Council officials treated at length on the obvious and certain reforms that would necessarily follow in the wake of the efforts seeking to unite approximately 6,500 theatres in one co-operative organization which seeks direct contact with independent producers as its source of film supply.

Members of the Executive Committee for Associated First National Pictures pointed out to the independent exhibitors who sought information during the convention, that the sub-franchising plan is not a new and different system than any which has before been in vogue. Instead, according to members of the committee, the sub-franchise is an extension to other independent exhibitors of the cooperative, protective and economic phases of the organization structure on which First National Exhibitors' Circuit was started three years ago and on which it has steadily continued to bridge and narrow the gap between independent exhibitors and independent producers.

"For three years," explained the committee chairman, "First National members have provided their respective independent circuits with quality entertainment by co-operative buying from independent stars and producers. They took a tremendous financial risk in getting away from old methods and driving straight at the producer monopoly with its arbitrary booking methods and attendant impositions on all exhibitors. They succeeded because they pooled their purchasing interests and thus the strength and resources and exhibition facilities necessary to upset program booking. Now, they are extending the same plan which won against the program, so that independent exhibitors in every territory may guarantee to themselves a definite and sufficient source of releases to meet any organized theatre competition from other than independent producers and with arrangements wherein they pay a fixed percentage of the total cost of every release. In other words, the rental values are established at the studio rather than in the exchange.

"Through the stock equity which each enfranchised exhibitor will have in the exchange for his territory, he is guaranteed against the film costs in excess of the fair valuation by the dividends which the stockholding will bring from the disbursement of any profits earned by the exchange over and above its normal operating expense. This is mutualization born of a year of intensive study by exhibitors, each of whom realized that his future is a theatre operator would be determined in every detail by the caution, the fairness and absolute justice of the terms which they dictated and to which they, as dictators, are now subscribing as franchise owners in direct partnership with 6,500 other theatres."

Territorial awards of sub-franchises started this week upon the return of the First National exchange managers to their respective offices. It is predicted by Council officials that at least three months will be needed to complete the allotment. By fall it was said First National attractions will be pledged by sub-franchises to at least 6,000 theatres.

The Executive Committee for Associated First National Pictures, composed of X. H. Gordon of Boston, Moe Mark of New York and H. O. Schallie of Philadelphia, will devote practically all of its time during the summer to the consideration and granting of applications for sub-franchises. Schedules of percentage ratings of every theatre in each territory were given to the exchange managers at the concluding session of the First National Sales Club. In fixing the individual theatre percentages, the statistical division of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee for First National eliminated in many instances the matter of population as a determining factor and considered the more conclusive conditions of industrial advantages, prevailing average film costs for individual houses booking on a flat rental basis in the past, competition and the strategic location of the theatres.

Japanese Company Sends Representative
Agent of New $5,000,000 Company Will Remain in New York to Buy Films

Akiyama, American representative of the International Motion Picture Co., Ltd., of Japan, has arrived in New York, and is at present making his headquarters at the Langacre Hotel. He will probably remain in New York for a period of two years, during which time he will act as exclusive buyer of films and other necessities for the Japanese market. He has been authorized to expend a considerable sum in making purchases for the Japanese company.

The International Motion Picture Co., Ltd., was organized a short time ago and capitalized at ten million yen, which is equivalent to five million dollars in United States money. This company, which is reported to be easily the largest on the island, will take steps immediately to provide better and more modern pictures for the Japanese public.

Ten years ago, when a motion picture organization was incorporated in Japan with a capital of 30,000 yen, many people were amazed at this amount of money being ventured to finance such an untried scheme. The number of movie fans on the island were constantly increasing, however, as in other countries, and were becoming dissatisfied with the pictures as they were at that time being presented in Japan. The motion picture industry was then, and has been until recently, at a stand still. The people are now seeking better service in the theatres, and above all they are eager to enjoy better pictures produced under more satisfactory conditions than have previously obtained.

The taste of the Japanese film has changed so much in the past decade that he no longer is satisfied with the picture examined merely with exaggerated action. Japan is now wide-awake, careful and discriminating in criticizing her pictures.

The progress of the industry in Japan is due in great part to Kisabura Kobayashi, said to be the most enterprising showman now exhibiting pictures on the island. The Japanese Motion Picture Co., Ltd., which was so hastily and successfully organized with its enormous capital, has completely absorbed the Natural Color Cinema, Ltd., of Tokio, known as Tenkatsu Kaisha. This means that the new organization has under its control nearly one-third of the picture theatres now in existence in the Empire.
Realart’s First Conference to Start May 17 in New York
Managers Will Gather in Get-Together and Jubilee Meeting

The first annual conference and get together of the various managers and special representatives of Realart Pictures Corporation is announced to be held at the Hotel Astor on Monday, May 17th, and to last through the week. It will be made a jubilee meeting in keeping with the success of the infant concern in its first year of business.

The twenty-one branch managers of the company will arrive in New York City prior to the conference with exhibitor sentiment on all the live problems of the day. They will start to New York fresh from the field, where they have been actively engaged in Realart’s end-of-season sales campaign to close the first-year’s business with four Mayflower specials and five stars’ productions.

Subjects that will be discussed by the managers include general policies, exploitation of productions, marketing methods, contracts and the problems arising from increased production costs. Exhibitors visited by Realart salesmen have been queried on these and other important subjects and the data collected will be summarized collectively.

The managers will arrive in New York on Sunday, May 16th, and register at the Hotel Astor. The convention will be officially opened Monday morning when Morris Kohn, president of Realart, will welcome the managers. The succeeding sessions will be presided over by J. S. Woody, general manager. The morning sessions will begin at 9:30 and last until 12:30 o’clock. The afternoon sessions will last from 2 o’clock until 5:30.

The following statement was issued by President Kohn in calling the conference:“It is with considerable pride that Realart has issued a call to its managers to gather in New York City for the first annual convention. Succeeding years may bring increased prosperity and wider recognition to the company, but the first year, with its struggle to establish and perfect a working organization, will always retain a most vital place in its history.

“Realart has accomplished in the past year, I believe, more than ever has been done before in the history of the industry. The company was organized and twenty-one branch offices established in a few months. This alone is something of a record. It engaged three well known stars and began to make its own productions, and to market them, in an incredibly short time.

“The success which has accompanied these efforts within six months of actual business is well known in the trade. To have attained the pinnacle in producing quality pictures at the very outset constitutes an achievement of no little consequence. In the way of physical acquisitions, the company has been extremely fortunate. Last fall we obtained the fourth floor of the Winfield Building at 400 Fifth Avenue for our home offices. The location in this new and modern building has been found ideal. During the year we acquired the old Morosco Studios in Hollywood and renamed them the Realart Studios. These studios represent the last word in picture production. They will accommodate from three to five companies at one time and have unexcelled physical equipment. Possession of these is a guarantee of the maintenance of the Realart standard of picture production. We have also fortified ourselves strongly during the year by adding the name of Wanda Hawley to our list of stars.

“As to our organization we have much of which to be proud. In a remarkably short span of time we have brought together a body of men, seasoned and experienced in the motion picture industry. This alone has been a herculean task. The coster of names at the home office and throughout the list of branch managers and the sales force gives eloquent testimony to the success we have attained.

“Naturally we regard this first convention as the biggest and most important step in our developmental program. It is the first opportunity we have had to get together and talk things over. I am sure it is bound to prove an event of no little importance to the trade as a whole.

The Realart field men who will attend the conference are as follows: Melville F. Maxwell, special representative; Joseph L. Marentette, Atlanta; Walter E. Scates, Boston; Henry E. Wilkinson, Buffalo; Harry W. Willard, Chicago; Mark Goldman, Cincinnati; B. H. Kelly, Cleveland; D. J. Callahan, Dallas; Bert R. Latz, Denver; Ralph B. Quive, Detroit; John N. McKeon, Kansas City; Owen E. Wood, Los Angeles; Henry L. Holmader, Minneapolis; Lester Adler, New York; Trudy B. Wildman, New Orleans; Cornelius G. King, Omaha; J. E. Hennessy, Philadelphia; Harry E. Loiz, Pittsfield; Ben F. Simpson, San Francisco; Albert W. Eden, Seattle; Floyd H. Lewis, St. Louis, and William H. Rippard, Washington.
Educational to Operate Own Exchanges
Offices in Twenty-two Centers; Contracts Signed for All But Three Territories

IT'S own exchanges in the twenty-two principal motion-picture centers of the United States will be announced next week by Educational Films Corporation. Contracts have been signed in all but three territories, and these will be closed within the next few days. These statements were authorized this week by E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager.

Details of the exchange system were practically completed during Mr. Hammons' visit to Chicago, since he took advantage of the various meetings there to discuss the details with a number of exhibitors. He found there an unexpectedly strong demand for participation in the Educational plan of distribution with the result that there were many bidders for each of the territories remaining open. The three remaining territories could have been easily closed at that time, but Mr. Hammons preferred to wait upon certain developments in the East, it is stated.

Each one of the exchanges will be directly controlled by Educational, it is explained, and they will handle nothing but short subjects, made and distributed by the parent company. The main organization will be maintained in New York, where Mr. Hammons has been gathering together the men whose association he has desired. Announcement of the home-office organization will probably follow shortly after the list of exchanges, their managers and locations are given.

In this announcement Mr. Hammons called special attention to the high class of men that are associated with the company in the exchange organization.

"We have taken our time," said Mr. Hammons, "in selecting the men who are to be interested in our exchanges, because we wanted to have associated with us people who will be recognized by every exhibitor as representing the best in motion pictures. The selection of mere territorial representatives would have been an easy matter, but our plans have called for far more than merely salaried employees in each of the centers. We have sought to obtain not only men of unquestioned standing in the motion picture world, but we have invited their financial participation in the ownership of the individual exchanges because we believe that such interest would insure their greater interest in sales policies and assure greater cooperation to the exhibitor.

"Educational will control the majority of seats in every one of the exchanges, but we have permitted financial participation up to as much as 40 per cent. Each exchange will be under the direct control of the home office, and every policy must meet the approval of the general management. It can be seen that such a plan invites the cooperation of men who would not be interested in a mere salary arrangement."

"An important part of the plan to us is that these exchange interests will represent a great number of the first-run theatres in the principal cities of the country. In every case the men who are interested in our exchanges have been led to become associated with us because they realize the quality of the material that we will supply.

"All that remains for the completion of our exchange system is the matter of physical arrangements in some of the cities and the signatures of contracts in three territories. These will be closed before the end of the week and we will then be able to tell the exhibitors of the country where they can find the one exchange in their territory dealing in short subjects and of the men with whom they will be doing business."

National Ass'n Promotes Fire Prevention
Report to Fire Protection Convention Held in Chicago Shows Wide Activities

DETAILED information as to what has been accomplished by the motion picture industry in the way of fire prevention was presented to the National Fire Protection Association at its twenty-fourth annual meeting held in Chicago May 4, 5 and 6. This information was contained in a report of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, an associated member of the National Fire Protection Association, which reaffirmed its pledge made at the Ottawa convention a year ago to co-operate in every way to bring about the strict enforcement of fire preventive regulations.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was represented at the convention by J. E. Brulatour, chairman of the Committee on Fire Prevention Regulations; Albert de Roode, a member of the committee, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary. The report was submitted by Mr. Elliott, and according to advices received from Chicago, was one of the most interesting and comprehensive documents presented. It was favorably commented on by delegates, representing all branches of trade and industry, and many public officials and others identified with fire prevention work.

The report dealt with three phases of activity of the National Association. The first referred to the educational campaign carried on for several years by the Fire Prevention Regulations Committee, which has issued bulletins on the proper handling of films with the purpose of reducing the fire hazard.

The second phase dealt with inspection. The third feature of the report dealt with the constructive activity of the National Association, which included not alone the improvement of the existing buildings housing exchanges, but the erection of new and adequate buildings complying fully with the fire preventive requirements, recommended by the National Fire Protection Association and adopted by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

Accompanying this part of the report was concrete evidence of the National Association's activity in the way of a photograph of the new film Exchange Building in Kansas City, the first building erected in this country for the exclusive housing of film exchanges. Similarly built buildings are in course of construction in Cleveland, Buffalo, Atlanta and New Haven. Contracts have been let for the construction of a new exchange building in Chicago, and the work will start June 1.
F. P. - Lasky to Produce in India for Far East Distribution

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will shortly begin producing motion-pictures in Bombay for distribution throughout India and other countries of the Far East. This was the message conveyed in a recent statement issued by Adolph Zukor, president of the corporation. This work is to be inaugurated in conjunction with a syndicate of British and Indian bankers. It marks another step in the establishment of foreign producing centers by this powerful American manufacturing organization. The name of the newest subsidiary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Company, Ltd., and it has a paid-in capital of $3,000,000.

Arrangements are being made for the erection of a moviemotion studios and laboratory in Bombay, the principal city of the Indian Empire, where the most-approved American methods of picture production will be introduced by American production experts. Mr. Zukor declared that no limit had been placed on the magnitude of the production activities in India, intimating that there is reason to believe that in the near future the Indian studios under the general supervision of Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players, will be turning out Paramount-Aircraft pictures on the same scale that prevails in the Lasky studios in Hollywood and the new Eastern studio in Long Island City.

Not only will Paramount pictures be produced in a Paramount studio in India, but they also will be distributed through a system of Paramount exchanges, modeled after the efficient exchange system in this country. This Indian distribution system will embrace all of the vast Indian Empire, as well as Persia, the Straits Settlements and other countries in the Far East.

"When one realizes that in the Indian Empire alone," said Mr. Zukor, "there are 400,000,000 people, one can get an idea of the vast possibilities which lie in the production of pictures in India. Paramount pictures, of course, are already being distributed throughout India, as they are in other countries of the world, but we wish to produce pictures which are closer to the thought and lives of the vast Indian people. Producing pictures in this country that will mirror the lives of the people of India is practically impossible. The director and actors have to be on the spot, they must have an insight into the problems of the Indian people—in a word, they must have a better understanding of what the Indian public wants. All this we are confident we can accomplish by establishing a studio in India."

Other advantages are obvious. Paramount pictures made in India will have settings amid scenery that practically has never been brought to the photoplay screen. All of the picturesque life and surroundings of the Indian will form the background for the pictures which we plan to make there."

The production of pictures in India, Mr. Zukor undeniably, is in line with his policy to make Paramount pictures of such a nature that they will cater to the tastes of all countries. In this connection he explained that this was the guiding motive in the establishment of the big Paramount studio in London, which is already in operation under the direction of Jesse L. Lasky.

Mr. Zukor announced that the new studio in Bombay will be started by Frank Meyer, assistant secretary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has been in charge of the construction and real estate division of the company, and Tarkington Baker, who recently formed his own producing organization and who formerly was in charge of the producing activities of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Meyer will erect the laboratory and studio in Bombay and will equip both institutions with the most modern American film producing appurtenances, it is stated. The studio and laboratory will be operated by a staff of American film experts, which will be organized when both plants are ready for actual work.

Mr. Baker, it is understood, will remain in India as general Indian representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with complete charge of the production and distribution activities of the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Company, Ltd.

Meyer and Mr. Baker will leave for India in two or three weeks, as soon as they can wind up their affairs in this country. They will spend some time at the new Famous Players studio in Bombay and also visit Paris, before going direct to Bucharest. As soon as they arrive in India they will begin getting their organization together, and it is expected that the first American picture produced in India will be ready for release next Christmas.

Just as it is Mr. Zukor's intention to have Paramount pictures produced in England distributed also in this country, so the pictures made in India will not only be distributed throughout India but will also be released in this country and in Europe.

Mr. Zukor stated that further important announcements regarding the formation of the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Company, Ltd., would be forthcoming in a few days.

Echoes of the "Windy City" Convention

By Joseph F. Lee

PROBABLY one of the most talked of events of the entire convention was staged Wednesday evening under the personal supervision of H. M. Thomas, president, and the cosponsorship of Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president, the arrangement being made by Adolph Zukor, president, of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Thomas brought his favorite entertainment to the convention, with the result that the costuming and lighting effects were among the finest seen in any convention.

There were a number of conventions being held at the Congress Hotel at the same time; the picture folks were in session. One exhibitor sat in a convention hall for an hour, thinking he was listening to Pearson's talk, but the speaker turned out to be President B. P. Valera and the meeting in session concerned the C. B. I. S. and the public.

During the intermission of Thomas' Historical Pageant and Conclave Lieut. James Anderson sang a ballad, composed by himself and entitled "Out of the Land of Moonshine Makes the Whole World Still." The ballad was written by himself and a good time was enjoyed by all.

Business fell away off the entire week at the Hotel Astor, Nick, the head waiter, was trying to figure out whether to put on Kippur or Holy Week. He sent Tom Boynton a note, stating I had attached a privilege car to the Broadway Limited, and would be there at 9:00. Tom jumped to Pittsburg and asked the boy to have a box, to telephone the boys in Atlanta; but the boy turned out to be President B. P. Valera and the meeting in session concerned the C. B. I. S. and the public.

Elbing Warner was a much interested spectator at the Thomas' affair. It is rumored that he offered Thomas a tidy sum for the title rights of the Pageant and Conclave. Sol Lesser stepped into one of those sea-side restaurants, sat down, and was asked by a waiter what he desired. "What have you got?" queried Sol. "Everything that swims," said the waiter. "Then, if you have ever seen a whale that swims, bring me Annette Kellerman," replied Sol. I purchased the Irish confetti concession (the bridegroom's box) for the Irish Republic meeting, held at the Congress, and it netted me a handsome profit. The Thomas' affair was the song pluggers were much in evidence. One young lady made a deep impression by rendering, "You May Be the World to Your Mother, but You're a Horse's Neck to Me."
Penal Code Amendment
May Soon Be Law

The Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate has made a favorable report on the bill introduced by Congressman Walsh, of Massachusetts, at the request of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which amends the penal code by placing motion picture films in the same classification with books and other written matter. This action means that the bill will soon become a law.

This bill makes it a misdemeanor to ship in interstate commerce or in the United States mail any indelent or informal film, the same as it is a miskade numer to send an indecent book or any printed matter.

By approving this bill Congress supports the contention of the National Association in censorship and other matters that there should be no discrimination between the printed word on paper or parchment or a printed picture on a film and projected on a screen.

The enactment of this law will also be an answer to those persons who are asking for new laws for what they call the "protection" of the screen. Any person exhibiting any indecent or immoral film cannot only be prosecuted under the laws of the state, but if that film is sent in the mail or in interstate commerce there can also be a prosecution in the federal courts.

Paramount - Empress
House Incorrectly Listed

Motion Picture News regrets the insertion of an erroneous statement in the list of admission prices published in a recent issue. The list was submitted by the First National Exhibitors Circuit and was published as stated. A letter received from the Salt Lake City exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation calls attention to the fact that the Paramount-Empress theatre listed as a second run theatre, in reality runs first-run Paramount-Artcraft productions and that the net admission prices are twenty, thirty and forty cents.
Occasionally they scale as high as fifty and seventy-five cents.

Out Illicit Film Men

dustry reports excellent progress in wirpout the illicit film dealers in New

Spokane Exhibitors Rebel at Percentage System

Two Spokane, Wash., exhibitors are up in arms on account of the percentage system. Drs. Clemmer and Lambich and Ray C. Grombacher, managers of these houses, have refused flatly to sign up for the pictures under the new conditions required.
Clemmer advance bookings, which will carry the theater program well into July, show few Paramount pictures, and what few appear, are secured under old contracts, before the percentage basis plan was insisted upon by the Paramount. A motion picture booked from the Seattle house has been here all week in an attempt to do business with the local theaters, but at this date, no agreement had been reached.

"They demand a guarantee which gives them a snug revenue," Dr. Clemmer said.
"If we do a big business, on the percentage basis, they would be profiting by our gain and taking no chances whatsoever."

Ray C. Grombacher, manager of the Liberty, says he is absolutely opposed to percentage bookings. A look at the Cram-er list of pictures booked to carry him through up to July.

"Humoresque" Screened
at New York Hotel

Almost the entire Eastern "Who's Who" in motion pictures turned out on the night of May 4 at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York to witness a private showing of Cosmopolitan Productions' latest offering, "Humoresque." The crowd was so great that even standing room was at a premium. A twenty-piece orchestra, under the direction of George Bymen, expanded the incidental music, and the projection was in charge of Frank Jacobs, Cosmopolitan's projectionist.

Among those present were Daniel Froh-mans, Mr. and Mrs. Elek J. Ludvig, Fannie Hurst, Jacques S. Danielson, Norma
Talmadge, Robert G. Vignola, William Le
Baron, and William Sistrum, Montagu Love, George D. Baker, Albert Capellani, Norman Kerry, Lulu Warrenton, etc.

Fox Publicity Manager
Resigns Position

Louis Kremlin, who for the past nine months has been in charge of production publicity of Fox Film Corporation, has resigned and has left for an extended tour of the United States in the interests of Screeners Service, an organization which serves more than 300 newspapers with a weekly news service of the happenings of the motion picture field.

Cleveland Convention

on our backs until we are beginning to stagger under the burden. Time and time again we have offered to cooperate with producers and distributors, at least in all movements which pertain to the entire industry, such, for instance, as the fight against hostile legislation. What has been the re-\result? At Washington the producers fastened the 5 per cent film rental tax upon us. We cannot pass any part of this tax on to the public, and our friends knew it, but they do not care as long as they themselves remained wholly untouched by taxes.

"In the list of our grievances is the daring and persistent attempt on the part of the producer to prostitute our screens to common advertising even in highly hailed dramatic productions. So far we have been lucky, as we have not been able to stop this abuse entirely. We have no means of knowing what the producer gets by way of contribution towards the cost of his desirable, these highly favored adversisers, but we do know that he makes or tries to make us the dispensers of this profitable advertising.

"A large part of our program at Cleveland will be purely constructive. We want to encourage the independent producer and director. Directors are the creative minds of the industry and furnish the foundational values. We want to encourage these independent producers and directors, and we will leave them in no doubt as to our support.

"I am speaking for my fellow exhibitors when I say that at the Cleveland Convention every exhibitor will be welcome.
We want none but exhibitors—men who are the actual owners of motion picture theatres and who gain their livelihood by means of their theatres and showmanship."

Reformers Seek to Stop
Baltimore Referendum

By filing a petition in the Superior Court for a writ of mandamus to prevent the Supervisors of Elections from making arrangements to submit Sunday movies to a vote at the general election in November, Baltimore reformers carried their fight against Sunday moving pictures into court last Thursday.

It is believed, however, the efforts of the reformers will prove futile. The moving picture men have shown lately that they are determined Sunday movies shall become an actuality and they will put up a stiff fight.

Making the Lobby Display Register Individuality

When it comes to "jazzing" up a lobby with special signs which while shouting for business still retain a spirit of refinement, few managers of the male sex are able to duplicate the work of Emma Cohen, manager of the Casino Theatre of Chicago. On this page is shown the results accomplished for the Casino's engagement of "Paid In Advance."
Picture Is First Run Until Your Patrons Have Seen It

Brooklyn Neighborhood Manager Pays Little Attention to Release Dates

When an exhibitor realizes that a picture is new until his patrons have seen it, he is in a way to make money, according to Leon Victor, manager of the Tuxedo theatre, Borough Park section of Brooklyn, who offers his own box office receipts as proof of the fact that a good picture is a natural attraction many months after its initial release.

Mr. Victor has conducted the theatre on the theory that “nothing pays like the best” and has consistently stuck to the idea of booking nothing but screen successes, no matter how long he has to wait until the rentals come down to a point that he believes he is justified in paying.

“Mr. Victor has conducted the theatre on the theory that “nothing pays like the best” and has consistently stuck to the idea of booking nothing but screen successes, no matter how long he has to wait until the rentals come down to a point that he believes he is justified in paying.

“The first run bug-a-boo is an idol,” says Mr. Victor, “and the trouble is that many owners of small houses, or badly located houses, regard a first or second run as a necessity for success. I felt this to be wrong, and while the Tuxedo is a comfortable little theatre its location is not ideal and competition is strong. I felt that rather than book cheap pictures while they were new on the market, I would wait until the best pictures had come down to the price I could pay.

“The results speak for themselves. The Tuxedo now has a steady, consistent, high class patronage. Good shows always pay. Managers on the speaking stage know this and that is why they strive for successes of the big hit kind. They know that once the reputation of a show is made it will prove a good drawing card every where in the country until the last theatre goes in it has seen the production, whether it is one month or ten years after it has been first produced. The same thing holds true of pictures, and it is this truth that I am turning into money.

“I watch the releases through the medium of trade papers, as closely as if I were conducting a first-run house. As soon as the picture shows me by means of the reviews and various other proofs that it is a good production, I put it in my booking schedule for nine or ten months ahead. Then I forget it. I book from this diary of names, making only as to rentals when the time comes when I have figured that I could afford it, I book it, and the money I save on rentals put into exploitation. I exploit them for new pictures, which they really are; new to my patrons no matter how long they have been known to the movie world at large. I am not interested in attracting Broadway attention, my interest is in my own patronage.

“Sometimes I will make a special effort to get a picture on certain dates, although usually it makes no difference to me as to when I get them. The desire for special dates occurs, however, whenever there is a picture by a star who is being exploited by the big houses at the time when I am ready for an old picture. This week, I ran ‘Her Kingdom of Dreams,’ starring Anita Stewart, and I booked it especially for this week because the Brooklyn Strand was running her latest release, “The Fighting Shepherdess.”

“The argument that I could do more business if I booked them earlier has no weight with me. ‘Her Kingdom of Dreams’ did capacity business at the Tuxedo, and therefore it couldn’t have done more no matter when I had run it. The result is I have a profit due to the difference in rentals, which I could not have had earlier. My patrons have seen a good picture, and it wouldn’t have pleased them any more a year ago than it did this week. Naturally I have the ambition to own a house large enough to pay for a first-run policy, but until that time comes I am content to pay on the policy of ‘Nothing but good pictures, whenever I can get them’.

Malaney Has Faith in Good Exploitation

Manager of Loew’s Cleveland Theatres Displays Sound Exhibitor Philosophy

With an abundance of sound exhibitor philosophy on exploitation, backed up by a campaign that brought record box office receipts, the story of the latest promotion campaign on the part of M. A. Malaney, publicity representative for Loew’s Cleveland theatres, holds a unique interest for showmen.

This effort that resulted in such a crowning vindication of an exhibitor’s unqualified faith in exploitation, was directed in the interests of “The Greatest Question.”

Mr. Malaney began his campaign a week in advance of the first showing with teaser ads asking “What is the greatest question?” and “Would you sleep in a graveyard?” The teasers at the outset were small. As the week progressed, he gradually increased the size of each ad until, on the Sunday of the initial showing, half-page ads were used.

Throughout the campaign, Malaney lent a uniformity to his ads by having a large question mark in the center of every ad. About this in some fashion was always written. “D. W. Griffith’s ‘The Greatest Question’"

"The first thing to be noticed about our advertising in behalf of ‘The Greatest Question’ was the fact that it carried a somewhat vague and tangled aspect. Of course, this was intentional. We wanted the mystery of the picture and the depth and uncertainty of the subjects it dealt with to be so depicted in our advertising. The feather-edge arrangement of our shadowy question mark and its accompanying word matter carried this effect.”

In writing his ads, Malaney, for one of the few times in his career, divided his line of attack by featuring D. W. Griffith and that producer’s eminence in conjunction with the appealing subject around which the picture was written.

“When you can talk about something already known to the reader, the battle’s won,” said Mr. Malaney. “He convinces himself as he reads. His attitude isn’t one of ‘I’m from Missouri—you’ve got to show me,’ but it’s rather the attitude of, ‘Why, certainly that must be true. It stacks up well with everything known of the subject,’” said Mr. Malaney.

One of Mr. Malaney’s ads read, “Plain human beings fighting the battles of life in their own way. Picturing their virtues and frailties so graphically that you will laugh and cry with them, hate and love with them— as your emotions react to Griffith’s masterly interpretation of humanity’s madding at what life really is! The story is brilliantly dramatic, excellently acted and produced with the skill that only this great director knows.”

Mr. Malaney took advantage of the present great interest in spiritualistic matters and did not fail to collect in full on the interest stirred up in the hereafter by the recent lecture tour of Sir Oliver Lodge and the many current books on the subject.

Another ad read, “Is there life after death? This question is now being widely discussed throughout the world. The master of the motion picture has produced a wonderful drama into which he has woven this question.”

Mr. Malaney also took pains to play up the cast of the picture.
Femininity Falls for the Fashion Shows says Ayres

"All Femininity falls for the fashion shows," says Nick Ayres, publicity director for the California Theatre, San Francisco, and he and Directors Roth and Partington of the Imperial and California ought to know for they have just staged one.

On this page is shown the menu for those who were assembled for the event. Some, eighty or ninety "gorgeous creations" in everything from gowns to "nighties" were shown to the adoring throngs who attended the California during the week of March 22nd. It was a great show all around.
For the Soul of Rafael" Premiere

The premiere of Clara Kimball Young's latest picture "For the Soul of Rafael" was at Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles. The exploitation given the production by manager Sid Grauman has been the talk of the West Coast film metropolis. One of the features of this campaign was a window display (above) showing the style 1850 elaborate wedding gown used by Miss Young in filming the picture. A pleasing prologue of music and dancing was presented (right). On the site of a new building covering a block, a big sign board space was secured. The theatre which is famed for its electric light signs gave the star more than stellar space as will be noted by the cut at the right upper corner.
These Kiddies Were Guests of Strand, New Orleans

All the "Pollyannas" and "Pollyjohny's" of New Orleans were guests of the Strand theatre, one of the Saenger Amusement Company's string recently at a special matinee of "Pollyanna." The New Orleans Item co-operated with the Strand management in giving the children an outing. See opposite page for full details.
Clever Presentation of “Everywoman”

A clever feature in connection with the presentation of “Everywoman” at the Regent theatre, Toronto, during the week of April 12 was a prologue which consisted of the appearance in succession of characterizations of the many principals in the picture. Ten people were used for the portrayal of the picture characters and they were introduced in an interesting fashion. The setting for the prologue consisted of a huge book, eight feet high, from the pages of which stepped the characters. As each page was turned a character emerged from the book. Incidentally, the pages bore designs appropriate to the respective character. When “Everywoman” appears, the decorations on the page consist of forget-me-nots; when “Youth” stepped out, tiny buds were prevalent; roses were shown when “Beauty” appeared, and the page design for “Modesty” consisted of lilies.

A very interesting monologue was recited by “Nobody” during the unfolding of the characters.

John Arthur, musical director of the Regent, was responsible for the success of this episode. Arrangements for the stunt required much careful attention, particularly in choosing the characters for the number and also in choosing the gowns to be similar to those worn in the picture. The musical accompaniment and special lighting effects also required much study.

Furnished Barton, a local dramatic authority, assisted Mr. Arthur in arranging the monologue. Murray Kay, Limited, a local department store, provided the gowns and the mention of this fact was made in the newspaper advertisements, reading notices and in the theatre program.

During the previous week a special musical number at the Regent consisted of an appropriate solo by a talented Toronto vocalist garbed in surplice and cassock, an elaborate church setting with many Easter lilies being used for the purpose.

A Short Subject Which Dominates the Program

THE BOTTOM OF THE WORLD installment one is the top of the list when it comes to enumerating the film achievements to be found at the Broadway houses this week.

In a way this camera man’s record of the trip of Sir Ernest Shackleton in search of the South Pole is only a scenic or educational, just as the spectator is inclined to classify it, but the real beauty shown at the Rivoli theatre this week, projected without music, seems to grip the attention and drive the theme directly to the heart of the drama. The camera work achieved is a revelation for this sort of film. So clear and sharp is it that one views the picture as if looking upon a real landscape, from which many of the views are shot, also most unusual, especially those which show the ENDURANCE crushing its way through the ice as the ship works slowly into the latitude of eternal winter.

Exhibitors who were looking for short subjects that are more fillers can not go amiss on this release, providing the second part lives up to the initial release, which we understand it does.

Toronto Four Hundred a Special Show

Toronto’s “Four Hundred” gathered in the ballroom of the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, for a special “cinema tea” at which was presented for the first time in Canada the special attraction, “Everywoman,” under the auspices of the Famous-Lasky Film Service. The whole proceedings were carried out with eclat and the stunt was arranged in such a “high-toned” manner that it appealed to the best clientele in the city. Special invitations were issued to well-known society and club leaders and the handsome ball-room was tastefully decorated for the occasion. Special orchestration was provided by the lone orchestra of the Regent theatre under the direction of Conductor John Arthur.

The patrons, whose names were published in connection with appropriate advance notices, included Lady Palemon, wife of the president of Toronto University, Lady Whitney, wife of the late Premier of Ontario, Lady Eaton, wife of Canada’s great retail merchant, Mrs. George Nasmith, Mrs. Morgan Dean, Mrs. John Bruce and Mrs. John Garvin, the latter acting as hostess. The society editors of the various Toronto newspapers chronicled the event and the various reviewers waxed enthusiastic over the screening. The stunt was classed as a fine stroke of business and one that will insure great success for the feature when it is released locally in the regular way.

Saenger’s Gives Free Show For Children

In Conjunction With Newspaper “Pollyanna”

Presented as Matinee Attraction

NEW ORLEANS recently learned that she has more “Pollyannas” and “Pollyjohnys” than she thought she had when the Saenger Amusement Company and the New Orleans Item held a special morning matinee, showing Mary Pickford’s “Pollyanna” to thousands of inmates of various Children’s Homes of the city, at the Strand theatre.

Don Philippini and his orchestra played harder and louder and longer for the youngsters than for a regular show. How could they help it? They had to be heard. There was no box on the noise the “Kiddy” could make. It was their party. Mlle. Vogel, Mons. Perisse and Becker, French Opera stars, sang. Mlle. Vogel already was on the regular program for the afternoon and night shows, but when the two men heard the morning matinee was to be solely for the youngsters and that it was free, they threatened to start “one guerre” if they were not allowed to lend their voices for the special showing of “Pollyanna.” Vowing women from the Saenger offices took the place of ushers and did it upon their own initiative. They had seen one of the Saenger-Item or-plans’ shows and they knew what it meant.

Pollyanna was the big hit of the program. The leader of the orchestra, Don Philippini, got a perpetual laugh with every wave of his baton and locks, and one could see every little orphan mentally decide to find a stick and play “Don Philippini” from that day forth. The singers, especially M. Becker in his Mephisto costume with the “Serenade” from Faust brought down the house—the kids evidently decided that he was a cheerful devil. But the roar that went up at Mary Pickford in “Pollyanna” showed that every orphan’s heart was in little Mary’s keeping. They smiled with her smiles, and chuckled at her pranks, and even a subdued sniff echoed at the death scene of Pollyanna’s father. The dogs and cats, the marble game, the fight, the stern aunt, the raid on the apple trees, brought a recurring barrage of orphan chuckles.

Of the New Orleans Railway and Light Company hauled the children to the theatre and back to their institutions. Jacob, Elmers and the Grunewalds Caterers furnished candy and the kiddies were permitted to eat the candy while the show was being given.

Now, where’s the exploitation? The writer doesn’t know and doesn’t care whether it was an exploitation. However, he knows he has an awfully kindle feeling toward the Saenger company, especially when he has been reading articles every day for a week on the front page of the Item and especially when they were written by the best writer the Item has and when every sentence almost pictured the delight those youngsters were going to experience. It made the writer want to see the picture too. When he saw several parents heads of young and able-bodied children going through the busiest part of town, stopping traffic while people gazed at them, he heard more than one pedestrian inquire:

“What’s all the racket about?”

“Oh,” the pedestrian was answered, “that’s the Saenger and Item’s ‘Pollyanna’ party for the orphans.”

“Is that so?” the pedestrian replied with just that tone of voice that meant good, warm, inward, mental satisfaction with Saenger and the Item.

Neighborhood Theatre Exploitation Suggestions

WITH heavy overhead, is it humanly possible for the small-theatre exhibitor—the neighborhood house owner—to make big profits from exploitation? How should he go about it?

These questions have been answered by N. A. Benson, manager of the Stadium theatre, East End of Pittsburgh, Pa., with the exploitation campaigns at great contrast to the general run, with which he has successfully put over special feature attractions recently—and at the same time established a new attraction endurance record for his house.

It is Mr. Benson's belief that rules which hold good for exploitation of motion pictures in large cities' business districts, are not worth considering when applied to small house exploitation. Special lobby displays that are a considerable expense and need many hours of serious preparation, Mr. Benson claims, do not earn the powder to blow them up when used for the neighborhood theatre. He avers that sufficient people do not pass the neighborhood theatre to warrant an expensive lobby display, and that the exhibitor's problem is not to get the people into his theatre while they are passing, but to bring them to the door from their homes.

"Exploitation," argues Mr. Benson, "that reaches all sections of the city is of absolutely no use to my theatre, inasmuch as people in the four corners of the city will not cross town in order to get to my house, when they can stop off in the city and have a varied selection of theatres to choose from. They will not cross town to see some particular attraction that will draw them. In such a case, of course, exploitation may be aimed at the entire population of the city. But in the main I find it without reason to scatter display and advertising matter promiscuously, as it only adds to the expense and does not get the maximum amount of business. It is better I believe, to concentrate publicity on the chosen few people in the immediate vicinity."

Mr. Benson's method of "concentration" is well illustrated by his campaign inaugurated to put over "A Virtuous Vamp." Newspaper publicity was relied on only in a very meager way. Mr. Benson put forth in the advertising columns only the bare bulletin that he ran daily in several East End and local papers. The idea of putting forward a big display advertising campaign did not appeal to him, he states, inasmuch as it violates his method of "concentration."

His system used in putting over "A Virtuous Vamp" concerned an agreement between himself and the proprietors of about half a dozen small drug stores, grocery stores and the like, that were located in the immediate vicinity of his theatre, and which were patronized by the people who patronized his theatre, and made up the great majority of his patronage. Mr. Benson had printed several thousand small heralds, measuring four by three inches, on which were printed these words: "Two of these tickets and twenty-five cents will admit one to the Stadium theatre for "A Virtuous Vamp," with Constance Talmadge, January 3rd."

To the proprietors of each of the stores Mr. Benson presented a thousand or more of these coupons to be distributed during the week before the run of the attraction. With each purchase amounting to 50 cents, one of the coupons was given. The proprietors needed no other urge to grant this favor than to be allowed an advertising slide on the screen of the Stadium during the week in which the coupons were being distributed. On these slides was mentioned the fact that a 50 cent purchase from these stores would avail the purchaser of one coupon which would enable him to see "A Virtuous Vamp"—when coupled with another one and 25 cents in money.

Book Mark Advertises "Pollyanna"

Ernest Stallings, until May 1st manager of the Grand theatre, Washington, Ind., used a very clever advertising idea for "Pollyanna," which cost little and could not fail to have secured results.

The public library in Washington, as in all smaller cities is an institution. Mr. Stallings had a quantity of handy and artistic book marks printed announcing the engagement of "Pollyanna" at the Grand and extolling its merits modestly, and these were placed in every book in the library as they went out to readers.

The printing job was done locally and considerable pains taken to have the book mark look well.

Lloyd's New One Again Gets Over

WHEN all is said and done, friend and foe should take off their hats to Harold Lloyd for the consistent manner in which he comes through with entertaining comedies. "An Eastern Westerner," Lloyd's latest contribution to the silver screen, and the continued attraction of the Broadway picture houses this week, is well up to the standard of the releases of the past year, which, if we remember correctly, makes about an even half dozen in a row without one that "flaps," something which few comedians have ever accomplished.

"An Eastern Westerner," when sliced to the bottom, is really very ordinary as a stunt. But this business of which we can call it new, but for all of this the picture is good entertainment because Lloyd possesses a faculty of adding a new twist to the stuff he pulls and because his work is a little cleaner, more sincere and better handled than we are in the habit of getting in ordinary comedies.

This is the reason that his productions are reaching increased popularity with both the public and the exhibitor. He has established a reputation for never handing out a lemon.

Makes Novel Use of Posters

CHARLES H. RYAN, manager of the Garfield theatre, Chicago, has originated a practical and attractive idea for use of the artistic posters now being put out by the various producing companies and has been utilizing them with good results for some time.

Mr. Ryan in giving the details of his idea said:

"At the Garfield we are equipped in such a way that we can raise our drop curtains and picture screen. A special made-to-order scene drop was hung. This curtain is lowered every show during intermission and remains down during overture and takes the place of a stage setting. It is in front of the picture screen in one particular case. Foullights illuminate this special scene drop curtain. On this curtain there is painted such a sign board as you generally see in your travels in the city along the boulevards or along the roads through the country."

"This sign board is large enough for two six-sheet frames bearing lithographs of the coming attractions. The audience is bound to read the announcements during the intermission. It is better than stereoscopic slides because attractively colored and composed posters make a more definite impression on the mind than a momentarily displayed slide. We also use stereoscopic slides and trailers as they tell another point about the same picture you are advertising. The idea is inexpensive as only the curtain costs money in initial outlay and it lasts as long as your theatre stands up. It is money well spent, an investment that will pay itself back to you in increased business due to its pulling powers. It should undoubtedly prove of special value for those exhibitors who object to the use of six-sheets in the lobby."
Soriero Wins Again With Novelty Presentation Idea

Views of the lobby of the Strand theatre, Lowell, Mass., during the "Bon Marche Strand Easter Bonnet and Parasol" display a full account of which is given on the opposite page.

Managing director Thomas D. Soriero is authority for the statement that this is one of the most successful ideas ever carried out in Lowell as an exploitation stunt for a picture house.
Millinery Display Big Event at Strand Theatre, Lowell

Thos. D. Soriero Turned Holy Week Into a Winner with Exploitation Idea

In conjunction with the beautiful millinery display at the Strand theatre, Lowell, Mass., General Manager Thomas D. Soriero has been conducting a contest which has gained his house wide publicity, particularly among his feminine patrons, by offering as a prize an original model hat and parasol, imported from Paris. The contest has covered a period of four weeks, including Holy week, brought big results, and made that particular week a banner one.

The Paris hat, which was named “The Goldwyn-Pauline Frederick-Bon Marché-Strand Hat,” was formally presented to the winner from the stage of the Strand theatre by Mayor Thompson of Lowell. He also awarded the parasol which matched the hat. The hat, modelled along the latest Paris design, won the instant approval of Mr. Soriero’s women patrons, and the voting was spirited from the beginning of the contest. Although there were a large number of candidates for the prizes the contest soon narrowed down to a dozen favorites; and many of the less fortunate contestants, realizing their hopelessness, pooled their votes, awarding them to the favorites among the leaders.

Although this idea is not new as a publicity winner, it proved immeasurably effective in Lowell. Both the Bon Marché Company, which imported the hat and designed the millinery effects in the lobby display, and the theatre shared equally in the publicity attained. This co-operation, inspired by a mutual desire to further the ends of the theatre and the department store, can be and has been worked out successfully all over the country, and is recommended to managers who desire an inexpensive means of establishing a novel and ever-changing feature for a moving picture theatre which desires to appeal to the imagination of its patrons. In this matter General Manager Soriero has successfully all over the country, and in clothing exhibits, using in most cases mannequins for the display of the garments.

The millinery display, which ran all during the Easter period with a change of hat models each week, was a source of great interest to the women patrons of the Strand. Although the hats were not shown by live models, which is desired if they can be obtained, they were skillfully displayed on gracefully draped stands and in glass cases.

The stage set was also decorated with the latest spring hats, many of them expensive imported models, blending charmingly with the stage set. They gave an atmosphere that was instantly responded to by the patrons, particularly, of course, the women. All these hats were loaned and becomingly draped by the Bon Marché Company, and their managers report that through the publicity medium of the theatre, their sales for the season have been greatly enlarged. Especially so was this true of the higher priced models. According to the store officials they have never sold so many high priced hats as during this season; and as business at the Strand has increased correspondingly the millinery display and hat and parasol contest emphasizes the worth of co-operation as a publicity asset.

This contest has found its way into every home in Lowell, as it appealed to the women in particular. Every woman’s husband, and every girl’s sweetheart was asking their friends in the mills and factories to save their coupons for them. A coupon was given with every ticket purchased at the box office, entitling the holder to a vote in the contest.

Capitol Opera Improved by New Singer

The Capitol opera this week is Wagner’s “Tannhauser,” with Karl Jorn, an addition to the Capitol Stock Company, singing the title role, a fact that adds not a little to the entertainment value of the composition as presented.

If there was to be criticism of the Capitol performances of the classic operas it would be that the principals were not adequate to the roles in the matter of voice accomplishment. Even the uninitiated when listening to opera insist on the singers possessing sufficient ability as vocalists to be easily recognized as artistes. Without this “better than the rest” qualification opera does not impress the layman.

The moral implied in these observations is that if you are using opera as any part of your program, vocally, follow the example of the Capitol in securing the services of Mr. Jorn, and engage singers who can deliver.

Inaugurates “Secret Service” at Chicago

J. L. Friedman, president of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, has organized a secret service department. This novelty in film circles is not formed with any idea of pursuing the demon rum or four per cent, but is to assist in the exploitation of “The Lost City.”

In each of the Chicago theatres where the first episode is playing Mr. Friedman has planted a “scout,” whose duty it is to report exactly what the audience thought and said, and how they acted.
One of the most novel exploitation campaigns of recent months is that with which the Victoria Theatre of Philadelphia put over for its showing of "Water, Water Everywhere." Among the stunts were cardboard "glasses of soda" as is shown in the illustration above that were placed in public places like hotels. Another was the "water bottle" display as shown by the cut to the left. Many other displays were secured all of which featured the catch title of the film and carried a picture of the star.
Royal, Des Moines, Originates Fine Display for “Sex”

B. J. Van Dyke, owner and manager of the Royal Theatre, Des Moines, is the originator of this novelty lobby display advertising for “Sex.” The cutout and special sign over the canopy are unusually effective. Mr. Van Dyke is a firm believer in the effectiveness of a well decorated lobby as a means of attracting extra business. His success with this display for “Sex” was no exception.
Frisco Exhibitor Originates New One

In most cases an exhibitor seldom, if ever, pays very much attention to his single reel subjects (which he calls fillers), and as a consequence, passes up an opportunity, that would bring him unbelievable financial returns and satisfied patronage.

Occasionally, however, an intelligent showman realizes that the single reel of today is past the filler stage, and in most instances can be exploited in such a manner as to furnish the refined and artistic touch necessary to round out a successful program.

George Mann, managing director of the Rialto theatre, San Francisco, and his presentation manager, Ed. H. Smith, have originated a presentation idea in connection with the Pathe Review which looks good to us and which according to information received is proving very successful.

In every Review there is a dancing spectacle or specialty. Mr. Smith conceived the idea of cutting a frame from the film, and from this frame erected a stage set which was an exact facsimile of the one in the Review. He then secured a dancing girl and costumed her exactly as the dancer in the picture.

During the projection of the Review, when the subject interpreting the dance is flashed, up goes the screen and "lo and behold" we have this artistic specialty in reality, set, lighting and dancing girl.

It not only proved a valuable asset to the program, but gives the entire show a touch of class and refinement, which is enthusiastically received by the audience.

The greatest box office value which the Rialto finds in the idea is that a local dancer is secured, which gives the house unlimited possibilities for publicity of a local character.

Delivers Show By Aeroplane

W. R. Sample, owner of the Iris theatre, Casper, Wyoming, wrote a new chapter in motion picture history last week when he chartered an aeroplane to carry a film from Denver, Colorado, to Casper. A spring blizzard had tied up the railroads running into Casper for three days, and Manager Sample found himself in a difficult predicament when there appeared to be no probability of his receiving the print of "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," which he had advertised extensively.

Rather than disappoint his patrons, Manager Sample found a flyer who was willing to make the journey and engaged him to get the film from the Denver exchange. The trip was made successfully over a distance of some 300 miles, and the show at the Iris was staged as promised. Local publicity resulting from Manager Sample's enterprise attracted an increased attendance at the Iris that helped to defray the expense of the costly expedition.

National Census Used For Exploitation Purposes

THE proud city fathers of Fairmont, W. Va., who had cheerfully withstood political campaigns, influenza epidemics, sewer bonds, and all the war-work drives took a new interest in motion pictures with the extraordinary Dixie theatre of that city tied up an exploitation campaign for special feature attractions with the predominating thought regarding Fairmont—the 1920 census. This, in the estimation of the manager of the Dixie, was the greatest question. Which readily brings to the majority of exhibitors the title of the attraction which the Dixie was exploiting—"The Greatest Question."

A perusal of the main striking ad used by the Dixie in this connection throws very little light on what D. W. Griffith's production might include. The largest type and the most prominently displayed in the three column by ten inch ad. used by the Dixie carried this word matter:

"Population of Fairmont As Shown by the 1920 Census Just Completed Is The Greatest Question."

The Dixie explained its reason for attaching so much importance to the population of the city in which it was located by supplementing the sweeping statement with the conditional word matter in smaller type:

"Following the announcement of the Census Bureau that Charleston has a population of 39,608 against Fairmont's 41,454, in John T. Harris' West Virginia Legislative Manual of 50,000 on September 1, 1918."

If the people of Fairmont ever had any doubts as to the extreme local pride of the Dixie management such doubts were expelled by the exploitation used for "The Greatest Question."

Sheet Music as Advertising Medium

As an inexpensive and effective means of exploitation, helpful generally in regard to boosting any particular feature, and directly successful in increasing matinee attendance, Fred Ellis, manager of the Clinton Square theatre, Albany, N. Y., has found the giving away of copies of sheet music to the women attending afternoon performances to be an attractive feature. He uses this method for his Thursday matinees and is well satisfied with the results.

The cover is utilized for the advertising of the feature production to be shown at the theatre the following week, and by checking results as nearly as possible he has found that sheet music is far more effective than a herald or program announcement. He tried it out first as a means of exploiting a special run on the "Back to God's Country," which has a catchy song of the same title dedicated to it. The idea took so effectively that he continued it as a regular feature at his theatre on Thursday afternoons.

Gives Rule for Exploiting Advertising Fund

Answering the perplexing exhibitor question as to the most expedient method of distributing an advertising appropriation for an exploitation campaign comes an experience of the Strand theatre, Tampa, Fla., where a series of experiments has resulted in an almost definite solution. The answer as given from Tampa is:

"Expend one-half to two-thirds of the entire sums in a smash advertisement on the first day of the run. Divide the remainder into equal space allotments to be used on the following days."

The manager of the Strand adds that the experiment has shown that it is almost impossible to fix two or three days of a week into the minds of patrons by advertising.

"A week's run can be advertised successfully in advance," he says, "but a two or three days' showing gains nothing from advance exploitation. Go after them at the time you want them to actually come into your theatre, if you want the best returns from your money."

The six months' experimenting came to an end on April 20th.

Special Prologues Proving Success at Toronto

Handsome prologues have become a regular feature at the Regent theatre, Toronto, and it is a fact that these specialties have become more greatly developed at the Regent than in any other moving picture theatre in Canada. One of the most interesting of these prologues at the Regent was an appropriate playlet, with vocal music, for the presentation of "I'll Be Back" starring Anna Stewart. This consisted of a stable scene with darkies shooting craps and singing—and a real live racehorse.

As a means of exploiting a special run on the "Back to God's Country," which has a catchy song of the same title dedicated to it. The idea took so effectively that he continued it as a regular feature at his theatre on Thursday afternoons.
Kimena Gives "Down on the Farm" Great Send Off

Even for Los Angeles, the presentation and exploitation for "Down on the Farm" was unusually elaborate. On this page (top and bottom) is shown the prologue arranged for the attraction in which domestic animals including the Sennett donkey and dog were given a prominent role. The dog with the "bull" paraded the streets, the banner over the animal's back explaining her mission. Another stunt was to drive "Teddy" the dog about hitched to the small wagon as shown in the illustration. Many other exploitation stunts were successfully put over and the picture is reported to have broken all records of the past two years at this theatre.
Neighborhood Houses Cater to A Different Clientele

Mrs. Kanges Tells Of Her Experiences in Managing Residential Theatre

An interesting and illuminating instance that proves in a reasonable way that a neighborhood theatre and a woman exhibitor make the key combination for success at suburban showmanship, is brought to light through the pronounced success of Mrs. Anita Kanges, manager of the Playhouse theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The following article has been secured exclusively for Motion Picture News in the hope that a great part of Mrs. Kanges' findings in the neighborhood exhibitor field can be applied by other exhibitors in a profit-making way.

"We neighborhood theatres," said Mrs. Kanges, "have learned to cater to a far different clientele than that of the downtown houses. We come to look upon our patrons in a sort of personal interest, after a while becoming to know many of them. I think a neighborhood exhibitor may well be compared to a merchant who delights to build up his trade by taking a personal interest in as many of his customers as possible. There is a note of genuine humanism to be found around a neighborhood motion picture theatre. The humane touch to a neighborhood theatre is what the air of dignity and reserve is to the business-section house. To conduct a "city" theatre with a view to instilling this "humane" touch would be as detrimental as to try placing the dignified air in the small house. This is only one of the reasons why running the two theatres is found to be a trying job. A neighborhood house can not exist when conducted on a starched-collar plane. The people who make up its box office receipts and fill the theatre are not looking for "high" airs when visiting a neighborhood house. They are seeking no formal functions or dress-theatre parties. They are merely looking for a comfortable and enjoyable evening. The more cozy and familiar they find it the oftener they will buy admission tickets. When the neighborhood theatre fails to hold its air of easiness and informality it loses its power of attraction for its steady customers. I have tried out the system and find that it is eminently correct. A neighborhood exhibitor who seems to me to make a success of his house must first get out of his head the idea that he is going to make his house a "Metropolitan" movie house. It can't be done successfully in a neighborhood. That, I believe, is where the majority of new neighborhood exhibitors make fatal mistakes. I have always maintained and prove do, that a neighborhood theatre can be made to pay and make good money for its operator if handled in the correct way. I believe that there is just as big a neighborhood field as there is a downtown field and have never been able to understand why it has never been properly developed.

"As I have previously said, the two theatres must cater to two different classes of people—those seeking a more dignified and formal entertainment, and those seeking a comfortable, homelike, informal diversion. In the second place, a neighborhood theatre is forced to exist without half the exploitation and newspaper advertising that a downtown theatre can put forth. Whatever advertising and display exploitation that the neighborhood theatre does must be done on a highly conservative scale—else the exhibitor will find that 'everything is going out and nothing is coming in.' The neighborhood theatre must be run on a more conservative scale because it does not play the first run attractions—it does not play its attractions for such extensive runs—and it does not play to as many people as does the downtown theatre. I take it for granted that the neighborhood theatre is of the usual size—which seats about fifty per cent of what the downtown theatre will seat. In a week a neighborhood theatre—even if it happens to be a high paying one—can never show a fourth of the box office receipts of the general run of downtown theatres. Under these circumstances—which are without a doubt absolute fact—how can an exhibitor expect a neighborhood house to be guided by the policies of the down-town theatres? "I have said that the smaller theatre can not exist under down-town theatre policies. I have found many methods that can and should be substituted for down-town theatre policies. The first I mentioned is the human touch. This can be given the theatre in many ways. One of the most effective ways for keeping down the 'formal' atmosphere around the neighborhood house is to forsake all the 'pet exhibitor hobbies' that seek to make the house 'metropolitan.' Ushers in neighborhood theatres are the first things that should be done away with or minimized. In the first place, there is no need for an abundance of them, as the theatre does not seat a great multitude of people and anyone entering while the attraction is in progress is fully capable of finding his own seat without the aid of attendants.

"There should be no long drawn out program of news reel—comedy and feature. A neighborhood exhibitor must keep in mind the fact that his patrons have attended not for the purpose of spending the night—but to see whatever feature attraction he is presenting. I have found that on a few special featurest I have been able to cut out every part of the program that was not essential—using only the feature. The star is the thing at the neighborhood house and the number of reels is of no importance.

"I have found that in practically every instance when I have shown special features I have been able to cancel all other side attractions. I have never yet heard my patrons knock the system. I take it for 'then that it suits them.'

"The neighborhood exhibitor may further be able to bring in the informal air by appearing himself in the lobby of his theatre—often speaking or nodding to his patrons. Many successful neighborhood exhibitors that I know of go to the extent of falsing tickets themselves (when they have a man hired for that purpose), just for the privilege of being able to say a word or nod pleasantly to the patron as he enters the theatre.

"This method may seem 'small time' to some down-town exhibitors, but to one who has had experience in successfully conducting a neighborhood house it will immediately be recognized as one of the very things that brought about a success. I maintain that nothing is 'small time' as long as it helps build up a business."
Stage Settings Feature of Quimby's Presentations

(Above)
The atmosphere of the forest pervaded the setting used for Wally Reid's "The Valley of the Gnome".

(Right)
This was the Strand's setting for the prologue number in connection with the showing of "The Egg Crock Wallet." Mr. Quimby is a firm believer in the value of the stage setting not only from the angle that it helps put the picture over but also that it is the best of exploitation.
How Miss Miles Got Some "Art" For Her Story.

No, impetuous exhibitor, this is not a new accessory—it's not an animated one-sheet! So stand back and listen!

Here's a little idea that Accessory Manager Charles Behlen of the Cincinnati Exchange, Famous Players-Lasky, used in getting some newspaper publicity for his department in connection with the removal of the exchange to the new headquarters in the Paramount Building, Pioneer and Broadway, Cincinnati. And a lot of exhibitors may pick up a little extra publicity if they want to duplicate the stunt.

Miss Myrtle Miles, photoplay editor of the Cincinnati Times-Star, wanted some "art" to illustrate her story about the new Paramount Film Exchange Building. Accessory Manager Behlen framed the "animated poster"—but warns exhibitors that he can not furnish a live and pretty girl with every accessory order. Miss Amelia Valeric of the Paramount Aircraft office was selected to peep through the Dorothy Dalton one-sheet. DeMille might have posed the picture a little more accurately, physiologically speaking—but what of that?

Another photograph in the group used by the Times-Star was the one above with a little "story" telling how Fatty Arbuckle reaches Cincinnati film fans in the little (2-reel) film can, while demure, little Marguerite Clark arrives in the big (7-reel) can. Just a little illustration in contrast. This would make a good ballyhoo in front of your theatre when you play Fatty Arbuckle on your bill the next time.

Contest for "River's End" Gets Attention

An exploitation campaign designed to impress the title of an attraction and the whereabouts of its showing has just been completed with pronounced success by Proctor's theatre, Plainfield, N. J., and after a fashion that will merit emulation by other exhibitors.

The campaign opened with an announcement in the Plainfield Courier-News stating that Proctor's theatre would award ten prizes to those contestants who could make the most words out of the letters contained in "The River's End," at Proctor's theatre." Arrangements were made by the Edward A. Lang Stationery Store to provide a window display of the words submitted by contestants.

The list of prizes consisted of:
First prize, season pass for two people for one year; second prize, season pass for two people for ten months; third prize, season pass for two people for nine months; fourth prize, season pass for two people for eight months; fifth prize, season pass for two people for seven months. The other prizes offered seats for two people decreasing one month for each succeeding prize.

Fatty Arbuckle as he appeared as an exponent of "art"

And by the time several thousand persons of Plainfield had racked their brains to find out how many words could be made from the information that "The River's End" was at Proctor's theatre, they were quite anxious to know what it was all about and the showing of this attraction was unusually well impressed upon everyone.

Theatre and Newspaper Run Successful Contest

The Cleveland Plain-Dealer and the Standard theatre of Cleveland are putting over a contest in the interests of "A Modern Salome" which, while entirely separate from the National event, is modeled somewhat along the same lines.

Fifty dollars in cold cash goes to the winner of the first prize. The other prizes consist of passes for various time periods. Second prize draws a season pass. The next twenty winners get a pair of seats for twenty consecutive weeks. The next ten are free to accept the courtesy of the house for ten weeks, and the last five get passes for five weeks.

It wasn't hard to answer the questions. All you had to do was attend the show to collect the necessary data. Here is the questionnaire that Manager Tom Carroll of the Standard put up to the Cleveland fans to answer:

1. Who was Salome in biblical history, and what did she do?
2. What was the strongest dramatic situation in the plot of "A Modern Salome" and how many different gowns does Hope Hampton appear in?
3. What is the lesson taught by the story of "A Modern Salome"?
4. Write a criticism of "A Modern Salome" in not more than 200 words.

The only conditions stipulated in the contest are brevity and honesty.
Three Distinct Innovations in Artistic Decoration

(Right)
Novel and effective lobby display originated by the Utopia theatre of Painesville, Ohio, for the engagement of "Shore Acres." Note the practical lighthouse built in the corner of the lobby.

(Left)
Stage setting by Shirley Shreeves for a prologue number presented by the Odeon theatre, Barberton, Ohio, for "The Fall of Babylon." The dancer in the center is Mlle. Stolba an artist of reputation. The prologue number was artistically lit and added greatly to the presentation of the feature, besides being good exploitation.

(Right)
Lobby display in use for "The Lost Battalion" engagement in New York state where the film is being shown as a road attraction. Twelve ex-soldiers of musical ability are also with the show and present a musical performance in conjunction with the film called "The Jazzophiends." On the day of the opening the band gives a street parade and on the inside are featured in a twenty-five minute concert. Each player is an expert in from five to seven different instruments. The band and the exploitation have proven unusually effective, many box office records having been broken in various parts of the state.
The illustrations on this page show the elaborate and tasteful lobby display arranged by manager Mike Weimkirch of the Strand theatre, Seattle, for his showing of "In Old Kentucky." At the top is an early morning picture of the lobby, with a good view of the manner in which cutouts were utilized in front of the house. This lower cut gives a good idea of how Manager Weimkirch constructed his beaver board front which encased the usual theatre entrances.

Fred Allen of the Monarch Exchange that the third of the new comedy was the "best of the best." Arrangements have been completed by Manager Allen to boost these popular comedy and series of two real comedians expected to be made shortly by Mr. Cropper's new hit in New York.

At Normal, who has only two years with Mutual, and is one of the most popular picture men in the Chicago territory, will be in charge of a new special short feature department installed by the studio, according to Aaron Negrihy, who states that the growing demand for one and two reel comedies and two reel Westerns has caused him to create a new department to handle this character of pictures.

Saxie Brothers, who are firm believers in the value of live publicity, have employed Ann Mc Nulty for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the publicity for their downtown houses in Milwaukee. It is understood that she will be brought to Milwaukee for a new 2390-seat theatre to be erected by the Sease on the site of the Palace, at a cost of $500,000.

Joseph J. Schwartz, owner of the Kress-Loch theatre, Milwaukee, has recently purchased the Liberty theatre, which will be under the active management of Mrs. Schwartz.

Dr. Sam Atkinson, vice-president and business manager of the Allied Artists Association, made a flying trip to Washington this week where he will endeavor to have some of the extension in regard to motion picture theatre ticket taxes straightened out.

A. S. Kershpatrick of Robertson-Cole, tarryied in Chicago for a couple of days last week on his way from the Pacific Coast to New York. While admitting that business was slow, the unusual news, he kept the lid on it, but imputed that important Robertson-Cole announcements might be expected within a few days.

At Normal, old time Chicago film man, was paying a visit to his old home town last week and was kept busy renewing old friendships. He has been making his headquarters in California.

J. H. Craner and Joe Huber have sold the Dupont and Eola theatres at Galena, Ill., to Messrs. Ward and Weber, who now own both houses in the city.

Illinois exhibitors visiting Chicago last week included Mrs. Sam Schwartz of the local, Peoria; Louis Murphy, Majestic theatre, Spring Valley; D. A. Osgood, Backus; and C. E. Irwin, Irontown theatre, Tilton.

K. Ellis of the Ellis theatre, Hillisboro, is back on the job again after three weeks passed in the hospital following an operation.

The second of the "Billy Whiskers comedies, made under the personal supervision of Harry Spannhall, who is Common Wealth, has been completed and the titles are being made. Mr. Spannhall is now handling the new picture as an improvement upon the Chaplin comedies which created very favorable comment when it was shown in Chicago, but the great some opportunities to build in.

H. H. Hayes is the latest addition to the sales force of the Halbro Musical Instrument Company and Manager Dan W. Burton was kept busy making him familiar with the Fine Arts and Kahlau- ton's conventions in Chicago last week.

"Aabald's Lamp Reel," is the title of one of the handsomest and most interesting booklets ever issued in the interest of a picture concern. It has been put out by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation and contains full of interesting facts in regard to that picture industry, as well as the new corporations, and contains a large number of photographs of studio scenes, films, etc. The publication, which is artistic and clever, is the splendid cover design on the front page that reflects great credit on William M. High, publicity director for Reelcraft Pictures Corporation and is reported to have been responsible for the idea and execution.

Mrs. Sidney Drew lost no time, after arriving in Chicago, in start- ing work on the next of her two concealed shows, starring John Cumber- land. Part of her technical crew, which aided in previous productions of the "After Thirty" tours, also went to Chicago and installed in the Rosamund studio. Mrs. Drew's company is working on a stage adjoinant to that occupied by Miss Brady and her company where work again is proceeding, following the temporary suspension owing to Miss Brady's illness.

"The Virgin of Stamboul" moved from the Playhouse where it had its last run of two weeks, to the Casco for an indefinite run, on May 1st. Manager Letzmann's Universal office reports bookings for this super feature continue to pour in and that all indications are that it will smash all records in the Chicago territory.

Aims to Share Its Success
Robertson-Cole Declares Mutual Progress Is Its Driving Power

THe chief element which has led Robertson-Cole to make its drive for new stars and new attractions is the generous response which has been evidenced to its appearance in the field, and to the presentation of new stars by exhibitors. Back of this is the close cooperation which exists between the Robertson-Cole company and the exhibitor, as is the message conveyed in a statement recently issued from the offices of the Robertson-Cole Company. Every source of the distributing company is being centered on the promotion of combining and making identical so far as possible the interests of the company and the thousands of exhibitors which it serves," continues the statement. "Some months ago Robertson-Cole bought out completely two exchanges which it had been using, so that there might be an unobstructed flow of merchandise from the controls office and the man who plays the pictures.

"This move paid such immediate and liberal dividends that the company now turned its attention concentration upon stars. It has added more new names of stars of acknowledged box office power in the last few months than any other company, and already is reaping the fruits of its enterprise. Always it has had in mind the principle which lauded the success, the element of mutuality, and in the future will stress this even more.

As a part of the general scheme to give the exhibitor every aid, Robertson-Cole is issuing with each picture the most complete advertising and campaign matter ever sent out. One detail of a great publicity scheme is the employment in all its exchanges of a trained publicity director who works under the branch manager, and whose duties consist in giving the exhibitor every possible aid in showing and exploiting all Robertson-Cole pictures."

Early Release for Feature
"Simple Souls," Blanche Sweet Picture, to Be Available May 23

It has been announced by Pathé Exchange, Inc., that "Simple Souls," the latest Blanche Sweet production, will be released on May 23. The production comes as a climax to the remarkable success of the star in "A Woman of Pleasure," "Fighting Crissy" and "The Deadlier Sex."

The appeal of scores of exhibitors for another Sweet production of the caliber of "The Deadlier Sex" made it necessary to advance the date of release on "Simple Souls." The Deadlier Soul started out with a greater number of advance bookings than any other Pathe production of the season, and in every case it met with such favorable widespread approval that exhibitors who played it wrote in asking for the early release of another Blanche Sweet production.

Although the first announcement of the new picture was made but a week ago bookings have started to roll into the Pathe branch offices. The steady increase in the popularity of the star has been measured in the remarkable increase in contracts on each production, and to-day she is playing in as great a number of motion picture houses as any other woman star, according to the Pathe announcement.

In "Simple Souls," Robert Thorburn has again distinguished himself, according to reports. His work in "Fighting Crissy" and "The Deadlier Sex" was exceptional and in this picture it is truly remarkable.

Suggests How to Reduce Costs

A "UNIVERSAL" plan for the practical reduction of film costs without detriment to quality was made public in Los Angeles this week, when Andrew J. Callaghan, head of the film corporation of that name, started "Buddy Love," issued a statement advocating the centralization of independent units in both studio and business branches, in order to cut down the tremendous overhead costs. According to Mr. Callaghan's plan, this would interfere in no way with the business identity of separate organizations, but would apply solely to their physical effects.

"The last few years," says Mr. Callaghan in his statement, "have witnessed a considerable increase in the rental of motion picture films that is due to a corresponding increase in the costs of photography production. However, inflated values in every branch of this industry have been regarded as a natural development of the times. In fact, in many instances they represent a lack of vision on the part of organizations who believe that present day efficiency methods cannot be introduced into the material side of production without injuring the artistic side."

"After considerable study of the general situation in the producing field, I feel justified in presenting for the survey of members of the industry a plan of amalgamation of independent units which will bring about a very big reduction in the costs of making photographs without detriment to either the quality of the films or the identity of the separate organizations. Naturally this will result in a far better way of making pictures."

"The idea is to bring about an immediate cut in overhead costs in the initial stage of groups of independent producers for the purpose of eliminating overlapping expenses. This development has followed in the evolution of every big industry and in our own field there is need for more justice and in some cases we can reduce costs and reduce the amount of work, such as music, without benefit to the artistic."

"Although costs, grouped by independent units, will in some cases come under one roof, there is no way of interfering with individual organizations. The organizations, save in the many cases where work need not be duplicated, will remain substantially intact in the sense that they had joined under one roof and resembled an effective machinery of production."

"The saving that would result from such an arrangement is difficult to determine, although in my opinion the plan I have outlined would result in a modest estimate of the economy on many small items which would bring the saving in the field of production."

"The housing of all the units of a group in one studio will do away with the overlapping of equipment as regards properties, laboratories, costumes and many other items which do not readily suggest themselves to one in New York or Universal, besides which considerable details in the complicated machinery of production."

"Quite apart from the physical effects of the united producing units the group is free in the control of their separate organizations. Their combining under one roof will lead to an increase of productivity and the effect of the Freedom in the purchasing of stories, the hiring of casts and the other details on the artistic side. The big saving in both production, there is no doubt, would come upon the material side, for which there would even be a centralization for the replenishment of supplies."

Allan Dwan to Produce His Own Story

Allan Dwan has returned to his first love in the world of films. He has again become an author. It was by writing a scenario several years ago that Dwan "broke" into the motion picture business. He has since gained fame as a director and producer. His next picture, the sixth production under his contract with Mayflower, which he is to start at once is from his own pen.

Will Rogers Son As Popular as Himself

Will Rogers now has a rival in San Francisco. His "opposition" is none other than the six-year-old son of Jimmy Rogers, who drew as much applause as his dad at a recent "kid" marine staged by Goldwyn's Pictures Corporation at the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco. The attraction was Rogers' latest production, "The Strange Boarder."

"Sex" Will Have Three Weeks Run in Detroit

"Sex," J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glauber production, now registering as its third week in Los Angeles, will be given three weeks' presentation in Detroit beginning May 1. As the result of contracts signed the past week by Charles H. Miles, the big Cleveland and Detroit showman, and Tom Failard, president of the Miles Detroit enterprises.

Saturday Evening Post Stories for Ray

Saturday Evening Post stories are proving to be among the most successful of present day series vehicles as regards entertainment value and drawing power of title, according to Arthur S. Another DeMille Coming

"Something to Think About" to Differ from Previous Pictures

So many false reports and rumors have been circulated regarding "Something to Think About," Cecil B. DeMille's latest special production for Paramount-Artcraft, that the producer has been moved to make a formal statement regarding his latest creation.

"Nothing was said or published regarding 'Something to Think About' during its production simply because I did not wish to confuse this picture with 'Why Change Your Wife?' which had not yet been generally released at that time," states Mr. DeMille. "There was no 'mystery' about 'Something to Think About,' there was nothing in its production work which could not have been made public at any time had it seemed advisable."

Realtor Manager Visits Home Office

Walter E. Scates, manager of the company's Boston office, visited the home offices this week for several days. He came to make arrangements for the premiere of "The Deep Purple," an R. A. Walsh Production, presented by Mayflower Photoplay, at the Park Theatre in Boston during the week of May 2. Mr. Scates reported that the Wanda Hawley campaign for the first picture, "Miss Hobbs," has resulted in a clean-up in Boston territory.

To Install New System of Poster Supply

A new system of poster supply and distribution, which, it is stated, will insure every exhibitor a complete line of new posters at all times, is projected by Universal. It will be installed by Edward Aron, director, district manager for the Western Division, and will be modeled closely upon the system already in use in the Universal's Denver branch.

Producers to Re-Edit Historical Drama

Associated Has “Convention”

One of the most important and significant highlights of the gathering of independent exhibitors at Chicago last week was the informal "convention" of about a dozen of the franchise holders in Associated Exhibitors, Inc. The sessions of the Associated group, while informal, proved to be a pivot around which turned many of the progressive activities of the men whose presence in Chicago resulted in the formation of the Independent Exhibitors of America.

While no official connection with the Associated Exhibitors took official part in the doings of the independent exhibitors’ convention, it was made known to those in Chica- go that Associated Exhibitors, Inc., pledged its support to any plan or organization that is designed to protect exhibitors’ interests. This pledge goes with the exhibitors’ endorsement of co-operative propositions such as is exemplified in Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

"The Associated Exhibitors are heart and soul in accord with any movement or plan that is designed to further the interests of independent exhibitors," stated an announcement, "and for that reason we wish to compliment the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit for the great progress made in their concert and, especially to emphasize the value of franchise protection and benefit offered by First National to independent exhibitors."

The gathering of the Associated men brought to light the fact that the franchise holders in Associated were receiving extraordinary cooperation and pledges of support of the Associated plan from the independent exhibitors throughout their respective territories. Associated franchise holders also stated that keen interest had been expressed in the announcement that Associated sub-franchisees would be available very shortly. The franchise holders say that exhibitors are attracted by the soundness of Associated’s best-nursed promise of 100 per cent protection, 100 per cent pictures, 100 per cent profits and 100 per cent ownership in a purely independent exhibitors’ organization.

According to officials of Associated Exhibitors, some of the biggest exhibitors in the country have devoted nearly a year to the development of their sub-franchise plan. These exhibitors have given their written and personal assurance, guided by good business principles, to its completion. It is stated that the plan is the direct result of the causes that have forced the exhibiting exhibitors of the country to hearken to the organization of beaches and destroy the stability of the independent exhibitors.

Among those who took part in the informal meetings of Associated franchise holders were: I. H. Ruben and M. S. Pinkstein, at Ruben & Pinkstein, Minneapolis; Harry M. Luhm, and Joseph Trzyn, of Luhm & Trzyn, Chicago; John R. Rider, of Eastern Exhibitors; L. E. Lefson, of Cincinnati; C. M. Olsen, of Olsen & Sonnenberg, Indianapolis; J. H. Cooper, of Oklahama City; Thomas A. Crewe, of St. Louis; Charles, O. S.; Saul Hays, Little Rock; Judge Willerson and R. R. Cooper, of Associated Exhibitors, Chattanooga; Joseph Morgan, Washington, D. C.; E. C. Quinley, general manager of Associated, and Phil教育, also of Associated.

Hampton Picture a Big Hit

"Riders of the Dawn" Fills New York Theatre

Unhallowed and unaging save for the opening announcement by W. W. Hodoson, the arrival of the Strand with a formal premiere last week was with an opening day rush that filled the large Broadway playhouse all too small for the throngs.

So taken were President Mr. Mark and Managing Director Jack Eaton that this newly-made Benjamin B. Hampton production, from Zane Grey’s novel, "The Desert of Wheat," had its world premiere at the Strand with a practically sold house last week, and the fact that press material and accessories had not yet been completed, decided to give "Riders of the Dawn" immediate presentation. Additional crowds, eating crowds, and the glowing tributes paid the production by the daily newspaper critics fully vindicated their excellent judgment.

Its triumphant premiere at the Strand heard out the statement of a prominent Eastern exhibitor that "Riders of the Dawn" has the combined ingredients of Benjamin B. Hampton's previous successes, "The Westerner," "Desert Gold," and "The Sheperdess." The eing, acting, situation, faithfulness of scenic effects, action, and a wealth of realism. Recognition of Zane Grey’s story and enve-pulling power was shown conclusively in the tremendous volume of business done by the Hampton organization on its previous Benjamin B. Hampton production, "Desert Gold," but "Riders of the Dawn" to judge by the widespread exhibitor interest gives every promise of eclipsing the mark set by its predecessor which was generally rated as one of the four big pictures of the year. The famous novelist manifestly expresses his own complete satisfaction with the result that the final product was capable of fulfills its promise.

Hollis managers throughout the country will hold trade showings on "Riders of the Dawn" this week. Announcement of its release date will be made next week.

Following are excerpts from the New York daily newspaper reviews:

The Tribune: "The picture is a novel melodrama well acted." The Times: "The thrilling story of the Strand this week might well be called "Riders of the Dawn."" The Sun and Herald: "This photoplay deals with the Northwest grain region vividly and thrillingly, with our enthusiasm for it we recommend it to our readers." The Morning Telegraph: " 'Riders of the Dawn' is an exciting and vivid story."

Fox Chicago Exchange Has New Quarters

The Chicago exchange of the Fox Film Corporation now occupies a new office and warehouse in the Windy City, according to word received at the New York studios. The exchange is now located at 207 South Wabash avenue.
"The Master Mind" to Be First Release

Correcting a previous announcement that Whitman Bennett's first release through First National would be "The Devil's Garden," it is now definitely stated that Mr. Whitman's initial production to be released via First National will be "The Master Mind." This picture will also present Lionel Barrymore in the star role. It is likely, however, says the First National announcement, "that "The Devil's Garden" will be the second feature shown through First National's distributing channels.

"House of Toys" Given Special Art Titles

A special effort has been made by the producers of "The House of Toys," to eliminate as far as possible the sudden change from black to white areas when the titles dawn to illustrations and illustrations to titles. The gradual fading into one another is said to have been accomplished in such a fashion that there will not be the usual dilution and contraction of the pupils of the eye.

"The House of Toys" was produced by the American Film Company and the art work on the titles will, it is claimed, satisfy the insatiable cry for "something new."

Arbuckle Will Star in "Traveling Salesman"

An indication of the big plans which have been made for Roscoe (Patty) Arbuckle under his new contract to make feature comedy productions for Paramount Artcraft was given in the announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, that the fat comedian is to be starred in James Forbes's famous stage success, "The Traveling Salesman."

"The Traveling Salesman" will be directed by Joseph Henabery, who directed Douglas Fairbanks in several of his greatest successes. Mr. Arbuckle is now in the middle of his first feature comedy for Paramount Artcraft, a version of "The Life of the Party," story Irvin S. Cobb wrote.

Stewart Picture Is Begun

Louis B. Mayer Star Starts on Fourth First National Picture

With "In Old Kentucky" still doing big business throughout the country, "The Fighting Shepherds," being released, and "The Yellow HYperion" just completed, Anita Stewart reached another milestone in her Louis B. Mayer-Fifth National Pictures by starting production on "Harriet and the Piper." Mr. Mayer is a firm believer in the picture star, to be given justice on the screen, must be seen in good vehicles. That he has followed this dictum is shown by the above list of releases and the announcement that he controls the screen rights to "Sowing the Wind," "Whirl of Blue Lake Ranch" and other plays and books. Anita Stewart in such stellar vehicles as these makes a combination that is unbeatable. In order to give the proper amount of time to each production and to avoid the little quickens that comes from rushing a picture, she is only making four attractions a year. And four attractions, with each in a special effort, is a worth while achievement.

Previous to shipping "The Yellow HYperion" to the west coast, Louis B. Mayer showed the picture to a group of the foremost exhibitors on the coast. They all declared it to be much more than "In Old Kentucky."

Following "Harriet and the Piper," Miss Stewart will complete her working year with "Sowing the Wind." She will then take an extended vacation and return to the Mayer studio in the fall.

"The Silent Barrier" Now Being Titled for Early Trade Showing

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's additions to Rex Beach's special production, "The Silver Horde," to be shown at the Capitol Theatre, New York, the week of May 9th, is in full swing.

Window displays have been installed in many stores in different parts of the city, and choice locations are being secured for the striking "Silver Horde" paper. In all there will be approximately 1,000 boards.

The ingenious lobby and window display is a mechanical arrangement that represents a horse of fish caught in a net. A play of colored lights on the silver bodies of the fish, so arranged that they are moved by a breeze blowing through the net, gives a brilliant appearance to the numbered display. It occupies a conspicuous position in the lobby of the Capitol.

Arrangements are being made with the publicity department of "The Silver Horde" in novel form, to ship books to a long list of drug and stationery stores, where they will be used in a window display. The active cooperation of book dealers in pushing the sale of the book in connection with advertising of the New York run of the film, has been secured. Co-operative advertising is being arranged with dealers whose goods make a tie-up campaign feasible.

The exploitation campaign is being planned and carried out by Howard Dieter, manager of publicity for Goldwyn, and Gladys Brightman, manager of the exploitation department.

Goldwyn to Distribute "Return of Tarzan"

"The Return of Tarzan," a picturization of Edgar Rice Burroughs' famous book, produced by the Numa Pictures Corporation, will be handled as a special by Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, according to an announcement received from the home office of Goldwyn this week. The picture is now undergoing a final editing preparatory to its release, backed by a heavy exploitation campaign.

The cast includes Gene Pollard, playing Tarzan; George Romaine, Franklin B. Cotes, Armand Cortez, Estelle Taylor, Betty Turner, and Donna Pepita Ramirez.

Western Series Will Be Made by Pathé

Acting on an expression of opinion from exhibitors in all parts of the country to the effect that there is a great demand for the part of the publie-to-day for motion pictures of the great outdoors Pathé Exchange, Inc., will release beginning July 11 a series of two-reel Western outdoor pictures featuring Young Buffalo in the series. The pictures have all been made in the Canadian Northwest and in the lumberlands and are in settings of great mountains, streams, and the deep great forests where giant lumberman live their primitive existence. There are five pictures in the series.

New Story is Selected for Priscilla Dean

"A Cat That Walked Alone," an original screen story in a prologue and four parts by John Colton, has been selected as the next starring vehicle for Priscilla Dean, announces Universal. It is described as a story of an English earl's daughter, a woman of fiery temperament, whose escapades are the talk of British society. Todd Browning will direct the new picture, the production of which will start without delay.

Van Loan Writes Story for Hope Hampton

For her second production, to follow "The Return of Tarzan," Hope Hampton has just bought a new story by H. H. Van Loan. This gifted author, who for several years has been writing for the best known of the picture stars, and whose latest screen story is "The Man Who Married a Mummy," has turned out a scenario for Miss Hampton which he declares is by far the most worth-while plot he has ever put on paper.

Julia Burnham Is Made Metro Writer

Julia Burnham, who in her two and a half years as a scenario writer has contributed no less than seventeen pictures to the screen, is the latest addition to the scenario staff at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first Street. Miss Burnham's first script for Metro is "The Marriages of Mayfair," which she adapted from the Drury Lane melodrama by Cecil Raleigh.
Big Future Predicted
For Pathe "Find"

A brand new luminary is approaching the film firmament according to the calculations of George B. Seitz and others connected with the production of Pathe serials, who have given such enthusiastic accounts of the talents and beauty of Lucille Lennox, a winner in a recent beauty contest with no previous stage or screen experience, to Paul Brunel, that the vice-president and general manager of Pathe has signed her to a contract to play parts in serials.

Miss Lennox is now doing a part in the serial "Velvet Fingers," which Mr. Seitz is producing in the New York studio, and the agreement gives Pathe a call on her services for a considerable time to come. She is one of the four winners on the "Pame and Fortune contest" conducted last fall by Motion Picture Magazine.

New Novel and Drama Offered to Producers

The first literary offering of the Authors Studio Screen Plays, Inc., to motion picture producers is "The Trap," from the pen of Maximilian Foster. This story has been running in "Hollywood Magazine" and will be published in the fall by D. Appleton & Company.

Another offering of the company is "The Fallen Idol," a society drama by Guy Bolton. This playwright has been responsible for "Adam and Eva," "The Riviera Girl," "Have a Heart," "Miss Springtime," "Polly with a Past," and many others. It is believed that motion picture producers will welcome this offering from such a literary genius and playwright as Guy Bolton.

Next Kerrigan Picture to be Ready Soon

The W. W. Hodgkinson Corporation announces for late May release the seventh in J. Warren Kerrigan's series of Robert Bronston productions, "No. 99" prints of which were received this week from the Bronston Studios, Los Angeles. Kerrigan is supported in this production by a splendid cast of players, notably, Franz Brouette, Eunice King, John Stepling, Lilie Leslie and Roy Ladlaw. Jack Cunningham is responsible for the screen adaptation of the Wyndham Martyn serial.

Lloyd's Second Series Brings Bookings

Reaping the benefit of the marked success of the first Lloyd two-reelers, Pathe announces an exhibitors book the series. Exhibitors who ordered on the first series have their competitors clean young star, are making efforts to obtain has according to Pathe. Westerner' complete series, and is released beginning with the second series, Lloyd bow at the Capitol, New York.

Big Talent in Fox Releases

ALTHOUGH the list of releases scheduled by William Fox for release during May includes four of the regular Fox entertainments and one of the Tom Mix star series productions, these five releases represent as brilliant an array of literary and artistic talent as ever has been published by this firm on a regular schedule.

To begin with, there is "The Terror," a remarkable web of wit, hokum, and daring of the American cowboy with Tom Mix as star. It is the second of the Mix series pictures directed by Jacques Jaccard and the director is said to be responsible also for the scenario.

The exterior scenes for "The Terror" were photographed in and around Sonora, California, a section made famous during the gold rush of '49. The company which William Fox has given his star includes Francs Billington, Lucille Young, Lester Cuneo, Charles K. French, Joseph Bannet and Wilbur Higby.

"The Dead Line," in which Fox is starring the athletic George Walsh, an actor whose histrionic abilities, long been recognized among stellar lights of the screen, is a melodramatic story of a hill, written and directed by Robert W. Welsh by Paul Gold Fox staff.

The Fox adding to their greatest series of the state's future, leased to a seeming firm, certain other pictures, raw...
Exhibitors Want Long Runs
Mayflower Will Try to Supply Present Day Demand, Says Prager

Motion picture producers today are concentrating their efforts to put before the public productions of such high standard as will be calculated to guarantee to the exhibitors indefinite runs with corresponding profitable returns.

"We have given much consideration to the continually growing demand for such feature productions," declares Benjamin A. Prager, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, "and it has been our aim to sponsor pictures that will not merely be needed for restricted dates but may be kept going for a prolonged period because of popular demand.

"Under the Mayflower plan, directors of the most unconventional reputations are allowed absolute sway, unhampered by any restrictions whatever in the preparation of film versions of the works of authors of the highest standing. This brings out the best that is in the director who benefits from the realization that he alone is responsible for the picture from the first step in its evolution to the moment it is flashed upon the screen. With such able directors as Allan Dwan, Sidney A. Franklin and R. A. Walsh equipped with these unlimited powers, their already splendid records will undoubtedly be materially enhanced. It can be taken for granted that all those things that might in the slightest degree militate against the success of a picture will be eliminated.

"To co-ordinate with these full-power directors, there is a highly organized machine which places at their disposal the very latest developments of the camera, lighting and other equipment, all procured by the liberal expenditure of funds intelligently invested."

Mr. Prager then went on to show that fully 70 per cent of the expenditure seeking public of America attend motion picture shows; therefore it should be evident that every possible effort must be made to satisfy such an immense clientele.

"Our advance campaign on "The Courage of Marge O'Doon" was nation wide," said Mr. Quinn. "We have had a score of Billboards covering every available stand in the country with the special 24-sheet on this production. We played up the heart-throb in this poster, but to my mind no near scene can do justice to the grizzly fight and the other stunts which are the main assets of this picture, as far as newspaper men are concerned."

Mr. Quinn, general manager for Vitagraph, Inc., then went on to explain,

The Silent Barrier," first of the Louis Tracy novels to be done into pictures by Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., for Gibraltar, is now in the hands of the titlers and will be ready for private showing next week.

The picture was nine weeks in production and is said to be one of the most expensive of modern pictorial offerings, both in indoor and outdoor scenes having been obtained, according to report. Director William Worthington has made many expeditions to foreign countries to get his pictures, and has made every effort to ensure his success.

Five of the studio sets which were built at the Leah Baird studio, Cliffside, N. J., are of exceptional artistic merit, the reception room set alone having cost $2,000 to complete.

The cast includes many actors and actresses of distinction, among them being Sheldon Lewis, Gladys Hulette, Corinne Barker, Florence Dixon, Donald Cameron, Fuller Mallish, Joseph Burke and Ernest des Balles.

Mr. Worthington left for the Coast last week to prepare for the production of Leah Baird's next feature picture which will be filmed at the Robert Brunton studios, Los Angeles, recently leased by Arthur F. Beck, president of Gibraltar Pictures.

May Separated of Team Will Be for F. P.-Lasky

Productions will be released by Famous Lasky Corporation through a distribution agreement which, it became known in this week, gave Paramount an option on additional Maclean starring pictures. Among the completion and release comedies co-starring Macleans are "Mona May.""
New Amalgamation Has Added to Releases

Another announcement of considerable importance in the film industry is the effect that the new combine recently effected between five major motion picture producing corporations of which the Gloray Joy Productions, Inc., and the Unique Films, Inc., are a part, has added two new features to its already large schedule. These are the well known series of animated cartoons known as "Your Uncle" that have been so indelibly marked by Jack Rethel the celebrated cartoonist, and "Laughs in Clay," an animated clay reel, produced by Chyart Films. These short subjects will be released weekly.

Hutchison Starts Work on New Pathe Serial

Charles Hutchison started work at the Brunton Studio on his first serial for Pathé under his new contract Monday, April 19. The working title of the play he will do is "The Double Adventure," for which stories in the film were written by Jack Cunningham. Josie Sedgwick, who had the leading role in the picture, has been selected as Mr. Hutchison's leading lady, and the heavy role has been entrusted to Carl Stahl, who was also prominent in "Daredevil Jack."

Inter-Ocean Agent for Black and White

Following close upon the heels of its announcement in the trade press at the opening of branch offices in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Portland for the distribution of motion picture accessory stock, the company has arrived in Chicago and has sent a second announcement from the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation offices stating that it has taken over the West Coast Distributing Agency of the Black and White Raw Stock, manufactured by L. Gayaert and Company of Antwerp, Belgium.

Writers Swamp Star With Screen Tales

The publication in the trade journals several weeks ago of the news that Charles Ray was in the market for scenarios and screen material has brought such an overwhelming response from writers and agents in all parts of the country that the star has issued a release explaining that he is working for the Los Angeles studios for a temporary halt due to the fact that his immediate needs are completely satisfied.

Cosmopolitan Acquires Magazine Stories

Cosmopolitan Productions announces the acquisition of several new stories for motion picture purposes. Among the screen signs with E. Phillips Oppenhein and Cynthia Stockley, whereby several stories of these authors which have been written for publication in Hearst's Cosmopolitan, Harper's Bazar, or Good Housekeeping magazines, will revert to Cosmopolitan Productions. The announcement of the titles will be made later.

Larry Semon Grows in Favor

Larry Semon's popularity as a comedian, and the real merit of his productions, being demonstrated, it is said, by the rapidly increasing demand for his comedies reaching the Vitagraph offices. Although already recognized as one of the cleverest funny men before the country, the announcement that more than $3,600,000 was to be expended on the Larry Semon comedies within three years, has brought this star prominently before those who appreciate clean, wholesome comedy. Larry Semon has been the incentive for the comedian to do his utmost to deserve the confidence placed in him by comedy fans throughout the world.

Some idea of the great Larry Semon wave that is sweeping over the country may be gained by the fact that within the past five weeks more than 3,000 theaters throughout the United States and Canada, which never before exhibited a Semon comedy, have added his pictures to their attractions, and are advertising and presenting them as features. The additional bookings are by no means confined to any particular class of theaters, but include the wide range from the smallest to the largest. Among the more prominent theaters that have booked the Semon comedies beginning with "School Days," which is just being released, are the Alhambra, Denver, the New Madison, in Detroit; the Portola, in San Francisco; the California, in Los Angeles, and the Gardner, at Boston's Hippodrome, in Baltimore.

Not only are the Larry Semon comedies attracting attention and bookings, but F.G. Follansbee, manager of the Fleet, is arranging the exhibitors and maintaining their favor with the older ones, but pleased swarms throughout the country are going out of their way to see the latest pictures available. Larry Semon is without any shadow of doubt King of Screen Comedians.

Lloyd Ingraham Will Direct Mrs. Chaplin

Mildred Harris Chaplin's fourth First National Production is to be directed by Lloyd Ingraham, who has two of the past year's successes to his credit, "Myer's Ankle" and "What's Your Husband Doing?"
To Duplicate First Success
Nelan Reports Heavy Bookings on "Don't Ever Marry" Augur's New Hit

The success of "The River's End" and the favorable reception accorded to "Don't Ever Marry," are made the topics of comment in a statement recently received from the offices of Marshall Nellan Productions. The statement follows:

"Marshall Nellan's initial independent productions, 'The River's End,' and 'Don't Ever Marry,' prove that this new organization is an important factor in producing circles. The only triumph of one of the big studios, if not the biggest of the year, 'The River's End' gave Marshall Nellan Productions an auspicious debut in the industry as well as among the motion picture theatre-going public."

The eagerly expected at the Nellan offices in New York that "Don't Every Marry" will easily duplicate the nationwide success of "The River's End." Bookings for the second picture, according to J. R. Grainger, in charge of sales, already exceed those on 'The River's End,' one week after the release date. In various districts the smaller towns are now already playing 'The River's End' to take advantage of the wave of popularity accorded the picture in nearby metropolitan sections. An instance is given in the case of Grantwood, Ill., where a house's Friday and Saturday night shows were filled for "The Miracle Man." In exploiting the picture, Manager Kelly received exceptional co-operation from Waterson, Berlin & Snyder, publishers of the show, "The River's End," who plastered the town with theatre posters, etc., and supplied the theatre with a free singer.

S. Bennett MacCornick, considered by many in the industry to be the leading showman of America, opened with 'Don't Ever Marry,' at the Circle Theatre, Chicago, last week. Three days after the film opened he wired Mr. George Kerrigan of "Don't Ever Marry" one of the greatest comedies ever screened."

Universal Opens New Stage
Can Accommodate Twenty Units at One Time; Newest Equipment

A new stage, said to be large enough to accommodate twenty units at the one time, is nearing completion at Universal City. Although still unfinished, the new building was officially opened several days ago by a dance and reception given by Mr. L. S. Rothstein, who after an absence of five years, recently returned as the general manager of Universal City.

A statement issued by Universal has the following to say about its new stage:

"A new stage, so large that twenty companies can work on it simultaneously, is nearing completion at Universal City. Although part of it is still unfinished, the building was officially opened several days ago by a dance and reception given ostensibly in honor of L. S. Rothstein, who after an absence of five years, has returned to the film city to be its general manager."

This new stage, known as the North stage, is the most modern picture making plant in existence. It is 250 feet long and 140 feet wide. It cost $100,000. With the new stage space, Universal City now has more than 150,000 square feet under glass. The North stage has a sub-cellar generating plant which will supply electricity to five other buildings with electricity. The electrical equipment will be in the form of two 400 horse power transformers, utilizing 15,000 volt current of the Southern California Power Company, and distributing it to smaller stations through Universal City at a reduced voltage.

A complete elimination of the bothersome stage cable has been effected in the construction of the new stage. Herefore, in a motion picture studio, these cables, said helter-skelter all over the floor of the stages, have greatly hampered the efficient work of and the making of pictures. In the North stage all the distributing lines will be located above and below the stage proper. George Williams of the Universal City technical department superintended the building of the new structure."

S. M. P. E. Convention Meets Monday in Montreal

All roads are leading this week-end to Montreal where the Spring convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will be called to order on Monday. Reservations indicate that the session is to be the largest in the history of the Society as members have already been prepared. Theatres, studios, laboratories and research work have been covered by the authors of the papers.

The Perkins Electric Company will have their exhibit to Montreal and the program will be arranged by Mr. George Perkins of that firm.

Branding Iron,' and his remarkable work in that picture is responsible for his choice to fill the exacting role of Black Paw. Mr. Simpson has previously been seen in such productions as 'The Old Homestead,' 'The Barrier,' 'The Brand,' 'Out of the Dust,' and 'Troubadors Afield.'

Director Barker is now considering a number of actors available for the character of Red Paw and expects to reach a decision this week. John Bowers, one of the most popular young leading men on the screen today, will play Dan Durrin, Helen Chadwick will play Ruth Lyton, and Alce Francis will fill the role of Samuel Poor.

The Irvin S. Cobb story and play, 'Boys Will Be Boys,' will soon be placed in production at the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's studios in Culver City.

"Much of the success which the play enjoyed on Broadway was attributed to the character known as Pepp O' Day and interpreted by Harry Herford. The story is built around this figure, that ranks as one of Cobb's greatest creations. Goldwyn has not yet announced the actor to play the title role, but it is probable that a choice will be made within the next week. The story, with its rural background and true to life incidents, affords other inspiring opportunities for telling performances."

A word also is received from the Coast that Mabel Normand, Director Victor Schertzinger and his entire company have left for San Francisco, where some big boat scenes are to be made for Miss Normand's next picture. In the course of this story, Miss Normand will be required to dive from the deck of a ship into the ocean.

Bruce Completes Series
West Indian Scenes Soon Ready for Release Through Educational

ALTHOUGH it's scenic pictures have been before the motion picture public over a longer continuous period than those of any other scenic artist, Robert C. Bruce has just completed his first series taken outside the continent of North America. As a matter of fact, before this all of his work, with the exception of a few pictures made in Canada, have been confined to the United States.

Mr. Bruce has just completed a trip of several weeks to Cuba and Jamaica for Educational Films Corporation and is now editing and titling the pictures made there. Among the titles are 'The Caribbean,' 'The Isle of Desire,' 'Tropical Nights,' 'The Narrow Windmill Road,' "The Banana Special" and "Water Trails," and the usual objectives of the tropics can be carefully avoided in these pictures, and novelty is promised as one of their principal appeals.

Upon the completion of these pictures Mr. Bruce will start on his first professional trip abroad, first visiting France. He has already taken his entire equipment with him, and in order that he may be satisfied that all his material is suitable he will leave next week for a trip to the White Mountains and other sections of New England, covering fifteen days, four days a week and putting his cameras, automobiles and staff to the most strenuous tests. Mr. Bruce will remain abroad for several months, returning only to edit and title some of his pictures, and then continuing his work in European fields.

His work abroad does not contemplate any of the usual travel material but scenic studies of various sections in the world which has won him such a high standing in this country.

Old Print Pleases
Newspaper Men

One of the features at a testimonial dinner given last week in the Waldorf-Astoria, New York City, in honor of "Jim" Corrigan, who has been a New York newspaper reporter for fifty years, was a novelty two reel comedy depict humoros incidents in Jim's career. The picture was arranged by the Universal Film Company.

The title of the picture was "Love Triumphs Over Handcuffs." It was obtained by digging up an old print of the adventures of a reporter.

Goldwyn's next Pauline Frederick picture will be "Roads of Destiny" from an O. Henry story.
Seena Owen Will Please

"House of Toys," a Splendid Story for Popular Star, Say Producers

Seena Owen, star of "The House of Toys," an American Film Company feature for Pathé distribution, approaches the problem of matrimony with but one thought: how romantic to be poor with the man one loves.

The force and timeliness of the theme so convincingly put over, with artistic insight and treatment which reconfirms great credit on the director, George L. Cox, is sure to make "The House of Toys" a very popular picture. The settings are beautiful, for there is nothing of physical poverty or sordidness picket fences in the story of a veritable house of toys and a "dream girl" whose play house was shattered.

Pell Trenton in the leading male role makes a pleasing hero. Helen Jerome Eddy interprets the role of the mother, while the "other woman" is played by Betty Astor. George Washington and the player is made by Mr. Astor who has just returned from New York to Hollywood, Miss Astor is to be married to Mr. Astor in the near future. The Martin Becke in the story, which is adapted was written by Henry Russell Miller, a practicing lawyer in Pittsburgh, Pa. Daniel F. Whitcomb is the scribe.

Albert Kaufman on Coast

Plans Early Production of First Holubar-Phillips Film in West

ALBERT KAUFMAN left New York last week for California. Mr. Kaufman expressed enthusiasm over the results of his short visit to New York and stated that he was not yet in a position to disclose his new plans but expected to do so within the next few weeks.

A great deal of interest is expected on his return to Hollywood, Mr. Kaufman plans to start shooting on his first Allen Holubar production, starring Dorothy Phillips, all the advance preparations for which were prepared under his supervision during the past month. Olga Scholl, author of the "Heart of Humanity" and "Right of Happiness," the two former Holubar-Phillips successes, has just finished the first story to be handled by Mr. Kaufman.

Agnes Ayres, now appearing in the "Marshall Neilan Production" for First National release, will be starred by Mr. Kaufman, who has already closed with a director of prominence to stage her first offering.

In addition to these units, Mr. Kaufman promises to announce the names of a new star and director with whom he expects to close arrangements during the next few days. Other plans are now underway which indicate that Mr. Kaufman will soon have a large producing organization on the West Coast.

New Method Speeds Up Serial Production

William Duncan is now making the final episodes of his new serial, "The Silent Avenger," out on the coast. A new plan which Duncan perfected recently enables him to work on more than one episode at once, and within three weeks he will have complete negative and what he regards as the most elaborate serial he has ever produced.

Since the picture was started, it has not been delayed one day in the course of filming, the camera has turned on every working day of each week. Disadvantages of weather were overcome; there was no waiting for locations or sets.

Hawaii Y.M.C.A. Wants Universal Picture

That the Americanization movement is far reaching in its scope is evident from the letter received by the Educational Department of Universal from the Y. M. C. A. of Hawaii. Information regarding the film "America Wins Again," was sought. The Y. M. C. A. desires the use of the picture during the month of June. It will be shown in two hundred schools in Honolulu, as well as the public schools and sugar plantations. The film is now on its way to the island.

Hope Hampton Acquires Van Loan Story

For her second production to follow "A Modern Salome," which is reported to be doing big business throughout the country on the Metro program, Hope Hampton has just bought a new story written by H. H. Van Loan, which is as yet unnamed. This gifted author, who has been writing for a number of the best known picture stars for several years, is listed on this screen story is "The Virgin of Stamboul," has turned out a scenario for Miss Hampton which has all the indications of being a big success. A large number of cards have been sent in by the producer, while plot has been ever put on paper.

Louise Glauin Writes for Pan Magazines

Eugene V. Brewer, publisher of Motion Picture Magazine, Shadowland, The Magazine of the Arts, and Motion Picture Classic, announced in New York yesterday the acceptance by Louise Glauin, the screen star, of an editorial position on the weekly. Glauin offered the luminary during her recent sojourn in the eastern metropolis. Her monthly article will deal with life among the film folks on the Coast.

Nagle Will Play Leads For Famous Players

According to an announcement by Jessie Lasky, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Conrad Nagle, young stage star and screen leading man, has been engaged on a one-year contract to play leading roles in Paramount Arclight pictures produced at the Lasky studio. Mr. Nagle will begin work early next month.

Edith Roberts in "Marama"

South Sea Islands Story, Directed by Norman Dawn; Jack Perrin Leads

A picture of the South Sea Islands, the heroine of which is half-caste native girl, educated in an American seminary who returns to her wild customs and native dress, has just been put into production at Universal City. Edith Roberts will star in the new picture, which is to be called "Marama." "Marama" was bought for Priscilla Dean; all plans were laid for its early production, by that star. At almost the last minute, however, a story was found that suited Miss Dean much better. It suited her more than her role of Sari in "The Virgin of Stamboul," according to Universal. Miss Roberts was the logical successor of Miss Dean in the volatile leading role of the projected South Sea picture. She is said to be especially suited for the part, not only because of her youth, but also because of her excellent dancing. One of the features of the "Marama" will be a weird and beautiful religious dance with which the heroine signifies her return to the customs of her people.

Norman Dawn, who directed Miss Roberts in "Lassie," will supervise the making of the picture. Dawn is one time passed more than a year in the South Seas, gathering material for travels, and is entirely conversant with the customs, and manners and the island marriage.

"Marama" was written by Ralph Stock, writer of many popular novels and magazine stories. Stock spent for many months through the southern Pacific archipelago in a small boat, it is stated, collecting material for his pen.

On Miss Roberts will be supported by Jack Perrin. Others in the cast will be Noble Johnson, Richard Cummins, Arthur Jervis, Lucille Woolson, and William Phillips. William Howard will act as assistant director to Dawn.

Hudson Bay Festival Held in Canada

One of the greatest celebrations ever held in Canada began this week with the observance of the two hundred and fifteenth anniversary of the incorporation of the Hudson's Bay Company. The first of ceremonies for the occasion was held in Winnipeg and lasted for three days, followed by similar ones in Calgary, Edmonton, Victoria and Vancouver.

A chief feature of the celebration was the showing of a motion picture record of the Hudson's Bay Territory made for the company by the Educational Films Corporation of New York. Nearly 20,000 feet of these pictures were made by H. M. Wycoff, the camera man.

Paul Cazeneuve Begins Second Fox Picture

Paul Cazeneuve has begun the direction of a new picture for the William Fox Film Corporation. This new picture, "Her Honor the Mayor," was written by Arline Van Ness Hines and was formerly staged on Broadway. The star of the screen version is Evelyn Peery, Denison Clift adapted the work, and it is said to have embodied the snappy dialogue of the original in clever subtitles.

The cast includes Ramsey Wallace as leading man, Charles Force, William Fletcher and Edwin Booth. Tilson, Mr. Tilson, will be remembered, was recently placed under contract by this producer for a series of character roles in the Western studio productions.

Pathe Announces Recent Promotions

The following appointments have been announced by the Pathe Exchange office. R. S. Shrader, manager of the Indianapolis branch, as Central Western manager; F. B. Billington as the Indianapolis branch manager; Miles F. Gibbons, manager of the Pittsburgh branch, as the Short Subjects sales manager; Frank C. Bond, chief engineer of the Pittsburgh branch. The Pathe statement declares that these promotions are made in accordance with the organization's policy to advance its employees as an award of loyalty and efficiency.
Christie Showing Real Action

With the recent studio improvements completed, and with the acquisition of its own electrical generating plant, the Christie Film Company's Hollywood studio has swung into its program of semi-weekly and simultaneous releases, as indicated by the recent announcement that Christie would soon produce five films and greater productions. Having terminated the production of all pictures not bearing the Christie name, a product recently presented being centered on productions of feature length and two-reel comedies, with the customary Christie style and comedies in the programming of Al Christie, who is supervising all of the comedies and special productions, has been the new Christie two-reel comedies, a light farce featuring Bobby Vernon, Neal Burns, Teddy Sampson, Vern Steadman and Charlotte Merriam. On the completion of this comedy feature he will take a one-week vacation before clearing the key to make one of the Christie comedy releases for early summer. The remainder of Christie's two-reeler is also in progress, being directed by William Beaudine, who is also the latest Christie two-reeler, "Petitionnaire," an adaptation of this new comedy are Fay Tincher, Jimmie Harrison, Charlotte Merriam and Eddie Baker.

Centering on Features and Two-Reelers at Present Time

Having completed the cutting work on the splendid production feature, "A Smart Alec," which features Charles "Chic" Sale, Director Josephson was preparing to start work on another feature production, also to be released by Robertson-Cole, which is the first of a series of the famous Aard Rugby stories by Maurice Leblanc, which they have acquired. Wedgewood pictures was fond of the important role of Arsenio Lupin, has arrived in Los Angeles to begin work shortly.

Pickford Release Due June 27

Having established herself as the greatest exponent of child characters on the screen, Mary Pickford will shortly be seen in "Suds," a photo-play of an entirely different nature to anything in which she has heretofore appeared, said United Artists. Hiram Abrams, of United Artists, has announced June 27th as the release date of Miss Pickford's second "Big Four" production.

The theme of "Suds" is based on Maud Adams' famous play, "Op O'Me Thumb" which she presented for a long time in the Empire Theatre in New York as well as on her triumphal tours of America; it is from the dual pen of the comedians, Peter Bervin and Richard Pryor, two brilliant young English authors. For several years Miss Pickford has had the character of Amanda Albright in mind, it is stated, and has been waiting the opportunity to present it in the proper manner with proper settings.

Since the completion of "Pollyanna" in the latter part of 1919, Miss Pickford has been at work with her staff of artisans, on the project of "Suds." Over four months were spent in the adaptation of the story for the screen by several scenarios, and the finished product has made the versatile star come again and again, word travels, until in its typewritten form it was a photo-play, it is declared.

While she was satisfying that the "Suds" was finished, Miss Pickford began rehearsals and production, declared the statement from the United Artists' offices. "Suds" has been at work on interior and exterior settings. Photographs of various scenes of "Suds" were taken by Miss Pickford's English representatives and those sent to the studio and exact reproductions were constructed in the huge lot adjoining her dressing room. Several other authorities on life and customs in the Suds district were also consulted in and the work was continued until the settings and scenes were pronounced acceptable, signed by Miss Pickford.

Premiere in New York Was Auspicious

The premiere of "The Virgin of Stamboul" was at the Broadway theatre, New York, where the picture held up for a four weeks engagement. Universal exploitation for the metropolis was given the production beginning some weeks before the opening with much publicity that received nation-wide attention.

In strict secrecy, outside the producers, private office, a publicity stunt of exceptional value was planned and carried out.

This campaign opened with the planting of a "Turk" with his suite in New York from whom came a story that he was in America in search of a girl of his country who had escaped from a Turkish harem.

The story was well told, the atmosphere of realism to make the tale plausible was provided, and all the New York newspapers carried articles on the news pages for several days concerning the "stranger" and his quest. After the release of the picture and the subsequent information was divulged that it was a press agent's story, the campaign was continued with other forms of publicity. Bill boards in all parts of the city were used freely, the newspapers carried displays extolling the merits of the production and electric signs were utilized. When the feature opened at the Broadway all New York had heard something about it.

Audubon Theatre Gives Feature Good Exploitation

Another notable New York engagement was at the Audubon theatre, and again the feature of the showing was the exploitation.

The first move to put over "The Virgin of Stamboul" at the Audubon was to make the most of the highly artistic and original press matter furnished. An original herald, the Virgin of Stamboul, was adopted as the most expressive of Turkey. Illustrations were used and the reading matter carefully prepared. Care was taken to see that every known patron of the theatre received one of these heralds.

The big double lobby of the theatre with entrances on two streets was first decorated in bright flowers expressive of the fairyland of the Ottoman Empire. Enormous oil paintings from "stills" from the production were then placed at points of vantage and on golden easels. Three hundred red balloon bubbles were hung on invisible threads, and arches of festooning were draped from wall to wall over the paintings and from each festooned arch was hung a golden crescent cut-out. These crescents were five feet from tip to tip. In one lobby they were hung as crescent rides in the sky and in the other they were hung points downward. In both lobbies they formed arches. On each crescent was printed in shapely, artistic lettering the name of the attraction and the date. Sixteen of these crescents were used. The hundreds of lights in the lobbies were equipped with red bulbs, which flashed glistening red rays on the gold of the enormous crescents, the red of the balloons and the pink and white of the flowers.

To carry the Oriental idea further Miss Virginia Carr, an

Synopsis of "The Virgin of Stamboul"

Sari is a beautiful beggar girl in the streets of Stamboul. Captain Pemberton, a dashing young American soldier of fortune, in command of the famous Black Horse Troop, falls in love with her. At the same time, Achmet Hamid, a powerful Sheikh of the desert, plans to kill a young American in love with his favorite wife. Following him to the Mosque, he stabs him in the back, but is seen by Sari. Realizing this fact, the Sheikh plans to marry her to protect himself. Pemberton learns of the marriage plot and is able to marry Sari himself by proxy under the Turkish law. Discovering the trick, the Sheikh kidnaps them both and imprisons them in his desert home. Sari escapes and brings the Black Horse Troop to the rescue in time to see Pemberton's victory over the Sheikh in a tremendous struggle.

This attractive lobby display was designed by the Audubon theatre, New York, for its engagement of "The Virgin of Stamboul".

For full details of the manner in which "The Virgin of Stamboul" was presented at this theatre see the text on this page.
ACTRESS FROM THE WILLIAM FOX STUDIOS, WAS ENGAGED TO PORTRAY THE CHARACTER OF THE VIRGIN. SHE WORE A RED, JEWELLED ORIENTAL COSTUME OF FLASHING BRILLIANCE. A FLOATING RED VEIL PARADE HER FEATURES. AROUND HER DARKENED TRESSES WAS A BAND OF GILDED METAL HEAVILY JEWelled AND PROPERTY HEADS AND JEWELS WERE USED LITERALLY FROM THE TOP OF HER HEAD TO THE TIE-IN-TIPS OF HER TURKISH SLIPPERS. SHE GREATED ALL PATRONS AT THE HOUSE AND THE AUDITORIUM ENTRANCE AND Handed out cards detailing the merits of the production.

The Oriental idea was carried further from the street to the portals, and then, it was carried further right into the auditorium, for seven exotic actors, employed in the Arabian and noted for their attractive appearance were pedestal in Turkish turbans which they wore during the whole performances for several days before the opening day of the Virgin of Stamboul. These jewelled, plummed and beaded turbans bobbed about as the inners went about their work and attracted widespread attention. Traders, shles, newspaper ads and the usual methods of impressing public interest were used widely, yet judiciously. The effect was easily notic'd in the box office.

SALT LAKE HOUSE STAGE'S NOVEL CAMPAIGN

A WESTERN theatre, the Kinema of Salt Lake City, is another theatre to exploit the picture in royal fashion. Above is a view of the special lobby built for the occasion. William Cutts, the manager of the Kinema, followed the plan used in New York, with variations. The various accounts of the news story carried by the newspapers before the New York opening were run in the Salt Lake papers. Mr. Cutts planted a "Turkish girl" in a leading Salt Lake hotel and secured numberless news stories prior to the time the picture opened. More publicity was secured by sending a masked female horse-back rider about the city during the engagement. In a local store window a "Turkish" sat and smoked his pipe. This last stunt attracted great attention, every passerby stopping to view the strange sight. Newspaper space for this showing was used freely.

The lobby display for "The Virgin of Stamboul" was one of Mr. Cutts's displays re-produced on this page.

OTHER THEATRES PLAY PICTURE TO BIG BUSINESS

T HE Washington theatre, Detroit, after an advance campaign of publicity which embraced all the orthodox methods besides many novelties played the picture a week and regretted that the policy of the house was a week’s run for the reason that the picture showed every indication of being worthy of an indefinite run. Manager McDonald made a special effort to have his newspaper advertising, his ads, boosting the picture strongly and dwelling particularly on the magnificent spectacle presented, the novel story and the popularity of the star.

A. L. Rule, manager of the Chatterton theatre, in Bloomington, Ill., was one of the first of the theatres in the smaller cities to obtain a showing. Encouraged by the reports of the way the picture was responding to intensive advertising, campaigns in the big centers, Mr. Rule went the limit with his exploitation and left no stone unturned. He built a lobby display carrying out the Oriental idea as have other theatres, got space in a number of prominent store windows and plastered his city with paper.
Three Favorite Players Now With Robertson-Cole

Otis Skinner, Broadway stage favorite, who will star in an adaptation of his greatest success, "Kismet," under the Robertson-Cole banner.

Pauline Frederick, popular on both stage and screen, who is now a Robertson-Cole asset.

Isthel Barrymore, who has electrified Broadway this season in her stage play, "Declassée" who returns to the screen as a Robertson-Cole star.
Carpentier Picture Titled

"The Wonder Man" is the title which Robertson-Cole has selected for the George V. Robertson-Cole production which will be given the public through release on May 30th, a picture that is being a framed world figure and an opportunity that was one of the most sensational ever fought, and in which he stood forth as one of the world's greatest exponent and terred the square ring, Carpentier is a student of the arts—even more so than any other actor of his size.

Those who saw the ring in the Solaris Studio, Fort Lee, on a recent evening, and saw the handsome young Frenchman enter the ring with Robert Barrat, who plays opposite him in "The Wonder Man," fell an advance tingle of the thrill which is to be national in a few short weeks. For, going there they catch a glimpse of a famous French fighting man, and they saw a man who had more to offer. They were filled with the perfection with which the man took his part, and at the same time their admiration for the man himself, a man who would not act wildly, perhaps even stupidly, make the passes which the man was about to make.

Instead, they saw an actor, consummate and polished, a man with a fighter's undefinable skill which are his entirely to the ends of the drama. Not even the voice of the director, for the most part, was needed to warn Carpentier that at the most that he need be afraid, dazed, "groggy," nervous, and distraught, as the story called for it, and that never once must he give a hint of his power until the close round, where he administers in quick succession the two blows which fell his antagonist.

With his position as champion pugilist of Europe, one might suppose that Carpentier, while in this picture, would be able to cope with any American sporting men and fists "fan," Such is not the case. While Carpentier has in no wise slighted this element, he has shown his marvelous diversity of interest and ability by meeting persons of the world of life, many of them intellectual, and those concerned in the arts. Writers, painters, sculptors, minstrels, priests, politicians he has met and through his interpreter, and, by means of his own English which rapidly is improving through his diligent study, talked with them.

Another point on which Carpentier's work is notable is that his scenes are largely French. With the girls of France—and for that matter all allied countries—Robertson-Cole has given every effort to choose no famous daughter, or no far-famed beauty, such as the stage or the studio would have given him. The French girl he chose was a "back home girl," one he had known all his life, a girl he loved like one of the family, a boy, and a young man. She was his pal. She is his wife. How many men raised to the heights which Georges Carpentier has achieved have ever enjoyed the maestros beauties of the world's greatest cities to seek out the simple village girl he loved as a boy? The soldier, boxer, sportsman gives her all the attention and court case asking. He is delightfully old-fashioned in that he always is seen with her, no matter what invitations he may receive to go to the gayest of social gatherings. It was this startling array of contrasts which led Robertson-Cole to name the forthcoming picture a society drama, in which Carpentier is to be the leading character. "The Wonder Man" is a story, a drama, a wonder. But his appearance on the screen will be far from a matter of speculation and uncertainty to the exhibitor. Even the organization which contracted with the famous Frenchman for the picture, and which will distribute it, at times has been surprised at the tremendous public interest in the man—an interest which is bound to be reflected at the box office.

The units which comprise the Robertson-Cole selling force were lined up a few days ago and made a study of the picture. "The Wonder Man" was a selling title, and, as soon as it was made known to the various managers, the idea was sent in to A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distri- buting Company, from the manager in charge of the promotion of the picture. Most of them believed that the title had been picked with an eye to the business force. It was suggested that it was so strong did they estimate it. Merely to call attention to how closely in the drama the statement issued that this title was picked even ahead of the story, as the only one and title not only for Carpentier, but for his picture.

Robertson-Cole Star on Tour

The Georges Carpentier "million dollar production" will be completed this week, according to the preliminary plans, and as the world's most fantastic figure is concerned, "The Idol of France" finished his last scene earlier on Sunday and he is now on his tour of the country and this week the other members of the company are making the final scenes.

The widespread announcement that Carpentier is to tour the country at the rate of $200,000 per day has made exhibitors put on their thinking caps and they are calculating how much more the game Frenchman will be worth to them in pictures where he will have a greater opportunity to show his versatility in an hour or more on the screen as against a few moments of "personal appearance." It is believed that the personal appearance of Carpentier will increase its value in the cities where he tours and also the value of the picture when it is released, as the Frenchman is shown. He is such a lovable character and such a manly man that the fans of him all over the world will want to see him again and again and inasmuch as the picture shows him from every angle it will prove, in the estimation of many exhibitors, to be the greater attraction.

It is certain that no motion picture actor or punchist has ever been so favored by the public than the French hero of the ring and the air. One reason for his popularity with the French is clearly by a wave of social notoriety recently when he said: "Carpentier is the type of man that every man would like to be, but which he can never become"

Despite the nature, it is a very good reflex on mankind that man is developing the model of his thoughts.

The enthusiasm of women over Carpentier was again illustrated on the occasion of the direction of the big fight scene in the society drama. Invitations were extended to the principal sport enthusiasts of New York and New Jersey to be present and they responded in such numbers that the Solaris Studio was actually jammed with men. The invitations had been given for "gentlemen only," but many women, including those of Solaris Studio, are apparently jammed with men. The pictures had been selected for "gentlemen only," but many women, including those of Solaris Studio, are apparently jammers. Women of the range of two continents, managed to find their way to the studio and to save accommodations for themselves in the galleries out of the range of the cameras. Most of them were all dressed in the height of fashion, confessed that they had never attended a boxing exhibition before in their lives but they admitted that Georges Carpentier was the magnet that drew them, uninvited, to the studio. They expressed themselves delighted with all that they had seen and there were many among them who asked for the privilege of being introduced to the young Apollo. Although all such introductions were forbidden at these parties, the number of such persons among the 1,500 in the studio who did not want the same thing was few. The picture of the fight (in which Robert Barrat, the "heavy" of the production, was given a starring part) was all very complimentary to the star and the newspaper writers went out of their way to express their approval of Carpentier's ability as an actor. It was an eye-opener to all present.

Robertson-Cole exchanges are being besieged by exhibitors owing to the wealth of publicity that Carpentier has received. The Knecst of the country are recognizing the fact that Carpentier threatens to be the best box office attraction ever offered to them. His name has been established beyond a shadow of a doubt, and he will make a permanent star in the motion picture firmament.

Maurice Tourneur Has New Actress

According to Maurice Tourneur, a new luminary will soon burst forth on the screen. He asserts that he is unknown at present, that he discovered her by accident, and that she is richly endowed with the requirements that tend to the general make-up of the ideal screen artist.

Robertson-Cole Seek Director for New Star

It is fortunate that Pauline Fredrick has been signed by Robertson-Cole, and the story of her first super-production selection, attention is being given the matter of choosing for her a director competent to impart to the initial picture the desired distinction.

No detail is to be overlooked either in the choice of stories, supporting cast, or directors, while the time and care with which Robertson-Cole-Fredrick pictures both are to be increased over those in which Miss Frederick made her first appearance. Miss Frederick goes to work in the West immediately on the scope, quality and nature of which is carefully guarded. Without any specifications it may be predicted that this new production will not lack the story elements which with her wonderful presence and make Miss Frederick so popular from an exhibitor's standpoint.
"The Bottom of the World" Scores

"All that was predicted for the "Bottom of the World," the Sir Ernest Shackleton Antarctic Expedition, picture, by the exhibitors, scientists, travel writers and reviewers, was privileged to preview it and by virtue of the wide interest in the picture when it was shown in England, has come triumphant Broadway has taken "The Bottom of the World" to its heart, which is the fact of great significance when one remembers that the film is actual history and not a flight of fancy.

Such is the opinion registered by the Robertson-Cole Company after noting the reception, accorded to "The Bottom of the World" by the audiences that have viewed the picture at the Rivoli during the present week. "Aside from the warmth with which the New York show-world has greeted Shackleton's picture, the scientific world in the metropolis is much interested," continues the statement from the Robertson-Cole offices.

"This is evidenced in the showing of the picture at the American Museum, where it was viewed by scores of savants concerned in the various sciences. Through the courtesy of Robertson-Cole, which is distributing the film, it was given a showing at the museum before members of the scientific staff and their guests.

"Remarkable attention was given the Shackleton picture in connection with its Broadway showing from the first. When it was shown to Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, one of the country's foremost exhibitors, and managing director both of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, he did not wait for a salesman to approach him on the matter of booking the picture, but personally came to see it at once from the New York exchange. He saw in its humbly interesting story, as well as its wide scientific interest, the greatest picture of its kind ever made. The New York papers more than backed up his judgment.

"The Bottom of the World, a paper which does not become enthusiastic unoffensively. The "Bottom of the World" is the title given to the motion picture record of Sir Ernest Shackleton's expedition to the South Pole. The pictures of the ice pack encumbering his ship and of the majestic behemoth, the Antarctic, are so powerful—so graphic and truly tremendous to make one keep one's Overcoat on in the house. No daily paper keeps more closely in touch with Broadway than the Evening Telegram. Commenting on "The Bottom of the World," this paper said: "The film showing Sir Ernest Shackleton in search of the South Pole is a fascinating picture."

"The Globe goes much stronger, saying the Shackleton picture places the camera in the direction of better things for the industry. It says: "The Bottom of the World at the Rivoli this week proves again that a travel scene can be far more dramatic and thrilling than most picture plays with a plot. It has caught on the screen Sir Ernest Shackleton's valiant race for the South Pole in the good ship Endurance, which did not entirely justify her name. The grim story is told against a background of the heretofore unknown wind and grotesque ice shapes. There are the dogs, the 'hussies,' the pack, the jumps, for comedy relief. It leads the explorers up to the moment when the Endurance is caught between two vast wedges—icy walls placed as a painted ship upon a painted ocean."

"After a picture like this one, yearning for the unknown, the exciting, the graphic, the most fascinating part of the film is that showing the Endurance breaking her way through a field of ice and finally bringing the ship to a standstill in it. There are other scenes of the activities of the explorers."

"The Sun, another of the New York papers which prides itself in clinging to facts, says: "At the Rivoli the most patently primary feature is the dramatic picture (it includes one of the most advertised productions of one of the greatest companies). "The real sensation is 'The Bottom of the World,' a record of the voyage of Sir Ernest Shackleton in the Antarctic Ocean. It was shown yesterday at the Rivoli Theatre. The pictures of seal and penguin at play, snow and sleet, the breath of the wind, the hardships of the dog sled trip home, were retold by the screen."

"Following the showing at the American Museum of Natural History, George B. Sherwood, assistant secretary of the museum, said: "The Shackleton picture shows clearly many points of interest to the students who heretofore mainly depended upon books and verbal pictures of the almost unknown region. The Bottom of the World is indeed in all respects a most wonderful picture and has aroused my interest to such an extent that I hope to obtain a print for our library."

"Dr. F. A. Lucas, director of the Museum, was unbounded in his praise for the picture and expressed his wonder at the daring and heroic endeavors of Shackleton's party. He was greatly impressed with the film as a record of Shackleton's home by being crushed by ice, the photographing being done even.

"The attention which New York is paying to "The Bottom of the World" is not the only flattering sign of the picture's attraction. Perhaps the factor most interesting to the exhibitors seeking complete pictures lies in the enthusiasm with which other men in his own business have greeted the Shackleton film. Besides Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, who booked it first in New York, others have followed eagerly."

Among those are Marcus Loew, who controls the largest theatre circuit in the country, centering according to the Variety. The Shackleton picture will be shown in all the Loew houses, having been picked by the discriminating, and Sessue Hayakawa, the brilliant Japanese player who has contributed in no small measure to the success of the Robertson-Cole program.

Bessie Borrissale, prime favorite with audiences for a number of years, who still continues her successful way as a Robertson-Cole star.

Lee Cody, whose characterization of the "man about town" types have brought him into prominence as a screen player and won him star roles with Robertson-Cole.

H. B. Warner, one of the most distinctive and finished players of either stage and screen, whose starring vehicles for Robertson-Cole have proven universally successful.
Robertson-Cole Sums Up Activities

Robertson-Cole in a recent statement points with pride to its present prosperous condition and announces a faithful indulgence of the growing confidence of the trade in its product. The exhibitors everywhere are coming to place in the name of Robertson-Cole, and its productions. A word-of-mouth advertising is going up and down the nation to the effect that this company is a reliable and trustworthy in the business to 'clean up' this year on mediocre productions, which expects to remain year after year as a constant source of income to the producer.

This will give a present facility of Robertson-Cole for the screening of pictures.

Its unusual and profitable nature of three theatres, on the top floor of the building, there will be installed and operated a new system of exhibition, which will enable the company to give special exhibitions at various times to which guests will be invited, as a part of the entertainment at the musical accompaniment, so obtaining the exact effect of a regular theatre show.

"The most unusual and progressive feature which is contemplated is the department which has been dominated too much by parts of the world. Irrespective of whether or not the exhibitor shows Robertson-Cole pictures in the market for any picture, he will be welcome to that part of the exhibition which can be set aside for visiting exhibitors. He can find the city's best reference library on motion pictures and other subjects at the time of the event. There will be time for the observance of any steno graphic equipment.

Starting within a few weeks and during the season of 1920-21, the Robertson-Cole Distributed Corporation will put in the field only pictures which are demanding and will be accepted as set aside for visiting exhibitors. It is the last word in the art of presenting, not in the way of viewing, the full number of pictures each year, such pictures will stand up with the best which are being made, and will consistently at the box office.

Robertson-Cole believes that the film industry up to the present does not have a sufficient tool for greed and release of pictures, which could not ascribe a continued increase in the confidence of the releasing company. This is the thought behind its offer to increase the life of a production which he can show at a profit, and it plans not only to make a good picture but to accompany it with such exhibition and merchandising facilities as are in keeping.

Besides the rapid growth of its organization, its swiftly increasing success in the industry, and the worth of its stars and productions, which are getting to be an accepted fact, Robertson-Cole has another and even more convincing claim to being the best. Its home office building now under construction at the corner of Seventeenth Avenue and Forty-eighth Street, New York City, in the heart of the film administrative world. In a day when building material is sky high and labor most unprofitable, Robertson-Cole feels the need of its own quarters to the point that it has purchased ground, and started the project of building its own home.

The new building will be big, for Robertson-Cole has announced that Robertson-Cole is building it, will own, occupy, and control it. Fireproof throughout, it will be 12 stories in height and will contain offices, conference rooms, and freight and passenger service elevators. The building will be finished and occupied by November 1st.

There will be three theatres on the roof. These will be utilized for the showing of film to private representatives, foreign buyers and various persons interested in Robertson-Cole pictures. The best possible equipment will be installed in these theatres, including six standard, six inch machines. Three operators will constantly be on duty to perform.

This will give a present facility of Robertson-Cole for the screening of pictures.

"The most unusual and progressive feature which is contemplated is the department which has been dominated too much by parts of the world. Irrespective of whether or not the exhibitor shows Robertson-Cole pictures in the market for any picture," situation which is comparable to the strongest in which she has ever appeared. Hence, descriptive power may have been concentrated upon the power they will have when concocted into productions on which no care or money will be spared.

"ROBERTSON-COLE in Three Plays on the Teller," the Albert Camplin masterpiece to be released by Robertson-Cole under the organization knows that it is playing within reach of the exhibitor one of the greatest attractions in his field. Robertson-Cole goes so far as to style this picture, the biggest production to which it has yet put its name. Aside from the merits of the picture, which are surpassing, there has been issued the most prodigal and complete program ever prepared by the exploitation department of Robertson-Cole, to aid the exhibitor in making his production a winner at the box office.

"The Fortune Teller," is a gem of the screen, an equal winner in every walk of entertainment as is the great "White Dove," to which it has just put its name. It is the success of the season and is a production which will pull mightily in every motion picture house, lucky enough to engage it.

"In announcing which holds out to the exhibitor the promise of money making productions unrivalled in their introduction to the public, the Robertson-Cole producers of this picture have in mind their past successes. This picture will profit not just in its place as a season's most successful travel and exploration picture. After a wide success in England, the South Pole expeditions promises to every success in the United States that the marked popularity which it has enjoyed in the United Kingdom is due to its box office appeal in the most promising parts of the South Polar circle, showing a wonderful wealth of new information concerning the study of the ice and snow and dozens of interesting adventures which were the lot of the South Pole explorers.

"In closing there is just a word to say, as a final thought for the exhibitor, Robertson-Cole will have the announcement of their new special pictures for which he is now signed will eclipse them all.

"In closing it will be mentioned that Robertson-Cole, giving an exclusive contract with Doshin Farnum for exclusive screen appearances, Robertson-Cole is releasing the pictures of a star with a remarkable dramatic record as a leading figure in plays and plays-production of the great open spaces. The opportunity to bring to the screen those which have been closed with other stars as to a limitation of the productions to be made for exclusive release, Robertson-Cole presents only four pictures which will make a year to show for extraordinary productions. It is only a matter of time when the production which Mr. Farnum will make for Robertson-Cole is to be regarded as a thing of the past.

"Mr. Robertson-Cole's stage career before he went on the screen was a long and distinguished one. The Vic with a talent of $250,000 in his open country, his first starting vehicle. Such was the wide success he won in this picture that he was soon the leading producer in the business. The Robertson-Cole company is the greatest attraction, the drawing power of which the exhibitor will not need to be urged to take advantage of.

"For several years the screen powers of Miss Barriscale have been a great factor in the exhibitors' world. Especially in the last few months this feminine star has come to be one of the most certain and consistent box office successes. Her next contract with Robertson-Cole for the release of a new production, which is to include the best themes she ever has approached and the finest dramatic productions ever issued in motion picture history, is of deepest interest to showmen.

"In her position as the leading charwoman on the screen of society women, and middle class wives, Miss Barriscale has been a force in obtaining stories which have enabled her to reach a height not surpassed by any screen actress in her class. It is the purpose of Robertson-Cole, in B. B. Feature, to see that her future releases are selected with an eye towards the making of the best story of the season's events for which Miss Barriscale is given every opportunity to surpass even the splendid pictures which she has recently been making having secured from the Robertson-Cole company.

"HAYAKAWA is given a unique opportunity to show his own personal ability in the portrayal of Mr. Kiser. On the screen he makes an impression which is never forgotten and there is behind each of his productions a sincerity of the highest order in the hearts of every audience an immediate and lasting response.

"OF THE SKINNER is conceded talent as a dramatic actor in the American stage today, found in "Kismer" a vehicle for him to show the true portrayal of his role. Consequently in obtaining a contract for the appearance on the screen of Mr. Skinner in this picture, B. B. Features is securing a production which has few equals in matters theatrical.
Robertson-Cole's Stars

"A TYPICAL instance of the way in which the truly superior plays of the season are being handled is the case of "Law Cody is Vindicated," one of the plays which is causing much interest. This play is a picture of life, and is a realistic, humorous, and dramatic interpretation of the life of a Western lawyer. It is a fine piece of work, and is being given with great effect by the members of the company. The acting is excellent, and the play is a success."—Daily Sketch.

Moss Plays Capellani Film

"The Fortune Teller" Opens May 9 at Broadway; Is Heart Drama

A s a proof of the merits of the picture as a box office attraction, Robertson-Cole has placed "The Fortune Teller" in motion in the Capellani super-special, with Alphonse Karr as its star, for a run, starting Sunday, May 9, at 8:30. The story is based on the "Lux" pictures, and is a fascinating one. The picture is one of the most interesting and popular of the season, and is expected to be a great success.

"The Fortune Teller" is directed by Albert Capellani, who is well known in the motion picture world. The story is based on a novel by the French author, and is a masterpiece of dramatic writing. The picture is a success, and is expected to be a great hit with the public.

"The Butterfly Man" Is Another Cody Hit

Impelled by its own merit and Mr. Cody's appealing characterizations, the film has won a place in the hearts of the public. The film is a success, and is expected to be a great hit. It is a fine piece of work, and is being given with great effect by the members of the company. The acting is excellent, and the film is a success."—Daily Sketch.

"Very soon exhibitions all over the country are to be able to show in the golden sunshine. All the latest films fall over the exhibition box offices. They are put up with a sign bearing the name of "The Butterfly Man," which is sure to be a great success. The film is a fine piece of work, and is being given with great effect by the members of the company. The acting is excellent, and the film is a success."—Daily Sketch.
Gordon Opposite Alice Joyce in Another 1

Rapidly following the announcement that upon the termination of his contract with J. Stuart Blackton, Robert Gordon is to become star of his own company, is the news that meantime he will appear again with Alice Joyce in the lead masculine role. His work in "Dollars and the Devil" and the recent Vitaphone picture is said to be more or less responsible for his selection for a splendid part. This will be Mr. Gordon's second picture with Miss Joyce.

To Picturize "Passers By"
Blackton Buys C. Haddon Chambers' Stage Success; Rawlinson Starred

This week announces the acquisition of J. Stuart Blackton's current version of C. Haddon Chambers' famous play, "Passers By." This production, having as its head a competent cast Herbert Rawlinson, has been in the making for four months. Release date of the celebrated play has not been set yet, but will be announced shortly.

In the cast with Mr. Rawlinson are Tom Lewis, Dick Lee, and W. J. Ferguson. Mr. Lewis, who plays the part of the "Cabby," is at the present time a headliner on the Keith and Proctor vaudeville circuit. W. J. Ferguson, one of the oldest and best known character actors in America, who interprets the role of Waverton's butler, a much more important part than the character indicates, has been featured for months in "The Little Whopper," which just completed an all season run at the Casino theatre in New York, and is now on tour. Dick Lee has a national reputation for his "character" ability, which he uses to the fullest advantage portraying "Thurg," one of the passers by.

Herbert Rawlinson is declared to make an ideal Peter Waverton, the character he plays yet to open his mansion to the "passers by" in this picture is said to be the most representative role in which Charles Cherry and Richard Bennett won fame on the stage in this country.

Three One Reel Comics on Christie Program

The Christie company announces three new one-reel comedy stories • in which matrimonial affairs seem to predominate according to their subject matter indicated by the titles, which are: "Should a Husband Tell?" "No License. Applied For" and "No Babies Allowed."

The three new Christie subjects are the result of the work of three directors and three authors. "Should a Husband Tell?" features Dorothy Devere and Jannie Harrison. It was written by Kenne Thompson and directed by Allen Wett. "License Applied For" presents Earl Rodney in the role of a young man who marries the license before he proceeds. The story is by Scott Darling and is directed by Scott Sidney. The comedy, "No Babies Allowed," Dorothy Devere and Jannie Harrison are again presented in a story which shows how to beat the landlords. The story by Jack Jenie and Kenne Thompson was directed by Frederick Sullivan.

Briggs Comedies Are to Be State Righted

The Briggs comedies, which during the past year have been released through Paramount, are to be released in the future distributed through the states right market. The Chadwick Pictures Corporation, which company formed recently to handle productions produced for the open market, will handle the sale of these comedies throughout the world.

Release of the first series of ten Briggs comedies will be at the rate of one each week for ten weeks. Chadwick Pictures corporation have taken offices in the Levitt Building in New York city; and Jacques Kaplan, the vice-president, is in charge of the sales department.

Southern Exchanges

Like Jans Pictures

F. E. Backer, general sales manager for Jans Pictures, Inc., returned recently from a flying trip through the South, filled with enthusiasm due to the success in which southern exchanges and state right buyers spoke of the two initial releases featuring Olive Tell, in the interest of which trip this has been made especially for. According to Mr. Backer conditions in the South in the motion picture industry was very good.

Rights on Big Comedy Sell

Quality Pictures Buys Territory on Fine Arts Five Reel Feature

WILLIS KENT, head of the Quality Pictures Company, Denver, made a special trip to New York this last week to purchase rights to "Up in Mary's Attic," the five-reel super-comedy produced by the Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., of which Murray W. Gordon is president. Mr. Kent had never seen the picture but was attracted by advertisements in the trade press. Before he left he dictated this unsolicited statement and mailed it to Charles F. Schwerin, general sales manager for Fine Arts:

"To open my new exchange in Denver I realized that I should have one big headline-plot picture that every one would want to see. Therefore, when I saw the announcements of "Up in Mary's Attic" I came to New York to look the picture over on the off chance that it might be what I wanted.

Since seeing parts of it I want to say that the production is not only far better than I hoped or dreamed, but in my opinion will be the greatest money getter ever released. It has everything—delicious comedy minus the slapstick; a dandy story with a heart interest that is irresistible; the most gorgeous bunch of girls ever assembled, and the sweetest, most appealing star in pictures. R. L. the comedy supreme—the finest blending of laughter and tears, smiles and heart throbs, ever achieved on the screen.

And that is what the dear old public loves.

Mr. Kent is said to have paid one of the highest prices ever recorded for the rights to the "Mountain States"—Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Wyoming.

Prepare for "Tarzan" Film

Sets Being Constructed; New Space Leased; to Be More Than a Serial

"THE SON OF TARZAN," which will be under way at the studios of the National Film Corporation of America as soon as the necessary sets have been completed by "Mickey" Caldwell, will be more than a serial, according to Harry J. Revier, who was chosen to direct this production. Mr. Revier has arrived on the West Coast and is superintending all phases of production. Roy Somerville, photo-dramatist of note, who was chosen to adapt the last of Edgar Rice Burrough's books of The Tarzan series for the screen, has completed three episodes of continuity. Actual production will be started about the middle of May, according to Mr. Revier.

The production of "The Son of Tarzan" will make such a heavy demand upon the present studio space of the National Film's plant in Hollywood that several acres of unimproved property adjoining the plant have been leased for an indefinite period, according to other releases from the West Coast. Negotiations are now pending which will bring three additional acres under the plant's management. More stages will also be constructed, it is said.

Jack Hoxie, who was slated to appear in the leading role of "The Son of Tarzan," will not be cast for the serial, but will be starred in a series of western stories to be produced by National Film.

In his announcement of National Film's forthcoming productions, "The Son of Tarzan," Mr. Revier declares: "Simply because it will be released in episode form it will not necessarily have to be serial. On the contrary, each release will be a feature and can be exploited as such."

Lesser to Distribute "That Something"

"That Something" is the mysterious yet alluring title of a multiple reel drama, produced by the Herman Film Corporation, which is to be exploited throughout the United States by Sol Lesser. "That Something" is an inspirational drama.

States Rights Company Is Incorporated

A new organization, recently incorporated under the laws of New York State, is known as the Chemlag Film Corporation, and has opened executive offices at 729 Seventh Avenue. Chemlag announces that it has already purchased the New York State and northern New Jersey rights to "A Common Level," a six-reel spectacular drama, featuring Edmund Breese and Claire Whitney, released May 15. Charles Rosenfield is the moving spirit behind the new organization.

Mickey Film Executive in East on Business

Ludwig Schindler, president of the Mickey Film Corporation of Chicago, is in New York looking after the interests of his firm's productions, which include the special feature which has attracted unusual attention both from the box office and entertainment angles, "The Woman He Chose." Mr. Schindler reports an unprecedented demand for the new release throughout the nation and says that the territory has been sold and that exhibitors are everywhere meeting success in showing the feature.

Victor Kremer Reports

Sale of Comedies

The final sales drive in the interests of the five Chaplin productions controlled by Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., has resulted in the sale of practically all of the open territory for these comedies. Victor Kremer, president of the organization, reports the consummation of sales for California, Arizona and Nevada, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, eastern Missouri and southern Illinois.

Reelcraft Provides for Prompt Distribution

Railroad strikes will in the future hold no terror for the distributors of Reelcraft Pictures Corporation releases. Each of the producing companies are working overtime to provide the General Office with several releases ahead in every series on the releasing schedule. Advertising matter is also being prepared considerable time in advance, to permit the shipping of the complete release from print to paper several weeks in advance of the scheduled release date.

THE LITTLE CAFÉ

From the story by Tristram Bernard

A Five Part Feature Comedy
A murder committed in a motion picture studio; circumstantial evidence points to the guilt of a girl star in that studio; the chief argument of the prosecution is a motion picture film which apparently shows the girl in the act of committing the crime. Certain dangerous men, to serve their own ends, seek to fasten the crime upon the girl, while her own friends do their best to save her.

With such a plot, with such a sterling actor as Warner Oland playing the “heavy,” with such a charming star as Eileen Percy and with fast and furious action in every episode, you may depend upon it that this serial is there.

DAREDEVIL JACK

"'Daredevil Jack' is by all odds the best serial from a box office standpoint I have ever run. The first episode broke all previous records of the box office. The second increased admissions by 10 per cent. The third increased 15 per cent over the second, all without extra effort. We can hardly accommodate the crowds." — H. B. Varner, Lexington, N. C.

"I was dubious about putting on 'Daredevil Jack,' but have now used three episodes. Our success has been the talk of the town. My receipts have been bigger than on any previous serial. Business has been more than satisfactory." — L. Morse, Metropolitan Theatre, Cincinnati.

"Business wonderful at advanced prices. Women patronage increased 100 per cent. Attendance increased over 1000 over regular Monday." — B. G. Wheeler, Royal Theatre, Dayton, O.

"Played 'Daredevil Jack' yesterday to capacity house. Broke all previous records. Some serial." — Max Marcus, US Theatre, Cleveland, O.

"Played 'Daredevil Jack' yesterday with greatest box office receipts in history of house. I think this wonderful as I have been in same stand six years." — R. Gray, Majestic Theatre, Cleveland, O.

"'Daredevil Jack' going over big. Serial a dandy. Believe it is going to be biggest cleanup in serial history." — E. Gailey, Crystal Theatre, Wayne, Neb.

"'Daredevil Jack' a good serial and I am enjoying a fine business on it." — A. Martini, Dixie Theatre, Galveston, Tex.

"In spite of snow, rain, hail and gale that blew people off their feet, we packed them in on 'Daredevil Jack.' To say we are 'contented' is to put it mildly. We are more than satisfied with receipts and picture. We expect to break all records with it." — Princess Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

"May I hold over 'Daredevil Jack' for use Tuesday? Everybody greatly pleased and hundreds turned away." — O. J. Motry, Lyric Theatre, Tiffin, O.

"Jammed them in for three days with 'Daredevil Jack.' It breaks record for the house. Sorry I didn't book it for a week." — Sam Carver, Family Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y.
“Business on 'Daredevil Jack' phenomenal. We are featuring same over eight acts and lining them up for half a block.” — Fred Leonard, Pres., Lenwood Amusement Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

“I broke all records, both afternoon and evening on ‘Daredevil Jack.’” — C. J. Sayer, Orpheum Theatre, Toledo, O.

“‘Daredevil Jack’ exceeds as business getter all other serials I have played. Have had to turn a bunch of people away. Packed to the sidewalk.” — Northern Theatre, Columbus, O.

“You were right and I wrong in our opinion of ‘Daredevil Jack.’ I booked it against my judgment. It broke our record for serials and increased the second week over $300.00. It appears to me it will be the greatest serial I have ever played.” — Hal Smith, Ferry Field Theatre Co., Detroit, Mich.

“I have played the first two episodes of ‘Daredevil Jack.’ This is sure a guarantee profit serial. With the first two episodes my box office registered the price of the whole fifteen episodes and $27.00 over. It is the masterpiece of serials.” — Geo. Beare, Rialto Theatre, Toledo, O.

“We played to capacity business all day long on the first episode at advanced prices and business has increased to such an extent with the showing of the first five that we have had to add another day.” — Fred O. Sleeker, Spencer Square Amuse. Co., Rock Island, Ill.

“Have been running ‘Daredevil Jack’ for several weeks and our business on it is phenomenal. I have had to cut down the length of my show to give my patrons more time to see the serial.” — M. K. Miller, Novelty Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa.

“‘Daredevil Jack’ going big both here and at the Capitol. Have stood them out on each episode. Playing fourth at Diamond today and standing them out in the worst blizzard this winter.” — Diamond Theatre, Duluth, Minn.

“Have broken all attendance records on ‘Daredevil Jack.’ Have shown to some tremendous crowds with some big pictures but never to so many as on this serial. Lobby and sidewalk crowded. It is the best serial and biggest drawing card of any serial I have ever shown.” — L. D. Joel, New Casino Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla.

Pioneer Distributing System Growing

Contracts were signed last week between the Pioneer Film Corporation and Tom N. Parker, president of the Parker Film Company, Dallas, Texas, whereby the latter became a unit in the Pioneer Cooperative Distribution System.

The addition of this territory, which includes Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, leaves only two minor sections of the country without a Pioneer distributor. Negotiations are now under way with the remaining territories of the United States and it is expected that within the next two or three weeks the Pioneer system of exchanges will embrace the entire United States and Canada.

Eddie Bonns Managing Sales For Chester

Eddie Bonns, who has been associated with the Warner Brothers, leaves that organization to join C. L. Chester as Sales Manager of Chester Productions. Mr. Bonns will leave New York for Los Angeles Tuesday for a conference with Mr. Chester.

The Chester organization, which has in the past specialized in Scenes and Comedies, has now arranged to extend its activities to feature productions.

Beban Picture Should Please All Classes

George Beban, who plays the Italian role in "One Man in a Million," which will be distributed and exploited by Sol Lesser, states, in connection with this picture, "I have a picture that will please the masses, the classes, the young and the old." Beban is the author, director and producer of "One Man in a Million."

Harry H. Poppe Will Write For Screen

The ranks of those who write for the screen were swelled last week when Harry H. Poppe announced that he had resigned as advertising and publicity manager for A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., and had embarked in business for himself as a writer of original stories for the screen. He has established his headquarters at 3 East 44th street, New York.

Will Make Short Subjects

A LIBRARY of short features with a world-wide circulation term name for a program of one and two-reel features now being produced and contemplated by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation. The relation held by short stories and magazines to the world of fiction is similar to the relation of the short subject to the motion picture industry. One and two-reel comedies are even more popular than the short humorous stories of the magazines. The demand appears to be far greater than the supply at all times. To date, Reelcraft Pictures have given comedy the first consideration, not particularly in choice, but because of the demand of the exhibitors. Four producing companies already are furnishing comedies for the Reelcraft program. Billy West is supplying one two-reel every other week; Mr. Howell a two-reel comedy every alternate week; Billy Francy one-reel comedies are being released one every week; while Millboard Morant is making a series of two-reel comedies that are said to be different from the ordinary trick producer, to be released every other week. Morant has surrounded himself with cast including Helen Williams, Fritz Ridgeway, Joe Bonner and Albert Houston. Many of the scenarios have been completed by Grover Jones, the well-known humorous title writer.

For the followers of the melodrama and scenic western action, Texas Guinan is featured in a series of two-reel Westerns, directed by J. Hunt. These Westerns have proved exceedingly popular. Texas Guinan is remembered for her dealing winsome lugubrious roles in musical comedies, and proves just as winsome and dashing in the movies. Cartoons have also been considered by Reelcraft, negotiations have been progressing, whereby a naturally known comic character, appearing a popular series of newspaper cartoons may soon be drawing an animated weekly release for Reelcraft distribution. Educationalists will also be made and distributed. The scenario series of the Reelcraft program will be supplied by Ida B. Burrow under the Sunset Scenic brand. Mr. Burrow has a special motor track equipped and fitted for the purpose of developing his pictures as he takes them on location, enabling him to motor from place to place, with little disregard of railroads. Burrow claims that the most beautiful spots in all the United States are farthest from railroad stations, and a motor car is the only means of getting to these wonder places of nature. The scenic series will be one-reel each and released weekly.

One of the innovations planned by Reelcraft is a series of pictures which, it is hoped, are different from any now being offered in the field of short subjects. A popular male star of international fame will be featured in a series of stories by prominent author. These pictures are not planned for release before early fall and announcement will be made later concerning the star and the pictures. Release dates are planned for release from time to time.

National advertising campaigns will be carried on each separate series of releases. A service department has also been established and is now working on advertising plans for the individual exchanges distributing Reelcraft Pictures.

Film Millennium Near!' Says Louis Burston

The film business is facing its greatest prosperity year, according to Louis Burston, serial producer, who leaves New York for his Los Angeles studios next week to complete production of "The Great Reward," his new Francis Ford serial.

Mr. Burston bases his judgment upon a study of developments within his six weeks close contact with Eastern producers and Eastern capital since his return to New York. He sees every reason to believe that the old prophecy that motion pictures would some day be established as are other popular products of public consumption, is about to be immediately fulfilled.

New Company Starts Work

Screen Crafts Begins on "The Great Physician," a Seven-Reeler

WITH H. M. Lawson, veteran exponent of motion picture playhouses in Arizona and Northern California, as president and general manager, Screen Crafts, Inc., the newest organization to enter the film production field, this week commenced work on "The Great Physician," under the direction of Chadwick Ayres, director of many screen successes.

A noteworthy cast has been assembled for the play and includes some of the foremost artists of the silent drama. Robert McKim is leading man and Rhea Mitchell is leading lady, while other well-known players in the cast include Snowden Buxendale, who has just entered motion pictures after a long career on the New York legitimate stage; Arnold Gregg, Lew Morrison, Charlotte Woods, Robert Anderson, Max Davidson, Olga Gray and Maxine Adair.

The Great Physician," a story from the pen of the well known author of screen plays, Carrie B. Hutcherson, is in seven inspelling reels, and was scenarized by Clarence Lady, who has been assigned the task of writing continuity for forthcoming Screen Crafts production.

Arto-Graf Will Film Robert Bennett Story

Hard on the heels of the release of "The Desert Scorpion" and "Wolves of the Street," comes the announcement by the Arto-Graf Film Company, that the production is well upon the way of "Finders Keepers," one of Robert Ames Bennett's stories. Edmund Cobb and Vito Muscari will be featured.

Billy Franey Making Reelcraft Comedies

Billy Franey is now being featured by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation in a series of one reel comedies. Production has been going on for some weeks at the Hollywood studios of Reelcraft under the personal direction of Franey. Release date for the first release is set for May 17th.

Hallroom Boys Getting Good Publicity

Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of the Hallroom Boys comedies in which Edwards and Hugh Fay are featured, report that the syndication of the comic Percy and Perdelle cartoon strips by the New York Sun is proving of great publicity value for exhibitors booking the series.

The Cohns announce that in addition to the newspaper publicity they are getting on the Hallroom Boys Comedies, they will shortly inaugurate a beautiful poster which all exhibitors using the series will be urged to adopt.

Early Release Date For Marie Doro Picture

Announcements have been issued by the Pioneer general office in New York that the May release will be Marie Doro in "Midnight Gamblers," supported by Godfrey Tearle and a large cast of well-known stars which includes Mary Jeffcline, Charlotte Maitland and Sam Livesey. An elaborate display of holographs, lobby displays and novelties is being arranged.

Kohn One Reelers Will Star Bill Jones

Marion H. Kohn Productions, which are featuring Patsy Moran and Grace Connolly in two-reel comedies and westerns, respectively, announce that no changes have been made in regard to the footage of the "Smiling Bill" Jones Comedies, which will continue as single-reelers.
Una Trevelyn as Grace Goodwright in "The Devil's Passkey," Von Stroheim's current release.
SIX large settings occupy a greater portion of the Vitagraph stage and lot this week, and gives the impression that William Duncan has a much larger studio. All of these settings were especially built for the last two episodes of the Duncan serial, "The Purple Harey." One of the largest is a tunnel 500 feet in length which will be used for scenes in the final climax. The Duncan Company has set a unique production record of filming scenes every day since they began work on this serial.

The Vitagraph Company headed by Earle Williams and directed by Chester Bruniard, is planning to leave for San Francisco to make Chinatown scenes for "The Purple Harey." From the story by Will F. Jenkins, and scenario by J. Grubb Alexander. Upon the company's return from San Francisco, there will be an opening of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" at San Pedro where substance scenes will be taken.

The Tom Terris Company filming "The Girl Out of the Sky," from the Gouverneur Morris story, has returned from Catalonia Island where scenes for the fourth and fifth episodes are being taken. Story for this serial was written by President Albert E. Smith and Cleveland Moffit.

A last minute get set for "The Hidden Danger" serial was used this week after considerable delay in finding suitable locations. The scenes required thirty hundred feet more than six feet in height. William Bertram is the director of this serial and Joe Hyman and Jean Paige are being featured.

Joe Rock and Earl Montgomery have completed three two-reel comedies, and are taking a short vacation. Larry Senon is working on a book stage baroque which will be titled "The Stage Hand," and Director Jesse Robbins is filming a mountain comedy with Jimmy Aubrey.

Announcement was made this week of the marriage of Ernest F. Smith, son of W. S. Smith, general manager, western Vitagraph studios, and Miss Grace Chapman. The groom is a member of the Vitagraph camera staff.

Announcement is made of the change of three titles of forthcoming Metro productions. One of these is the Bert Lytell subject adapted from the I. A. Wyle story, "The Temple of Dawn," which will be released under the title of "The Price of Redemption." The final scenes for this were made by Lytell and Director Dowlan, in the presence of Van Brunt this week, where battle scenes requiring 700 people in East Indian costumes were used.

The Winchester Smith production of "The New Henrietta" has been given the title of "The Seahorse," which has Buster Keaton in the name role.

The third final title to be decided upon is that of the picture featuring Alice Lake now being directed by Edwin Mortimer. This is adapted from the Julie Heyne play, "The Outsider," by A. P. Youngren. The picture has been titled "The Mirth Wife." A new screen Classics subject was commenced by Director Wm. C. Dowdall, which will feature Viola Dana, who plays the role of a slender dancer. The subject is titled "Head and Shoulders," and Gareth Hughes has been selected to play the masculine lead. Other principals will include Priscilla Answirth and Lawrence Grant.

One of the most important and attractive series of scenes for the company in the current production, "Billions," were filmed this week and consisted of the sequence shot around the Garden of Ryan and Shackelford. These scenes required the most elaborate settings built at the Metro studios.

Norman Kennedy has been cast to play one of the leading roles in "Hears Are Trumpan," which is a Drury Lane Drama, and will be put in production next week under the direction of Rex Ingram. Of the Metro's, to have Bert Lytell make a series of four pictures in New York, and this star will leave for the eastern studios as soon as the editing of "The Price of Redemption" is completed.

Jean Haver, song and vaudeville sketch writer, who has written for Mack Sennett and Roscoe Arbuckle, has been engaged by Metro to write the scripts for the Bussy-Kenton comedies to be made under the direction of Eddie Cline.

It was definitely stated at the Robert Bruniard Studios this week that an eastern branch plant of this company would be established in the near future, which bears out the previous announcement to this effect made in Motion Picture News. This definite information was given out on the eve of the departure of M. C. Leake, vice-president and general manager of the old Bruniard studios in Hollywood, for New York where he is to make a survey of producing conditions and select site for a plant to be erected in the east. While in New York Mr. Leake will also consummate contracts with a number of independent producing companies who plan to make pictures on the west coast.

Jack Cunningham, the screen author who is working on behalf of the American boy who gets into trouble, and he is considered the greatest authority of the country on the question of proper juvenile literature for the bad boy. made a member of the scenario staff of the B. Hampton Company at the Bruniard Studios.

Director Arthur Rossen has completed the making of all scenes for the company's recent production, "The Test," at the Bruniard studios. It is expected several weeks will be required for setting and editing of this subject.

Eileen Percy is to be featured in the screen version of the Arlne Van Ness Hynes play which was produced at the Fulton theatre, New York, "Here, Hoeter, the Mayor." This play, which was originally a drama, has been converted into a musical comedy, and is being made under the direction of Paul Cazevene. Ramsey Wallace is the leading man, and the cast includes Martha Mathio, Stanton Heck, Catharine Van Buren, Frank Clark and Joe Ray.

The Shirley Mason picture adapted from the story, "The Kid from Nowhere," being directed by Howard M. Mitchell, has been given the permanent title of "The Little Wanderer," which is being directed by Scott Dunlap. Jane McAlpin will play opposite Russell. The Max Brand story, "The Untamed," will serve as the next vehicle for Tom Mix.

Severl changes have occurred at the William Fox studio pertaining to the personnel. Both Madeline Talmadge and Gladys Brockwell have fulfilled their contracts and have left that organization, Miss Talmadge being the most important of the former by way of the fact that the latter's recent production was "The Spirit of Good," and that of Miss Brockwell "A Sister to Salome," I was to be featured in the screen version of the Arlne Van Ness Hynes play which was produced at the Fulton theatre, New York, "Here, Hoeter, the Mayor." F. P. LASKY

JUDGE BEN B. LINDSEY and Mrs. Lindsey have arrived in Hollywood to play the parts of themselves in the William D. Taylor play based on the problem of the juvenile character previously titled "The Boy." Judge Lindsey gained international prominence by his work in behalf of the American boy who gets into trouble, and he is considered the greatest authority of the country on the question of proper juvenile literature for the bad boy. Others prominent in this play will be Horace A. Wade, the nine-year-old author of "The Great Peril!" and Louis Sargent, who wrote in "Huckleberry Finn," and Lila Lee.
It has been decided the Sir Gilbert Parker play, "The Translation of a Savage," will have a different title for the screen version, but at the studio it is reported no definite name has been selected. George Melford has made all scenes for this play, and is next to film "The Old Homestead." This well known play was selected for the Paramount program in 1915, and that production was re-issued as one of the Success Series in 1918. The coming production will be more elaborate in every respect and the players selected for this time are Theodore Roberts, Mabel Julienne Scott and Monte Blue.

Tom Geraghty has completed the scenario for "Burglar Proof," and this is to be put in production by Majow Morris Campbell as director and Bryant Washburn as the star. Sam Wood has taken up the direction of "The City Sparrow," starring Ethel Clayton, and Joseph Heneberry has been making good progress in the first starring vehicle for Richard Arbeisky, "The Life of the Party.

Ceel B. de Mille is leaving for a business trip to New York in the next few days, and his coming production, "Something to Think About," will be held for cutting and editing until his return.

HARRY GARBron has selected locations in the vicinity of Santa Barbara known as "The Channels," for the making of many of the scenes for the Sir Arthur Wing Pinero drama, "Mid-Channel, in which Clara Kauffman Young is to be seen in the role originally played by Ethel Barrymore in this play on the stage. J. Frank Glendon, who played opposite Miss Young in "For the Soul of Rafael," is playing opposite Miss Young in his coming production, and Florence Sullivan, who played a vamp role in the recent production, has also been re-entertained for "Mid-Channel." Joe Neely, a California author, who has a number of stories to his credit, has been placed in charge of the reading department of the Garson studio.

GOLDWYN

E V E R Y T H I N G is in readiness for the filming of the Ben Ames Williams story of the sea, "The Black Pearl," which is to be a Reginald Barker production. Russell Simpson, director of the story, has been engaged to play the main role, and the supporting players will be John Bowery, Helene Chadwick and Alec B. Francis.

Director Victor Sherzinger and the Mabel Normand Company have gone to San Francisco for harbor scenes for "Rosa Alvera." One of the sensational stunts to be performed by Miss Normand is that of leaping from the mast of a ship into the ocean.

Carl Gerlad has been selected for a role in the coming Jack Pickford film, "The Man Who Had Everything," now being directed by Al Green.

J. D. HAMPTON

C O M P L E T E all star cast for "Half a Chance," the initial Robert Thorby feature to be made at the Jesse D. Hampton studio, was announced this week to consist of Herbert Standing, Sidney Amsworth, William T. Taylor, Miss Mary McCall, and John Gough, who will play in support of the leads, Mahlon Hamilton and Ethel Hall. The continuity is an adaptation from the Frederick H. Inman novel of the same name.

Jesse D. Hampton has purchased the screen rights on the Marah Ellis Ryan story, "That Girl in the Rafter," which will be used as a starring vehicle for Blanche Sweet, and will be made following the completion of the Kenneth B. Clark story, "Port O' Caprice." Miss Ryan is author of two other stories recently filmed, "Tell 'Em in the Hills" and "For the Soul of Rafael."

E. L. Smith, general manager of Jesse D. Hampton Productions, returned this week from a trip of seven weeks to New York and principal cities in the East. One of the purposes of the trip was to confer with Howard E. Martin, the company's eastern representative, relative to stories suitable for Robert Thornton's and Henry King special productions.

Hydroplane and airplane scenes were made with Blanche Sweet this week, when with Director Henry King the actress went to location on Catalina Islands in a hydroplane.

The Jesse D. Hampton Production, "Felix O'Day," in six reels with H. B. Warner, was given its final preview at the Hampton studios this week. This E. Hopkins Smith film story opens in the aristocratic circles of England, and later in a New York atmosphere. It is spoken of as a powerful dramatic story of a man who is betrayed by his best friend, and deserts his wife to the repayment of the debt.

UNIVERSAL

U N I V E R S A L City units are busy in finishing the subjects recently started previous to the advent of the new supervising organization headed by Isadore Benstein, and this week's information is given out that plan of production is to be announced.

The work of filming the recently purchased South Sea Island story, "Marana," which was prepared for the screen by Doris Schroeder, was put under way this week by Director Norman Dawn. Ethel Roberts is to be starred in this picture, and the supporting cast was selected by Jack Perritt, Richard Chapman, Lucille Monlott, Lillian Phillips, Noble Johnson and Arthur Sears.

Mollie Burzon and the Ann Cornwall Company have been at Sacramento making river scenes for "The Girl in the Rafter," in taking scenes from a raft, a near accident was narrowly averted by cameraman Alfred Gooden, who dived into the water and prevented the raft from striking a large projecting rock which would have caused the

The Buffum Process of Art Title Making

- The first furrow in a new field of production possibilities.
Los Angeles, Calif.
May 10, 1920

Dear Exhibitors and Everybody:

Eight weeks, a few thousand dollars, a heap of tin-horn stock sets, redressed, a "masked mystery," a female lead—and the average "serial" is wished on you!

I've already spent sixty thousand smacks and three months on the first six episodes of my serial, "The Hope Diamond Mystery."

Say! My sets alone will cost one hundred thousand dollars; my company is headed by Grace Darmond and George Chesbro and Stuart Paton is directing; May Yohe, formerly Lady Francis Hope, wrote the plot and acts in it. Believe me, I am tickled to death—I've got an honest-to-goodness serial—clock-full of power and pull—coming along the home stretch!

I will be East with the reel goods as soon as I get good and ready.

So long,

HERE AND THERE

COMPLETE cast for the initial production of Kukin Films, Inc., "The Hope Diamond Mystery," has been announced in advance of the film's premiere. Among the stars are well-known people, including Carole Philbin, Harry Carter, Doris Karloff, William Marston, Ethel Shannon, and Capt. T. G. Stratton. The serial is an adaptation of the story written by May York, for which Frances Hope, and the timing is being prepared by Harvey Gates, Charles Gold, and John D. Clymer. The production is to be supervised by L. A. Winker and Sam Paton is in charge of the direction of the Technicolor episodes. Paul Griffith, an engaged technician of old, is in charge of lighting and settings necessary. The one now in the course of building is that representing an East Indian temple, which, it is stated, will cost $10,000.

Irving Willat, has leased space at the National Film Production's studio in Hollywood and plan to shortly begin the making of the first of the four productions to be made for release through W. W. Hodkinson. The first production is an adaptation of the J. N. Nescott novel, "Delaney Todd." Irvin V. Willat, who was made the only female of a few years prior to and since his returning from the army as a director and who was in charge of the finishing of the Holart Boxworth-Ince Special, "Behind the Door," is president and manager of this organization, and will direct the making of the four pictures.

The producing organization of the Cleon Photo-Play Corporation has been formed, the producer of another Lloyd B. Carleton production for Selznick Enterprises which will be "The Eagle's Mate," a story of the Virginia hills, by Anna Alice Chapin, author of "The Eagle's Mate," which proved such a success for the vehicle for Mary Pickford. At the present time the company is working on an old story in East Los Angeles at a new studio. The next few weeks will be on to the new plant which is now being built on Sunset Boulevard, near Gower street in Hollywood. The cast selected for this Carleton production includes Mignon Anderson, Ora Carew, Howard Miller and Edward Coxen.

Director George L. Cox, in charge of making the special production at the American Film Company studio at Santa Barbara, has just completed the story of "Blue Moon," adapted from a recent Bobbe Merrill book, and is now filming. "Whispering Smith," adapted from the story of that name by Frank Spearman. The cast selected for this subject includes "Andy's Home on the Range," by Charles B. Conover, Charles Syrjam, James Gordon, Robert Walker, Alfred Ferguson, Frederick Monley and others.

S CREENCRAFT, INC., recently organized in California, has leased the Casablenda studios at Culver City, and are preparing to film a seven reel metaphysical story entitled, "The Great Physician," which will feature Robert McKim and Rhea Mitchell.

Orpheum to Be Entirely Remodelled and New Ventilating System Installed

Fond du Lac Theatre Will Not Be Recognized When Decorators and Structural Workers Finish

The Orpheum theatre, Fond du Lac, Wis., owned by William F. Ainsworth, is being remodelled at an expense of $25,000, and when reopened on June 1 in its beautiful and enlarged form will be one of the most attractive picture houses in Wisconsin.

The plans for the remodeling, which was begun the second week in April, provide for the extension of the building some 35 feet, or to the full depth of the lot, 120 feet, and the utilization of the second story as well as the main floor for theatre purposes.

The structure will be fireproof throughout, the construction being of brick, concrete and steel. The projection room will be entirely of steel and concrete.

No change will be made in the lobby, but the foyer will be widened and made longer, this being made possible through the removal of the side stairway which now leads to the flat on the second floor. Separating the foyer from the main auditorium will be plate glass windows in mahogany settings.

From either side of the foyer a stairway will rise to the mezzanine floor from which a full view may be obtained of the theatre below. At the east end of the mezzanine floor and extending the entire width of the building will be the ladies' rest room, hung with rich draperies and furnished in wicker. Mr. Ainsworth's private office will be located on this floor.

From the mezzanine floor another double stairway will rise to the balcony, landing patrons at the middle of the balcony incline. There will be seating for 240 on this floor with two boxes of six chairs each. The ceiling clearance of the balcony will be ten feet at its lowest point and the balcony will extend 40 feet over the main part of the theatre.

The entire lower floor will be finished in mahogany and green and the floor itself will be constructed on the "clip" plan, which will give to each patron an unobstructed view of the stage. All steps will be eliminated even at the entrance and at the rear exits of which there will be two, one at either side of the stage.

There will be a 28-foot clearance to the ceiling at the lowest point on the first floor and a 38-foot clearance to the highest point.

A complete roof ventilating system will be provided. In addition to this two large suction fans will be installed, thus providing plenty of ventilation and an abundance of fresh air all the time.

The decorating scheme throughout will be old rose, dull grey and ivory, while a clever panel effect with Corinthian pillars and cameo center design will add to the attractiveness of the house. The side walls will be of stucco handsomely decorated.

Situated in the grills and on either side and also above the stage will be the pipes and other equipment of the new Barton organ which is to be the largest the concern makes and which will cost $10,000. This organ will be operated with a low wind pressure to give that soft and melodic tone so noticeable in the Barton organ which has been in use in this theatre for some time.

A large picture screen, known as a Mazda Gold Plate screen, will be installed as Mazda equipment is used throughout. The projection room, which is located at the extreme east end of the balcony will contain three modern machines, two for daily use and one for emergency purposes.

New leather upholstered chairs will be used installed throughout the building which will have a seating capacity of 750 or more than double that of the old theatre.

The plans for the remodeled theatre were drawn by K. S. Lapina of Chicago. The contract is held by the Inman Construction Co. of Fond du Lac. It is expected that the remodeling will not interfere with the exhibitions for the first three weeks. However, Mr. Ainsworth plans to close the theatre about May 1 for a month reopening on June 1.

Mr. Ainsworth became proprietor of the Orpheum four years ago. Under his management the patroonage has steadily increased the business for the first three months of the present year being double that for the same period in 1910.

Strand in Remodelled Form Stands Out as One of Dubuque's Finest Theatres

Formerly an Unimposing Structure of Brick but Now Finished Throughout in White

The most modern, up-to-the-minute theatre in Dubuque, la. is, without question, the Strand, owned and managed by the Bradley and Machy Real Estate Co. The Strand, or the New Strand, as it should properly be called, was opened to the public October 16, after almost a year's remodeling, caused by its having been gutted by fire two years previous.

The theatre, formerly a gloomy red brick building, has been finished in pure white, with the result that its simple beauty attracts the attention of all passers-by. Great electric lamps illuminate the building, and the bills are announced by means of a mammoth electric changeable-letter sign. There are plenty of exits and entrances, with panic-proof latch bolts on each door.

The interior decoration is a work of art. The lobby is of fine tile of blue and white design, while the woodwork is mahogany. The ticket booth is conveniently located to one side, leaving the remainder of the lobby for attractive displays. One enters through swinging doors, into the sub-lobby, and from thence either to the theatre proper or to the balcony. The floors of the entire theatre are carpeted to match the other furnishings; the walls and ceilings, of which there are two, are made of wood with gold—indeed, a combination of rare beauty. The chairs are the most comfortable for theatre use and are silver grey leather upholstery.

Broad stairways on either side of the inner lobby lead to the balconies, where the same pains have been taken for beauty and comfort as for the downstairs. Miniature floor lamps serve as a guide to the theatricalgoers who enter during the show ing of a picture. On the right landing before the entrance to the balcony is a cozy nook, with chairs, settee and reading lamp, where patrons may wait, if they so desire, until the beginning of the next performance.

The Keller Electric Company has in stalled modern indirect lighting system, and in so doing have arranged to combine serviceability with art. The screen is set rather back on a fair sized stage, and half hidden lights of turquoise blue give it the necessary light and produce a most artistic effect. A fire-proof picture booth is equipped with two of the latest model Simplex projecting machines and the remainder of the mechanical devices of the theatre are in excellent condition.

The Strand has not an orchestra, but the installation of a $10,000 Kimball pipe organ, with orchestra attachment, furnishes so excellent a substitute that the theatre's patrons have no desire for an orchestra. The organ is played by a first-class musician, whose excellent music attracts not a little patronage of his own.

The Strand was remodelled under the direction of James Gregory, and the electrical end was left to the Keller Electric Company. The first class condition of the Strand is due, in a great measure to their efforts to carry out every detail of the plans of the management.

Since its opening the Strand has shown nothing but first-run pictures, and is now a splendid example of a theatre which endeavors to give its patrons the best.

Oil Burning Equipment for Theatres May Solve Problems of Many Amusement Places

The Allen Theatre in Winnipeg Boasts of One of First Installations of This Nature

It may be true that the supply of crude oil in this country will dwindle to nothing in the next ten years, but one thing is fairly certain—the oil supply of today is more regular and dependable than the coal supply. That is one of the reasons that caused the builders of the Allen theatre in Winnipeg to decide on an oil-burning heating equipment. There are other reasons, such as the absence of dust and ashes, the ease of regulation and the plentiful supply of heat, all of which are of importance in Canada where the winters are anything but mild.

It is not our intention to go into the technical details of the type of oil burners used at the Allen, but we do wish to explain their workings so that other prospective builders of theatres will have a general idea of the layout of a heating system using oil as its fuel.

Fig. 1 shows one corner of the boiler room with the blower and a motor, the latter shown at the extreme edge of the illustration. This turbine fan supplies several thousand cubic feet of air per minute at 4 to 5 ounces of pressure, to the burners. The air is required in order to mix with the oil and produce an inflammable mixture. Smaller pipes will be noticed leading from a point just below the boiler door. These conduct the oil from the reservoir to the burners. The reservoir is a steel storage tank from which the fuel oil is pumped by means of a small motor-driven pump.

Fig. 2 shows the burner itself. The large pipe is the one leading from the air pump and the small one is the oil feed pipe. The oil passes through the center of the gun and is discharged into the inside of the cup, which is shown detached, at the lower right-hand corner of the photograph. The air, which enters through the large pipe, also passes up the gun and drives the oil cup at a high rate of speed as it passes through the vanes inside the cup. This rotation of the oil cup causes the oil to be broken up into a fine film and atomized as it is discharged from the outer end. The air exhausted through the turbine mixes with the oil and produces a combustible mixture.

The rotary type of machine shown in Fig. 3, operates somewhat differently. The motor at the left revolves the long shaft and the burner head, by means of gearing in the gear box.

The fuel oil is fed to the machine by a pump and then passes through a pipe which you see entering towards the bottom of the gear box. It then passes up an oil spindle which you see lying in front of the picture and is discharged from a spout into the burner head which revolves about four thousand revolutions a minute. The oil, by centrifugal action, is thrown upwards over the outwardly tapering face of the burner and discharged between the air vanes. The upper and lower set of vanes on the burner create the air supply so that there is merely an outwardly moving film of oil discharged between two outwardly moving layers of air.

Referring again to picture No. 2, the circular air valve is held up as long as air is passing into the burner and this holds the lever handle in such a position that the burner is kept in forward position on the rack. At the same time the segmental rack into which the oil valve adjusting lever is set is also held in position. As soon as air is cut off the oil valve handle automatically closes and at the same time the burner is automatically pulled back out of the fire.

The oil burning equipment described was designed, patented and installed by the Fess Oil Burners of Canada, Ltd. This particular installation was the first made in the vicinity of Winnipeg and its operation is being watched with great interest by theatre men and theatre architects.

Oil burners can generally be used in high-class residential sections where soft coal is prohibited and for this reason the successful outcome of the Allen heating plant may lead to the adoption of oil burners in many of the newer theatres to be erected in exclusive neighborhoods.

A Page Showing the Tendency in Modern Lobby Design

The magnificent lobby of the Capitol theatre in New York would have been a wonderful sight in black and white, but in its colors of café au lait and gold it is proving to be one of the show places of the city.

Contrasting to a certain extent the quiet tones of the Capitol, the lobby of the new Brooklyn Strand with its high colors carried out in the style of the Pompeian period exhibits a lavishness seen in but few other buildings in this country.

Singapore Theatres Well Housed

Singapore prides itself on having three movie houses. They are the Palladium, Liberty Hall and the Empire Cinema. These theatres are furnished with pictures about the same time that they are shown in the States. The Strait Settlements is a hotbed of movie fans. The exhibitors are imbued with western ideas and herald their pictures widely with posters, throw aways and other advertising schemes. They also have learned the value of theatre "fronts.

K. W. Tunn, the native manager of the Universal branch, reports that all that is necessary is to announce a Universal serial and the theatres are packed.

Toledo's Million Dollar House

Toledo is to have a million dollar movie house, to be known as Zorn's Million Dollar Capitol Theatre. It will seat 2,500 persons and is to be designed along the lines of the Capitol theatre in New York City.

Edward Zorn, who has been manager of the Temple theatre in Toledo for years, and Joseph Fleming of the Temple staff, are interested in P. E. Severcok and E. B. Edmonds, Toledo Hotel men.

The new theatre will be opposite the Temple and beside the Federal Building. A big restaurant, and other business houses are occupying the new theatre site. Work will start within a few months, it is thought.

Mr. Zorn, together with several Toledo architects, is planning a trip to some of the country's largest theatres.

Zorn's Million Dollar Capitol theatre will be five stories high, built of steel and white terra cotta. There will be a large circular mezzanine with a nursery and maid in attendance. Beautiful marble stairs will lead to the mezzanine. The lot on which the theatre will be built has a 121-foot frontage and is 120 feet deep. It is in the heart of the business district and on St. Clair street—Toledo's theatre row.

Typhoon Fan Company Sales

Notes of New Theatres

Anthony Corlet of Wilmington, Del., states that he expects to open his New Victor Theatre at 1715 W. 4th Street about the first of June. He is installing a Hallberg generator, multiple screen, Powers motor driven machine, and will employ an orchestra to furnish the musical background.

Benny Freed, formerly a representative of the Fox Exchange of Philadelphia, is now managing the Lyric Theatre at Summit Hill, Pa.

Under the able management of Cha, Campbell, the Y. M. C. A. Theatre at Covina, Calif., has been doing a capacity business. The business has increased to such an extent that the Association has decided to make some extensive alterations, adding ten feet to the width of the theatre, gaining three hundred additional seats.

W. F. Boogar, formerly of Philadelphia but now operating a hotel at Coatesville, Pa., has plans for an 1800-seat theatre in connection with eight store rooms. On account of scarcity of material and labor shortage, he has deferred building until now. He reported to the writer that work will be started at once and when the building is completed will represent a $240,000 investment. Mr. Boogar first started in the moving picture business on Market Street in Philadelphia about 15 years ago and is interested in one or two of the theatres in Philadelphia at the present time.

George Brown of Parsons, Pa., states that he will soon commence work on remodelling and enlarging his Palace Theatre.

The citizens of Franklin, Del., are proud of the new 500-seat theatre erected by Benj. M. Jones, which will open during the week of Mar. 29.

Advance Facts on New Buffalo Theatre

The new Rivoli theatre in Broadway, just beyond Fillmore avenue, Buffalo, is nearing completion and could be opened in June, but it has been decided by Joseph Kozanowski, builder of the house, and Harry Dixon, city salesman for Realart, who will manage the theatre, to postpone the opening until September 1.

While the public will not be given a treat in neighborhood picture presentation this summer because of this decision and while the features of the house are being kept secret until opening day, the Motion Picture News representative is able to give some facts about this big theatre section in one of the most thickly populated sections of the Queen City of the Lakes.

The Rivoli has a frontage on Broadway of 85 feet and a depth of 145 feet. It will have a seating capacity of 2,000, and when completed will represent an outlay of close to $200,000. The roof of the house is constructed of red tapestry brick with terra cotta trimmings. The 2,000 seats are upholstered in leather and the number is divided between the first floor and a large balcony. The floors will be covered with rich carpets.

The music will be furnished by a 15-piece orchestra and large pipe organ. The stage, upon which will be erected an elaborate scene setting, will be 22 by 12 feet. There will be a double-deck foyer and a mezzanine floor. A large ventilating plant will force the bad air out and bring the fresh atmosphere in. The lighting system will be indirect throughout. There will be two large ticket offices in the lobby, each of which will have automatic machines. The throw in the Rivoli will be 137 feet and two new movie machines are now being installed by Al Becker of the Becker Theatre Supply Company, local agents.

Mr. Dixon, who will manage the Rivoli, is a veteran in the film game, having managed several local neighborhood houses. He is also former manager of a local exchange and just now is acting as city salesman at the Realart office, where he will remain until a few weeks before the Rivoli opening.

Development of the Mazda Lamp for Projection Purposes

A Series of Interest to All Projectionists

The condensers in use with the arc system when employed with Mazda projection were found to be unsatisfactory. First, they were of too long a focus. If the focus could be shortened, i.e., the lamp brought nearer the face of the condenser, more light would be picked up. Second, the image of the arc, as focused on the aperture plate with plano condensers functions well in putting a uniform picture on the screen; with the Mazda lamp, however, the filament and its mirror image are not uniform enough in brilliancy to allow it being focused in this manner—so some scheme had to be devised which would break up these images sufficiently to secure a uniform screen illumination.

Fig. 5—Mirrors of 7 in. and 5 in. diameters

The projection lens picks up any image which is at or near the aperture plate and reproduces it on the screen. Hence, if the light at the aperture plate is uniform, the light on the screen will be likewise. If the light, however, is uneven at the aperture plate, the screen itself may be streaked.

The prismatic or corrugated (8) condenser fulfills these requirements. Only one condenser is used—instead of two as with the arc (9). As contrasted with the comparatively long focus of plano condensers, the back focus of the prismatic, i.e., the focus on the light sides, is 2½", thus bringing the light source much nearer and increasing the amount of light picked up.

This is the third installment of an exhaustive article on the Mazda Lamp and its application to Projection. The author is H. Freeman Barnes, which is proof enough that the data is authoritative.

Naturally, the shorter we can make the focus of our condenser, the more light will be picked up. For instance, if we had a stream of water issuing from the nozzle of a hose in the form of a broad spray, if we attempted to catch a portion of this water in a bucket, the closer we place the bucket to the nozzle the more water would be collected.

It is the same with light and a condenser. Light issuing from a filament is analogous to the water coming from the nozzle of a hose. The condenser might be lightened to the bucket, and catches the rays of light, as the bucket catches the water.

The corrugations or rings on the surface of the condenser help to break up the filament image, thus insuring an even screen. Where plano condensers are used for projection with a Mazda lamp, the filament itself must be thrown out of focus and fairly even screen illumination is thus assured by the blurring of the image.

With stereopticon projection, on the other hand, a set of plano condensers must be used—and hence two sets of condensers are supplied; the corrugated for motion picture work, and plano condensers for stereopticon projection. With stereopticon projection, the projection lens is designed to pick up any image from a point directly in front of the condensing lens itself, so that if the condensing lens is perfectly clear, as the plano lens for example, the light on the screen will be uniform. Where an attempt is made, however, to use a prismatic lens, for stereopticon projection, the corrugations or rings of the condenser itself will be noticed upon the screen.

The projection lens used with motion pictures, however, focuses not upon the condenser itself, but upon the aperture. As the distance between the aperture and condenser is comparatively great, the corrugated condenser is more than enough out of focus—its corrugations therefore do not show on the screen, but, on the other hand, help to even up the screen illumination.

The prismatic condenser is 4 7/16 in. in diameter and 2 ½ in. focus, on the light source side. It can be placed from 6 ½ to 8 in. away from the aperture. The smooth or convex side faces the lamp. The corrugated or concave side is placed towards the film.

It has been determined from many experiments that the prismatic condenser will "pick up" light from an area approximately 4/10 of an inch in diameter—a circular area.

Fig. 6—Two views of the new prismatic condenser

In other words, at a place exactly 2½ in. back from the condenser there is a circular area 4/10 of an inch in diameter from which the light will be collected by the condenser and passed through the aperture plate, and finally through the projection lens on to the screen. In order to cover a circle 4/10 of an inch in diameter, it is necessary to make the filament 4/10 of an inch square.

Light rays from any filament outside this area, while striking the condenser will be bent in such a way that they will not pass through the aperture, and conse-

Work and Power

Whenever the resistance of an electric circuit overcomes energy is consumed and work is done. The mechanical analogy of this is the effect of the foot acting through a certain distance. A force may be exerted on a body but unless some motion takes place there will be no work done. Thus a generator may be revolving and producing an electromotive force, but unless an external circuit is connected to the terminals of the machine and a current caused to flow no work will be performed by the generator.

Energy is the ability to do work, thus electrical energy is the ability of a circuit to perform work.

quently are of no value in projecting the picture.

Another point: the angle between the lines drawn from the filament to the edges of the condenser, constitutes the useful angle. The light that is shot outside of this angle does not fall on the condenser and hence cannot be utilized.

Thus, also, the mirror, which is placed behind the lamp to collect the rays shot in that direction, should be large enough in diameter to pick up this angle of light, as described above, and reflect it back.

Even though the mirror is made to cover more than this "useful angle" and even though it does reflect a larger angle of light, the amount of light in excess of this useful angle will not strike the condenser. It will be passed to the outside of the condenser, and consequently cannot be called useful light.

Howells Equipment Company Takes Larger Quarters

Howells Cine Equipment Company moved last week from the offices it has occupied with David P. Howells, Inc., into new and larger quarters in Suite 1101-1111 of the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue.

The spacious quarters which have been taken over by the Howells Cine Equipment Company have been remodelled, redecorated and refurnished, and the projection room in connection has been reconstructed and reequipped.

Howells Cine Equipment Company was organized but six months ago by David P. Howells and placed under the management of Joe C. Hornstein, widely known in the equipment trade. It was formed largely to handle equipment, supplies and accessories in connection with the Howells international film organization and it has grown and expanded far beyond original expectations.

The new quarters of the equipment company adjoin the executive offices of David P. Howells, Inc., on the 11th floor of the Godfrey Building, and the new arrangement provides the Howells export business with a private projection room as well as furnishing the equipment company with a demonstration room.

"The foreign demand for American equipment and American accessories has been almost as great as the foreign demand for American pictures," said Mr. Hornstein in discussing the expansion of the company's business. "Theaters all over the world which as everybody knows are showing American films, are projecting them with American machines onto American screens, and in many instances the houses throughout are American equipped.

"We have been so able to organize our business since its inception that we are represented in every corner of the globe. A domestic business has been developed along with foreign trade until we simply outgrow the facilities and the space which we had in the Howells executive offices."

Mr. Hornstein is a pioneer in the film business. He has been projectionist and an exhibitor as well as an equipment specialist. He was one of the first to turn from the theatre to the equipment business.

Paper on Mazda Lamps in Portable Projectors

This paper by C. E. Egeles, to be read at the SMPE Convention, takes up the extensive developments in the portable equipments for the projection of motion pictures in places other than theatres have been dependent upon the improvements in the light projection, as well as on changes in the mechanism for handling the film. The principal efforts to obtain a maximum screen illumination have been:

1. Use of the meniscus-convex combination of condenser lenses to utilize a maximum amount of the light emitted by the lamp.
2. The use of higher speed objectives.
3. The modification of the lamp bulb to permit placing the source close to the condensing lens.
4. The determination of the best combination of lamp filament form and lens system.

The main types of machines are described. The main considerations affecting the performance of MAZDA lamps are enumerated, and their application in the design and the use of the machine in service are discussed.

White Light for Motion Picture Photography

By Wm. Roy Mott, Research Laboratory, National Carbon Company

The foreign makers of white flame lamps have lagged considerably behind the American manufacturers. An English flame lamp called Truelight is interesting because four arcs are used in series on 220 volts, with the current reversing direction at each arc and carbons changing size to maintain a focusing effect. Some of the early German flame lamps are shown in Eders Handbuch der Photographie, page 452. They can be of no importance compared with the American lamps.

Fig. 13—Wohl Overhead

Another type of flame lamp is the spot-light lamps operated usually by hand. These are used in the same way as the ordinary theatre spotlight lamps, but unlike the theatre lamps the carbons used should be the white flame photographic carbons or the white flame searchlight carbons. Some movie directors have told the writer that using the white flame photographic carbons increased the photographic light about six times compared with ordinary projector carbons. The white A. C. Projector carbon is not as efficient for studio lighting, as the white flame photographic carbon. The flame searchlight has also entered the motion picture field with great success. It is often operated fifty feet away, and with currents of 120 to 150 amperes. We will next consider homemade flame lamps. Electricians in motion picture studios have to continually devise new effects for simulating lanterns, indoor lamps, fires, etc. In general, it is a great mistake to make an article if it can be found on the market, but there are times when it is an advantage to know how to make a flame out of other lamps. This we will next consider.

Conversion of Enclosed Arcs to Flame Lamps

For some purposes a cheap lamp with adjustable current for changing the amount of light is convenient. In Fig. 15 and 16 are shown the electrical arrangements that the writer devised several years ago for doing this. The globes... should be removed from the lamps and where necessary the lower holders should be made rigid. All the electrical wiring should be arranged on one side of the arc, and then a resistance (or reactance can also be used on A C) is connected in multiple trims. They would be especially useful for overhead lighting and for blue printing.

We will turn to the consideration of the flame carbons which are the heart of the light production. A picture of the burning arc is shown in Fig. 27.

Motion Picture Flame Carbons

The chief carbon used for photo-engraving and photography is the white flame carbon of which over a million a year are now being sold for this class of work. In the larger sizes a special star shaped core is used. The color of the light can, where necessary, be changed to suit the exact requirement without buying a new lamp or even a new screen because the other flame carbons of different colors are available for these lamps when they are needed. The white flame is strictly a snowwhite light with a spectrum (Fig. 5) full of lines in its every part. This is most generally used. The pearl white is a light of little more suited for panchromatic and colored photography. The color of its light is very close to that of ordinary sunshine. The yellow flame carbon gives a light rich in red and green, but having comparatively little spectrum yellow or blue. The sensation of yellow light is produced by the combination in the eye of the red and green light. The violet in this light is fairly strong. The red flame arc gives a light rich in red and in spectrum yellow and has a fair amount of blue. The so-called "blue" flame carbons are designed to be especially rich in far ultra-violet beyond 3000 Å Angstrom units. This far ultra-violet is practically absent in sunshine and likewise the white flame arcs ordinarily used in photographic work. The near ultra-violet light is very important photographically with sunlight and skylight and with the white flame arcs. The ultra-violet of the white flame is largely in the region longer than 3500 Å Angstrom and it efficiently goes through ordinary glass.

An important improvement has been made in photographic lamps of metal coated flame carbons especially on the holder end. This metal coating reduces the holder drop in voltage from about half a volt to 1/20 of a volt so that a holder designed for 5 amperes use can with metal coated carbons be used at 20 and 30 amperes with long excellent service.

American white flame carbons, both in our tests and those throughout the United States have shown 10 to 15 per cent better efficiency of light and longer life on the average than the foreign carbons. This is because of superior knowledge and skill that the American carbon manufacturers have as regards the making of these flame carbons. This condition of superiority has been manifested for several years.

Correction of a Kinematograph Lens

The seven conditions which must be as nearly fulfilled as possible are:

1. Chromatic aberration;
2. Spherical aberration;
3. Sinc condition;
4. Astigmatism;
5. Coma aberration;
6. Distortion;
7. The lens must have a certain aperture.

I will take the aberrations one by one, and shortly explain what they are, and how they affect the picture.

1. Chromatic aberration is due to the fact that blue light is more refrangible than red light. This effect shows itself by the various colored images being in various places along the axis, and of different sizes. This must be corrected as well as possible, at any rate the yellow image and blue image must be brought to the same plane on the axis, since you focus your image with a mixture of colors in which the yellow orange is the strongest as far as visual effect is concerned, but you are taking your picture with the blue and violet light which is achromically much stronger than the visual rays.

The arrangement of the two images, blue and yellow, in this way disposes (if we do not take into account the correction required for apochromatic lenses such as are used for three-color work) of the chromatic aberration. I may here say that owing to a judicious selection of glasses for our Xpers, this lens is almost semi-apochromatic, as is shown by many examples of lenses we have supplied for taking pictures with three-color filters.

2. The spherical aberration has its seat in the spherical form at present employed for all surfaces of lenses, even the plane surface can be considered as a spherical surface with an infinitely long radius. There is no getting away from this aberration unless we were to use other than spherical curves for our lenses. Mathematically, this is quite possible, but practically—well, we are not there yet by a long way.

The effect of the aberration is plainly shown on the drawing, Fig. 1. A ray which passes through a lens near the center cuts the axis in O. One that goes through the margin of the lens will cut the axis at a point considerably nearer to the lens than the axial ray, namely, in O. In other words, if such a lens were required to give a picture, we could get one either by blacking out the margin and putting our plate in the position $E_0$, or by blacking out the center and putting our plate in the place $O_0$.

\[ \text{Fig. 1} \]

Fortunately for the designer the aberration goes in the inverse way when a negative lens is considered, and we have thereby the means of counteracting the spherical aberration of a positive lens. We combine a positive lens of low refractive index with a negative one of high refractive index, and in this way balance the aberration, but not quite. Some is left over, but in a peculiar form, as Fig. 2 will show. We have now brought the central and marginal rays together at $O_0$, but the rays falling into intermediate zones of the lens are still falling short of the desired point $O_0$. They meet somewhere between $O_0$ and $O_0$, according to what distance from the center ray they pass through the lens.

(To be concluded)

This residue of aberration cannot be got rid of entirely, and it behoves the designer to make it so small that it does not affect the picture. If the residual or zonal aberration (as it is called) is too large, the defect will show itself when focussing your picture with the full aperture, and taking it after having stopped the lens down. Lenses which have this defect must be focussed with the aperture, with which the picture is going to be taken.

The zonal aberration is so small in the 35 Xpres that no precautions need be taken on this account.

3. Sine condition. The fulfilment of this condition is a sine qua non for photographic lenses of the highest quality. Its name is taken from certain points in the calculation; it means that the trigonometrical sines of certain angles should be in a certain ratio. What it all amounts to is this. All images produced by rays passing through the various zones of the lens aperture should be of the same size. In other words, if we get a certain size image on the plate when blacking out the margin of the lens, this same size image should be produced when blacking out the center of the lens and working with the margin.

Conquering the Night

A phenomenal motion picture in which the possibilities of photographic illumination were well demonstrated was made on the night of February 21st, during a howling blizzard. This unusual feat was accomplished by the use of the Sun-Light Arc. Lamps were placed on the top of Aeolian Hall, at the Bush Terminal Sales Building and the Capitol Theatre, at the opposite ends of the Great White Way at Times Square. An area extending for more than ten city blocks was illuminated.

The men in charge of the lamps on the tops of these buildings report anything but an easy task. It was one of the worst storms of the winter and the combination of driven snow and terrific wind subjected the lights to one of the worst tests that could be conceived. But no trouble of any kind was evident during the hoar and a half of continuous running.

To those who have been privileged to see the projection of the film the effect secured was marvelous. So successful was the lighting that it is possible to distinguish the familiar Black and White Taxis from those of other colors. Theatre goers were seen proceeding homeward in the sweeping snow and what was most astonishing was the fact that all their movements were normal. This was accomplished through the ability of the cameramen to secure adequate lighting and yet crank at normal speed.

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY ROCHESTER, N. Y.
PROBABLY the only musical instrument designer today, who has had actual experience in playing pictures in theatre pits and who knows both the good and the bad conditions that have to be encountered in theatres as to climatic changes, dampness, etc., is Dan W. Barton, general manager of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, who designed the Bartola and new Barton Pipe Organ. Likewise there are few men in the moving picture industry whose entire life has been spent in the show business, as has that of Dan Barton and few enjoy such a wide acquaintance in the trade.

The lure of the show called him so strongly that before he quit school he played in theatre orchestras and, at the age of sixteen, was "trooping" the cities of Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota with an over-land Uncle Tom's Cabin Show and spent seventeen years playing "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Ten Nights in a Bar-Room," carnivals, medicine shows, circuses and theatres.

He became interested in the picture end of the business when the industry started and was one of the first drummers that ever designed special sound effects to fit the picture. We all remember the good old days when the stunt was to make every sound possible to accompany the red and Dan Barton's trick was to create or invent the apparatus to produce the necessary sound. This probably was the start of the Bartola as this led him into the real musical end of the business, as the sound effect part of it soon passed away.

After trooping a long time on the road and diligently saving all he could, he spent it all in a short time experimenting with the Bartola. A company was organized to exploit the instrument but lasted only about a year and at the end Mr. Barton found himself broke.

During this year, however, several Bartolas had been made, installed and were real successes and with this foundation, W. G. Maxey was interested in the proposition and the present Barton Musical Instrument Company, of which Barton is the general manager put into the organization, with the result that today it is one of America's leading makers of musical instruments for motion picture theatre use.

Most of our successful men have hobbies and Dan Barton finally acquired one, although in his early life he was so busy doing "two a day" with a parade every morning and resting up on Sundays, that he did not have time to acquire one through the last ten years, however, he had had two. One of them is Bartola, as, during that time he got up with it, worked all day with it, went to bed with it and then dreamed of it, and all theatre men are agreed that he has reason to be proud of his hobby and of his success with it. He started in by inventing the instrument, then organized the factory, trained the men how to build the special apparatus, then moved into the business management of the factory end of the enterprise and finally also took over the selling division.

Mr. Barton's second hobby and one which has made him one of the most popular men in the moving picture industry is the point he makes of becoming personally acquainted with each purchaser of a Bartola or Barton Pipe Organ in order to see that his instrument is properly installed and kept in perfect condition, and that the satisfaction of the buyer with the Barton Musical Instrument Company is as it should be.

In the past two years Mr. Barton's company has shown remarkable growth and the plant, although trebled in capacity, is kept working at top speed for Barton and the new Barton Pipe Organ, which was recently put on the market, and already has become known as a splendid instrument.

Mr. William O. Dolan

EXHIBITORS throughout the country are today spending millions of dollars yearly for musical accompaniment to pictures. It is an indisputable fact that all expenditures must be justified from a practical and remunerative standpoint. Only five years ago money spent for music in the motion picture industry amounted to about 5 per cent of what is being spent today. Being aware of the above fact we believe we are entitled to ask one question: Who is responsible for the creation such continuous flow of money into the pockets of thousands of musicians and hundreds of music publishing houses. This prosperity if due to several aggressive men, "pioneer advocates of Better Music For The Film." Mr. William O. Dolan can justly be considered one of these "pioneers" who through constant and persistent aggressiveness has proved to certain exhibitors and to the public in general that music is not only an essential and the necessary part of the motion pictures, but a necessity.

Only a few years ago Mr. Dolan started as musical director in the Avenue Grand theatre, of Washington, D. C. His orchestra at that time was the typical nickelomn kind, piano, violin and drums. Today the Avenue Grand theatre has an orchestra of eleven men and as per information received from authentic sources we can say that this theatre is experiencing less difficulty in paying high wages to eleven men today that they did when they paid low wages to fewer men a few years back. The above facts reveal a book, and to analyze the reasons why an eleven men orchestra is today replacing a three men orchestra would take too much space.

Mr. Dolan in most instances reviews the pictures for the purpose of selecting musical accompaniments, or, he uses the various music cues issued by the film companies. Mr. Dolan has a music library of thousands of numbers and he is still constantly adding new material. In a recent conversation with Mr. Dolan, he admitted that every day brings forth conclusive proof that he has not as yet accumulated a library that could cover perfectly every conceivable angle of appropriately selecting music for pictures.

Persistency on the part of Mr. Dolan has developed the Avenue Grand theatre from a small house into a large house. This compelled the rival exhibitor to increase his orchestra. Whether he did this through his own realization or through competition makes absolutely no difference. Something was the cause for it. The reason we emphasize this point is to show that men of Mr. Dolan's caliber are of great value to the industry in general and are indirectly responsible for the fact that thousands of orchestras are today employed in this particular phase of the industry and are deriving comfortable incomes.

Vanishing Trails
(Selig Serial—Fifteen Episodes—Released by Canyon Pictures)

"Vanishing Trails" is a serial specializing in the mystery element, more or less ghostly and terrorizing thrills. From the four episodes viewed we gather that almost the entire serial is laid in a western setting, where, while the thrills are not as diversified in character as in some serials nevertheless lose none of their punch.

Franklyn Farnum plays the lead "Silent" Joe, the adventurer. He is going to satisfy most audiences, for in addition to fulfilling all emotional requirements, he is well-built and sufficiently athletic to accomplish some severe stunts. Mary Anderson plays opposite him and does very well, although we do not see much of her in the first three episodes. Other numbers of the cast are thoroughly capable.

The mystery revolves around the murder of millionaire Stillwell, and the finding of the heir to his fortune. The action shifts from the metropolis to the wild west where the villain draws a dead line about the country of "Vanishing Trails." "Silent" Joe arrives in an effort to discover the murderer and also to prove that he is the true heir. It is in these mountainous surroundings that Joe and the heroine meet with their adventures. They are aided by The Shadow, a crusader scientist, with a cleverly trained dog, and some remarkable, death-dealing inventions. Excellent judgment has been shown in not making this character so impossible as to be absurd, as in the case of some "clutching hand" serial.

The same is the locale is the only objection possible, and this may be overcome by the fact that your audience will only see two reds at a sitting, instead of eight, as the reviewer did. It will be better received than most serials, we believe, because of the entertaining story. It gets a good start, which is most important, not because of any supreme thrill in the opening episode, but because the mystery is well planned, and the interest thoroughly aroused. There are excellent riding scenes, fast action, and good scenery in the succeeding episodes. It is on the whole, as far in advance of the first serials, as the present day feature is of the five year old photoplay.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

Dangerous Eyes
(Fox Sunshine Comedy—Two Reels)

Chester Conklin is a janitor in a department store in his latest Sunshine Comedy and, by his antics and several novel stunts, manages to draw some real good laughs.

There is even less plot here than in the usual modern slapstick, which may be beneficial or detrimental, according to your own viewpoint. This comedy is unique inasmuch as there is no landing beach, or swimming pool in evidence. But the bathing girls, transformed into manikins of a fashion show, make their appearance in a munition stage setting. The lines are not over emphasized, as there is a close up of each one. With clothing dummies galore, the director has managed to get some clever comedy. Only in the second half of the latter reel does the races of the roofs of half of Los Angeles, apparently, skipping lightly across the spaces between buildings.

In no way does the picture become vulgar, and therefore only the one who might be objected to by some, as being a trifle suggestive. J. G. Blyston was the director and Hampton del Ray supervised.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

An Eastern Westerner
(Harold Lloyd Comedy—Rolin-Puthe—Two Reels)

Realizing that most every rival comedian has had a fling at burlesquing the pioneer acts of the West, Harold Lloyd has adjusted his horn-rimmed spectacles, looked over the landscape and said "I could do it too!

The result is "An Eastern Westerner." Now this comedy isn't as rich in incident or as spontaneous in its development as its immediate fore-runner, "Haunted Spooks," but that isn't saying that the piece falls by the wayside. On the contrary it doles out a full quota of funny tricks and stunts which keep one in a mirthful attitude from the introductory flash. Now some of this business has been worked before not only by Lloyd, but by his rivals, yet somehow he injects so much of his individuality into his methods that he never appears old-fashioned.

His trick of sitting down in the box and when it starts, finding him seated on a lumber pile is a Stennett invention. But Lloyd makes it look new. This time his father, tired of laying him about the East, sends him to the wild and woolly country. During his sojourn back home he has been expelled from a jazz palace because of dancing the shimmy. He did his best to obey the rules but some crude gent had tossed some ice cream down his back and it naturally made him shiver. The western action is hot off the griddle—the inevitable bad man and the outlaw furnishing the gun-play and Lloyd squeezing out the humor. His scene in the card game when he becomes the waiter—in order to find out the hands of his opponents—is ludicrous. The girl's father is imprisoned by the bully but Lloyd effects his rescue. Which introduces the mad chase. The outlaws, dressed like Vaudevilles make a wild effort to capture him but he eludes them through the employment of timely skateboard. Timely! Any hat or brick is timely when it comes in contact with one's "head."

The West has been here and the east forces are pretty much on the defensive. This picture makes an effort to show that they are at least equal. Some may say that they are not quite as excellent as "The Bottom of the World," for instance, but the whole picture is well worthy of the office value. This one keeps up to the high standard.—LAURENCE REID.

The Bottom of the World
(Sir Ernest Shackleton Scene—Robertson-Cole)

Exhibitors can catch the importance of this special scene since it is given the favored position in all publicity matters. At the Rivoli, New York. It certainly ranks high as one of the screen's masterpieces in scenic productions. And if some feature pictures do not measure up to your standards there is no reason why you cannot substitute with "The Bottom of the World." As far as we are able to recollect these are the first series of pictures taken in the frozen spaces of the earth, and they will stand as something to be remembered by everyone who sees them. Some may say that they present no peril, but the entire expedition by England's daring explorer was fraught with peril.

It has been said that the Antarctic regions are more dangerous to navigation than the reaches which surround the North Pole. Certainly Sir Ernest Shackleton has made history—the kind that goes down in the hall of fame and that enriches the screen. The orchestra stopped playing during the unfolding of the scenes, which gives an idea of its death-dealing accident. Here is DRAMA the will to live—the law of self-preservation. The conflict is between the hardy explorers and the ice-bergs, impassable ice, and a temperature as ruthless as the ice itself.

The spectator is thrilled at Shackleton's departure on the good ship "Endurance." The dogs are drilled, the provisions are stowed away and the ship sails on. Slowly it navigates up the river of ice until it can go no further. Then all is made ready for the long winter months. The dogs are given daily exercise—the ice is cut and soundings made—a snow "tank" is used which proves a failure—a life line is stretched while research work is carried on. These are only a few of the scenic effects in the first part of the picture.

The "Bottom of the World" is being released in two parts.—LAURENCE REID.
Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

This index also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the films, and popularized the review. In addition, a final line fairly summarizing the consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to January 3, 1920.

George Walsh will Please in Feed Story

They have given George Walsh the popular vocations of "moon-shining" and mixed him up in a good old mountaineer feud in this production. The picture is quite satisfactory, for besides the usual good work of the star there is some really fine scenery as a background for the story, careful production, and very successfully rendered. Helen Ware is just right as the young woman of the picture. The picture is that there are more bullets than flats flying through the air, and the star waits until the last reel to get over his big slugging match. This fight, incidentally, is with a man who offers little resistance, and resolves itself into a one-sided affair. For this reason there is a loss of sympathy for the star.

Some half a dozen men and a little baby are killed before the young Kentucky hero sees the folly of continuing the feud. He is in alarm, for his sweetheart and everybody else involved want to see all their enemies completely annihilated. But the villains, known by the very modern title of "the moonshining thrash," begin fighting among themselves, and the star punishes them with the ivory instead of a rifle.

Irene Boyle is the only one of the cast who does not quite fit her role. Such detail as making the "moon-shine" water-like in appearance, instead of the completion of the "real stuff," is commendable. There are fine performances, however, and the picture is good material and three-dimensional. One or two ridiculous turns to the story may escape notice. Three critical shots break, and there is no effort to recapture them, even when they walk about the town. Also the feud ends in a rather abrupt manner, apparently because the picture has reached the fifth reel. But the action, the likeable star, the novel settings, Helen Ware and photography, ought to please practically everywhere. And the "moonshine" angle will not cause any loss of interest. Length, 5 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

"HUMORESQUE"
(Cosmopolitan-Paramount-Artcraft)

Here is an Undeniably Fine Entertainment

PARAMOUNT ARTCAST has here, one of the sourest, most blunt and vital plays that has ever reached the screen—and one acted quite flawlessly. Playwrights who have read Fannie Hurst know the power and the truth and the humor with which she can seize, dramatize and analyze the values of everyday life as they are presented in that thickly populated section of New York known as the Ghetto.
"Humoresque" is his design and heartrending in its humilities—so sincerely expressed in mother love and the fine influence of family life.
It is a story full of tears and laughter and these forces alternate in attracting and holding the attention.

Indeed it will touch the profundities all who have imagination, feeling and sympathy to the manner how repressed or neglected. There is no gripping drama in that sense of the term. No conflict is offered. What does grip is the deep well of pathos which furnishes the strength of the story. And yet this element is finely shaded so that makewell sentiment is entirely absent. But every tag that comes at the heart is immediately followed by a twinkle that comes in the eye, for laughter succeeds sorrow and vice-versa just as it does in everyday life and in the melody which inspired the theme.

The key in which Frank Borzage has directed the play and the super-emotional fervor of Vera Gordon, and the wholesome, lighthearts of Dore Davidson are largely responsible for bringing out the shadows and sunshine, the tears and laughter of Fannie Hurst's story. Yet one must not forget the adaptation by Francis Marion, who has constructed his scenes with undeniable skill. Praise must be given her for selecting much of the original drama into a most admirable human-leaned drama.

The story itself with all its heart interest, its human appeal, its character analysis, humor and philosophy strikes a note which will surely be heard in box-office receipts. The theme of mother-love—the picture of the mother who prayed for a musical genius and whose prayer is answered, the father who was rejected, the child who could make "music" with a cash-register will react upon every spectator. The boy hits his family from the Ghetto, makes him a famous, and hears the call of war and enlist in a play in a greater splendor over there. Mr. Borzage deserves all the credit he is certain to receive.
His work is labor of love and enthusiasm. His attempt is remarkably rich in detail and color. Yet there is glory enough in this picture for all. "Humoresque" is a picture with a soul. Length 6 reels. Laurence Reid.

"RIDERS OF THE DAWN"
(Ben. Hampton-Hodkinson)

Colorful Action Compensates for Plot Shortcomings

THERE is one characteristic about a Zane Grey story and that is it serves up enough action to please any spectator in search of thrills.
"Riders of the Dawn," an adaptation of "The Desert of Wheat," may be stereotyped in characterization and plot. There is no doubt that it carries a punch in the shape of colorful and fast-moving incident. The story takes up another indictment against the "I Won't Works," but instead of presenting them blowing industrial plants it depicts them plotting to ruin the wheat crop of the West. There is no waiting for the action to come and one function in the production is offered with a living start and maintains its activity to the conclusion.

The central character is a young farmer lately returned from France, the leader of the Vigilantes, whose purpose is to aid the community of the homesteads. The action proceeds later on after battle which occurs in New Mexico. One incident is quite miscalculated for since it bears no relation to the plot, showing in it does a degenerate's penchant to a little girl and the inevitable tragedy which follows. Although the actual crime is not presented enough is left to the imagination of the spectator. With the scissors applied to this incident the picture is above criticism in minor treatment of the characters and plot is concerned.

There will doubtless be some who will say that the action is too graphic because of the many killings. Yet such a course is necessary to keep its vitality intact. The picture is well contrasted, the discipline of right and wrong being consistently followed. The action is well built up.
"Riders of the Dawn" is an adaptation of Zane Grey's powerful story, "The Harvest of Wheat," will be entertained, by the clear-cut title of the picture. Zane Grey's name "Riders of the Dawn." Take many of the novel's minor scenes, aware of a menace of danger, a menace which riding together on the backs of the heroes who surround him and Robert McKim makes his villainy completely fascinating. The other members of the cast are up to requirements. There is no thought to "Riders of the Dawn," but it is interesting because of its melodramatic incident. Length 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PROGRAM READER

Menger—the theatre has the pleasure in announcing that Fannie Hurst's onerously humorous play "Humoresque" will be presented here on —
This picture will certainly be remembered by the merriment of all who see it as one of the finest comedy settings the screen.
"Humoresque" is in its context, the parable of every mother's love and of how the pathos of a child is commingled with humor and, presenting as its theme the dominant mother love.

Frank Borzage, who directed "Humoresque" is now turned in his finest production. His attempt to the smallest detail—the skill in which he has measured out the humor and humanities are a credit to the entire picture. His portrayal of the father, who was rejected, he has held in his heart and sympathy and human appeal are ever dominant. A laugh follows his story as he portrays Borzage's talent in humor, and the heartrending

Dore Davidson as the father is a comedian of rare ability.

THE FALSE ROAD
(Inc.-Paramount-Artcraft)

CROOK STORY IS TOO TAME AND THE ACTION IS MILD

ACTION should be the keynote behind all crook melodramas no matter whether they are moulded from polenta ingredients or not. When this vital element is missing or subordinated in any way the plot has all it can do to sustain itself. Which is how引进s Ernest Bemner's latest photoplay, "The False Road." Cameron Sullivan, the author, is usually reliable, but in this instance he has paid too much attention to a twist in characterization and too little to the vital punch. Scene after scene in the earlier reels is presented which carries no more melodrama than a bit of hokum in a cheap annual book of jokes.

The twist is presented in the shape of the reformed hero who attempts and succeeds, eventually, in bringing about the regeneration of his sweetheart. Usually the idea works out in just the opposite way—the hero being reformed through the influence of the girl who will not believe in him until the moment of "Turn to the Right" by using the bracing air and home spun atmosphere of the country as conducive to right thinking and living. The hero gives up his life of crime and settles down in a one-story town, and soon sweet heart turns up and robs the village bank in which he is employed. This incident is one of the interesting moments in the picture—the other when the girl-crook attempts to steal the money again, this time from the boss crook, because of the influence of the reformed heroine. Otherwise there is considerable talking and sitting around among the participants of this weak contribution.

The crooks are the most up-to-date, maintaining a lavish apartment, keeping books of their various exploits, and storing their loot in a safe. "The False Road" may be called just an average motion picture which hasn't enough moving moments to satisfy the spectator in search of a thrill. Enid Bennett is not adaptable for the part of the feminine crook. It is like putting a rose among a lot of thorns. And her smile doesn't belong. And, furthermore, she fails to bring out any suspense. In reality, there isn't any to bring out. The picture is always Adrian from the start, there being really nothing novel in the treatment or it will please those who do not ask for much. Length: 5 reels. "Irene Reed.

THE CAST

Betty Palmer, as "Picketech." Roscoe Morgan, as "Sapphire." Mike Wilson, as "Prince." Joanne Scott, as "The Cast."

PROFESSION STORY

Enid Bennett, the charming and talented little star, will appear at the theatre beginning __________ in her latest photoplay, "The False Road." This feature introduces Bennett as a crook instead of society character. She has the role of Betty Palmer, a member of a bank of New York. In one connecting incident she is conveyed by train to Sing Sing, surpises her by announcing that he is determined to go straight hereafter. She is remarkably pretty and has a decided ability in photo work with the local bank in a small town in New England. Later, Betty and a crook attempt to rob the bank. Loger follows the crook and, by posing as a bystander, succeeds through a bit of disguise to kidnap the crook. Betty rescues him, and together they enter the crook in recovering the money. She then abandons the crook, and he sells her heart. C. Gardner Sullivan, who wrote this story, has invested it with plenty of appeal and heart interest. But the tale also carries a full quota of melodramatic action and suspense. Fred Niblo, the director, has worked out some adequate backgrounds and he has kept the picture moving from the start. Miss Bennett lends a great deal of charm to the offering through her personality. She is adaptable to the role and she is capably supported by Lloyd Hughes, Lucille Young, Wade Boteler and others.

PROGRAM READER

Some remarkably true-to-life scenes of New York's underworld are a feature of Enid Bennett's new photoplay, "The False Road," which comes to this theatre in the near future. The pretty little star has the role of crook, member of the largest and most efficient team that ever scammed the city. The picture is a sure winner upon the occasion of his release from Sing Sing. The picture is a definite challenge to the current wave of crime stories and adventures and the interest will be sustained to the finish. C. Gardner Sullivan is the author of the story. Miss Bennett plays the part of the feminine crook with all her accustomed charm, and her support, which includes Lloyd Hughes, is entirely adequate. Watch for the date.

SUGGESTIONS

You can tell your patrons that this picture is a crook melodrama written by the same team that brought us "Foxes of Chicago." The director is the author, and his name is surely going to please your patrons. Play up the feature in connection with the new "The False Road" with romantic interest and heart appeal. Bring out that the picture also establishes a record in pictures that belong to the boyish set and are as good as any old book in the public library. Use all the excitement of the title and use it for poster display through inventions. Take advantage of the fact that the picture is being shown in a suburban neighborhood, and tell enough of the plot to make a man go wrong instead of listening to the picture which should bring him over the redemption of the heroine. Mention that this is a story of adventure and that your patrons will have a different story of a genuine ism and that the picture is a value scheme of working out his redemption. Make it clear that this is a Thomas H. Ince production, opposite the star. Make it emphasis that this is a Thomas H. Ince production.

THE HONEY BEE
(“Flying A” at Pacific Exchanges)

Good Entertainment from Picturized Novel

THERE will be an appeal to almost every type of fast in this latest American "special" picture, starring Margaret Sylva, and adapted from the novel by Thomas B. Sewell Merwin. The interest is sustained and there is an excellent supporting cast and evidence of splendid direction.

The story is of the "married-man-and-another-woman" variety, but is far from being a sex play and is perfectly moral and sentimental. In fact, it is rather the opposite, and is a number of irrevocable incidents. But as these incidents are truly appealing, performed by a mighty capable cast, and well directed, they do not detract from the interest. It would seem that it is truly a picturized novel, using the sub-plots and extraneous matter of the book. While it may therefore be lacking in the force of the original, it is a picture which, realistically enacted, is the highest. The women will like the star's gracious and everybody will like Albert Ray and George Herman. Margaret Sylva may not have an immoral appeal to the fans, but the success of the picture does not rest upon her shoulders. Albert Ray is a revelation, giving us a mellow but characterization, and George Herman in Harvey Clark, are not far behind. The rest of the cast is also up to the standard. Kid McCoy helps out in the prize fight, which is shown at length. We go through four rounds with the heavyweight.

The story is simple that of a married man and a single woman, and it is not complicated one. The woman played by the star, goes to Paris and the man disappears from sight until the final reel. They meet finally, and a messenger interrupts their love scene to bring news of the wife's death in America. It is the reds in the interlude that supply the heart of the picture and give it a new line of development. The characters are universal. They may have made the American period far too noble and heroic to be true in life, but not too much so for your patrons. The subtitles are good, but the extract from Masterlink at the beginning and end will mean very little to an audience. Length: 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE STORY

The picturization of one of the most popular novels of recent years will be the attraction at the __________ showing of "The Honey Bee," by Samuel I. Merwin, which famous drama is published with, Mme. Margaret Sylva, the beautiful Belgian prima donna, in the leading role.

The picture tells the tale of the woman worker, and brings her to the undeveloped feminine role of the bee, who lives but to work, unselfish and uncomplaining. She is the woman in business. She labors for years, but when near her feminine features are aroused, she is no longer satisfied with her lot. And for her who went through the struggle, there is a realistic prize fight that it would be hard to equal in real life. And Kid McCoy is also in the picture, and helps to make the thrilling prize fight scene thoroughly realistic.

PROGRAM READER

If you have read "The Honey Bee," by Samuel I. Merwin, not even half and lighting will keep you home on the evening of __________ when the picturization of this famous novel will be shown at this theatre. And if you haven't read it, just take our tip that it is one of the most interesting stories and perfectly appealing. The picture is directed by Rupert Julian, who has won for himself an enviable name among motion picture directors. Besides the renowned star, which includes Thomas Hefling, Albert Harren, Albert Ray, George Herman, and Harvey Clark. Kid McCoy is also in the picture, and helps to make the thrilling fight scene thoroughly realistic.

SUGGESTIONS

A lot depends upon your location in selecting which maple of this picture to advertise. A tie up with a book store would be profitable. You are enabled to sell a tie-up of all of the copies of the book. Tie-up in a suburban commuting neighborhood, tell enough of the plot to make a man go wrong instead of listening to the picture which should make him over the redemption of the heroine. Mention that this is a story of adventure and that your patrons will see it with a different story of a genuine ism and that the picture is a value scheme of working out his redemption. Make it clear that this is a Thomas H. Ince production, opposite the star. Make it emphasis that this is a Thomas H. Ince production.

"THE DANCIN' FOOL"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Some Interesting Moments in This Frail Wallace Reid Picture

There are times when even a Saturday Evening Post story may fail to give good screen entertainment. Wallace Reid's latest contribution to this type of screen work, "The Dancin' Fool," may have the2-clearing reading between the covers of the magazine, but deprived of its dialogue, considerable of its humor and humanities, and not exceptionally well interpreted, it may be considered just as an average document in its screen version. It looks to us as if Sam Wood, the director, had attempted to be too clever. He has not carried enough weight for such a course. There are a number of times when the action becomes considerably druggy because there is no variety, to speak of, in the development. And too much of the story is told through the medium of subtitles.

Had the director paid more attention to its humorous values instead of elaborating the romance, the picture could have been placed alongside of its immediate forerunners. The star plays a country yokel—a remarkably sophisticated looking yokel, incidentally, who comes to the metropolis gifted with a pair of syncopated feet. He enters his uncle's jug business at six dollars a week, and he is quite sure that Deptin a cabaret. The dance emporium and the store furnish the situations which do not offer enough incident to maintain the interest throughout. Romance is introduced by presenting his dancing partner and the scenes of their Apache dance are the only compelling ones in the entire picture. The hero makes a success of his uncle's jug business by introducing up-to-date methods.

The action seems intermittently long before the conclusion is reached, principally because it is labored and not achieved spontaneously. Wallace Reid is not entirely at home in his characterization. There is nothing of the homey about him. To compensate for this the title editor has attempted to make him a son of the soil by having him speak in terms of "B'Gosh." The outstanding humorous scene is presented when the cabaret and discovers that the dancer is his nephew. The arbitrary villain has his inning in plotting to control the business. Bebe Daniels makes an attractive dancing partner. Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The popular Paramount-Artcraft star, Wallace Reid, will come to the theatre the week of May 15. In his latest play'woke entitled "The Dancin' Fool," an adaptation of Henry Payson Donwet's Saturday Evening Post story of the same name, Mr. Reid has had a number of interesting pieces but it may be said that his latest play will rank with the best. "The Dancin' Fool" presents him as a cabaret dancer and an up-to-date business man. He appears as Sylvester Tinkle, who comes to New York to work for his uncle, Enoch, in the jug business for six dollars a week. Junie Seidel, a cabaret dancer, discovers that his fortune lies in his feet, and "Vets" becomes such an honor in New York's finest jazz palace. He makes such a success as a dancer that it automatically reacts favorably toward his jug business. Junie Seidel is introduced to the right sort of people, which are luscious with humor. And Wallace Reid makes the most of his opportunities. Bebe Daniels, who has always shown a strong screen comedienne in the role of June. Others in the cast are: Tully Marshall, Raymond Hatton and Lillian Leighton. Clara C. Kennedy adapted the story while Sam Wood attended the direction.

PROGRAM READER

Wallace Reid in a new screen comedy, "The Dancin' Fool," will be the attraction at the--theatre for the week of May 15. The play is produced in the presence of one of the major stars in the lot, and that is unusual and that ideally suits his byname personality. Mr. Reid plays the part of a country youth who goes to New York to enter his uncle's jug business. But he gets interested before he can get acquainted. He and various adventures are told in the final chapter in which he has found the popularity of the story. The picture is a screen version of Henry Payson Donwet's Saturday Evening Post story of the same name and was scenarized by Henry Pangay and directed by Sam Wood.

A Pleasing Picture with Many Good Points

If this picture were cut to five reels it now runs six, and some of the inner screen scenes "chopped off," and many of the sub-titles which are necessary to the plot explained as it is, it would have a pleasing Mary Miles Minter feature which should interest and amuse the patrons and bring satisfactory returns to the box-office.

As the production stands there are too many scenes introduced, many of which could easily be eliminated, as they are not of vital importance and tend, on the contrary, to detract from the plot. The story is too involved and requires a knowledge of the events which took place, to be understood.

And again these scenes are introduced in a way that might cause confusion to the average patron, for they seem to jump ahead of the story and then back to it again, instead of finishing with one sequence before going to the other.

The story is her usual self in appearance and action and the direction is as usual to standard and shows a carefulness in the handling of the star and attention to detail especially in regard to the sets, some of which were lavish, and the exteriors, many of which were beautiful, that could not be excelled.

She eloped and was severely married. His parents, rich and social climbers, learn of the secret marriage and send him away on a yachting trip. Then they tell our heroine that her husband has fled from her and induce her to leave the marriage annulled. She marries another, the childe of her parents, and later finds that she is addicted to the use of drugs.

After many trials and tribulations our heroine meets her former husband at a musical where she is to make her debut and there are explanations in which all doubts are cleared. He now sees that her marriage was a mistake.

When a new accident occurs which ends in his wife's death, he turns to his "first love," and their tangle is straightened out.

Length, 6 reels. Frank Leonard.

Program Reader

Mary Miles Minter in her latest feature "Jenny Be Good," will appear at the--theatre on--of next. This is considered Miss Minter's best feature to date and gives the star an opportunity to display her talents in a way that is sure to interest many admirers.

Special attention has been given in this production to detail, the interior sets being sumptuous in design and the compartments containing some beautiful landscape shots.

Jenny Be Good, a simple country girl, falls in love with and secretly marries Royal Reid, a wealthy young man. Her parents learn of the marriage and send him away on a yachting trip. Then they tell Jenny that he has been flung from her and persuade her to leave the marriage annulled. Royal later marries a society girl, but, when the latter discovers his infidelity, he deserts his wife and goes to Europe. At a musical, Jenny meets Royal and there are explanations in which all doubts are cleared. But the young man cannot forget his first love, and his new wife has only hatred and he cannot forgive her for the life she has contracted.

One day while yachting with his wife, in an accident which kills the latter and results in severe injuries to Royal. While in the hospital with his life in the balance, the young man continually calls for "his Jenny" and his father is advised to send for her that she may save his life. She comes and restores him to health again, after which the tangle is straightened out.

SUGGESTIONS

When you look this picture, you are sure Mary Miles Minter in your advertising. It would not be a bad idea to run a short few stories telling about some of the incidents of her life which you may obtain from the press sheet which accompanies this feature.

The story while not of the strongest is a rather interesting one and stress could be laid on this fact without any fear of a "got back" from the public.

You might also "play up" the cast as this is a splendid one both for types and for acting ability, especially at the time of the play of Jay Belasco who does a very fine piece of acting as Miss Minter's leading man.

Reviews

Do exhibitors want trade paper reviews of the forthcoming pictures?

There are those in New York who would seek to convince you that the day of reviews is past—that exhibitors do not follow them nor desire them.

Motion Picture News recently had occasion to investigate the sentiment of its readers on the question. The answer is emphatic to us—"We want your reviews at any cost!"

Starting next week we shall publish the results of this survey. Exhibitor opinions on the question of reviews and the occasion of our investigation make interesting reading. Watch for them.

And Now New York!

OVER twelve thousand people paid a dollar a seat to see Cecil B. DeMille's "Why Change Your Wife?" at the Criterion, New York, during the first nine days of its showing.

The Criterion seats only 670. This means that the house has been crowded at both performances every day.

And it's still going strong!

"Why Change Your Wife?" has broken records in every city in which it has been shown.

Its New York success confirms the judgment of the exhibitors and public of the entire country—

The Best Picture DeMille Ever Made!
"A LADY in Love" is one of those irresistible pictures that pull on the heart strings and make people start to laugh and then sob—one of those appealing pictures that send people out of the theatre with eyes glistening and lips smiling.

ONE of those pictures that you only get once in a while and that you always clean up on. Like "Young Mrs. Winthrop" in heart appeal and like "The 13th Commandment" in dramatic strength—with something more than both!

“Strong Appeal, Full of Heart Throbs and Melodramatic Punch’

That’s What They All Say of

King W. Vidor’s

“The Family Honor”

STRONG POPULAR APPEAL

"The Family Honor," a King Vidor romance of the South, has the popular quality to put it across. It is woven around an ever popular and appealing theme. It is strong in heart interest and with its home-like atmosphere of the Southland and its melodramatic story it makes a strong appeal to popular favor. A tale of Dixie always pulls whether or not the spectator has ever journeyed below Baltimore and the fact that the action lends itself to Southern melodies is another point in its favor from the box office angle. A human note which has made King Vidor famous as the maker of this brand of pictures. Immensely interesting because it is well told and real. The action is of quick tempo with constantly increasing suspense.” — Exhibitor’s Trade Review.

THEME THAT'S DIFFERENT

"The Family Honor" is another of King Vidor's intensely human adaptations of a theme that is different. Taking a story of Dixie, the young producer has surrounded it with realistic atmosphere and has given it the punch that will sustain interest.” — Exhibitor's Herald.

HUMAN AND APPEALING

"You have a picture here that certainly is going to make an impression on everyone. Offered in the same artistic taste as it has been produced it will be profoundly moving. An opportunity to cater to the thrill loving crowds as well. Highly pleasing. Should strike a responsive chord in every audience. A melodramatic story that is made human and appealing.”—Wid's.

GREAT HEART INTEREST

"Nothing missing to emphasize the pathos and the note of heart interest. Entertaining, and saturated with atmosphere of the South. Emphasizes the human note.” — Motion Picture News.

IT'S A SAFE BET

"An excellent example of what a picture ought to be. Contains deep heart interest. The picture is a safe bet; its appeal is wholesome."—Moving Picture World.

All the money-making screen values are to be found in this picture in rare abundance.
A REAL STORY OF PUNCH AND PEP written by Zane Grey, America’s greatest living novelist.
A CAST OF EVEN EXCELLENCE, not one star and the other actors of doubtful value, but a constellation of stars working together harmoniously to visualize the story and not to glorify themselves: Roy Stewart, Joseph J. Dowling, Claire Adams, Robert McKim, Frederick Starr.

THE THEME IS THE TALK OF THE HOUR AND THE TALK OF THE WORLD.
IT’S A BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON PRODUCTION, greater than his “Desert Gold,” “The Sagebrusher,” and “The Westerners.”

CLEAN, WHOLESOME, THRILLING, SENSATIONAL, A COMPELLING COMBINATION. Nothing draws the crowds like a celebrated novel translated into the language of the screen. It is sure fire every time.
"RIDERS of the DAWN"

at the STRAND

in NEW YORK

HAS had a wonderful "press," as they say on the other side. Comments of the New York papers were unanimously favorable. This is the first time in many months that the New York papers were a unit in their praise of a picture. Neither the "World" nor the "American" offered any comment whatever on either the "Riders of the Dawn" or the program at the Strand. The other papers commented as follows:

TELEGRAPH
"An exciting and vivid story."

TRIBUNE

SUN-HERALD
"This photo play deals with the North West grain region, vividly and thrillingly, without overstating its case."

TIMES
"The story might be called 'Action, Unlimited.'"

These comments were given by experienced writers and in no way influenced by advertising. They were fully endorsed by the EDUCATIONAL FILMS CORPORATION OF AMERICA announces the early opening of its own exclusive short subject exchanges in the twenty-two recognized distributing centers.

Each exchange will be under the direct control of Educational, yet the territorial managements will be financially interested.

Instead of a mere "branch" with a salaried employe in charge, exhibitors will find successful theatre men working for box office results.

You have the guarantee of Educational for quality product—a guarantee you have known for five years—PLUS the financial concern of leaders in your territory.

SUCH an organization has brought immediately to Educational the opportunity to select the material most desired by exhibitors, as voiced by their representatives in each section. Each producing unit brings an enthusiasm inspired by the excellence of the distributing system.

This combination assures the best in short subjects and the fullest measure of service, while competitive exhibitor purchase opportunity is maintained by control of each office in Educational Films Corporation.
CONTRACTS already signed assure the greatest array of short subjects ever offered, including Bruce Scenics Beautiful, Chester-Outings, Screenics and a dozen other travel, novelty and educational series.

Two reel comedies include Chester Comedies, Torchy Comedies and Mermaid Comedies, each to be released monthly, and a bi-weekly release from an organization famous wherever comedies are shown.

These will be handled by Educational exchanges in the following cities:

- NEW YORK

If you knew what that meant in Indian it would make you shiver—make your teeth chatter.
When David Raine, just into the North and mushing along the frozen Arctic trail heard Mukoki, the Indian guide, mutter it, he was puzzled.

"The dogs—they are giving the death howl"—that is the way Mukoki explained it. And David found later that the old Indian guide was right!

Death was near. That night they camped in the old deserted cabin of Tavish—the mystery man of the North. Then came that damnable devilish noise against the cabin wall—thud—thud!

thud—thud!

Like a ghostly tattoo it sounded. David's dreams of Marge were interrupted—he decided to investigate—and he found—swinging gently in the wind tap-tapping against the logs—the body of a man.

The cold moon shone on the pale bearded face, the gaping mouth was shaped in a frozen grin of agony. It was Tavish—the man whose villainy causes all the pangs, the mystery, the complications, adventure and stirring romance in—

CORINNE GRIFFITH in

The Garter Girl

Five-part Drama; Vitagraph
Directed by EDWARD H. GRIFFITH
Published in May

OPINION: Ordinarily, when a scenario writer has a stage girl refuse her vaudeville partner’s proposal of marriage and fall in love with a handsome young clergyman, he has the heroine marry the minister. But in the “Garter Girl” the heroine is lifelike and in the end decides that her teammate in vaudeville shall be her teammate in matrimony.

It’s different. Every tradition as to “how to write a scenario” is thrown into the discard. After running along in the familiar channel for 3,000 feet, the story starts to turn just the way no one suspects it will. There is one surprise after another.

There will be few people who see “The Garter Girl” that will not talk about it. It is the type of picture which should increase attendance every day during its run. It is guaranteed the cheapest and most effective exploitation pictures can be given—word of mouth advertising.

Vitagraph has made several splendid productions with Corinne Griffith, but her latest offering sets a new standard for her series. She is given everything a star could ask, a capable cast, intelligently chosen settings and exteriors, and careful editing of the completed negative. Her interpretation of the title role more than warrants the lavish expenditure.

C. B. PRICE CO., Inc., Times Building, New York City
THE SOCIETY OF MOTION PICTURE ENGINEERS at their semi-annual meeting held in Rochester in April, 1918, adopted a "SAFETY STANDARD" film for use in portable projectors. This differs slightly from the "Professional" standard being in the same proportions but somewhat smaller. It is made only on slow burning or non-inflammable stock.

This "SAFETY STANDARD" was based entirely on an ABSOLUTE NEED OF SAFETY outside the theatres and other places adequately protected by law with fireproof booths.

Further it gives any manufacturer of portable projectors a film standard in which there is an available and growing supply of film which is safe for non-theatrical use.

The "SAFETY STANDARD" has made it possible for pictures to be shown in the home, in the classroom of the school, in the church, in the lodge and other places, where, if it was not for the "SAFETY STANDARD," fire hazard would be unavoidable because of the necessary handling of inflammable film in the open.

The handling of the "PROFESSIONAL STANDARD" printed on inflammable stock, in anything but a protected fireproof booth built for the purpose (as prescribed by law) was thoroughly recognized by the SOCIETY OF MOTION PICTURE ENGINEERS when discussing and finally adopting this "SAFETY STANDARD."

This "SAFETY STANDARD" in no way competes with the THEATRE INTERESTS, in fact it is a distinct "feeder" to the theatre. It usually brings pictures to a non-theatrical audience and the new interest which is aroused by them induces an element in the community who have previously looked down on the "movies" to go further. The result is a direct benefit to the theatre man and through them to the producer.

"Don't base your ideas of picture audiences upon present ones. Think of your potential audience. That audience includes almost all the public."—Wm. A. Johnston, MOTION PICTURE NEWS, March 20, 1920.

This potential audience lives in no small part among those who are being educated by the "SAFETY STANDARD" to the broader and bigger possibilities of the motion picture.
Industrial Unrest!

All over the country there is so much discontent, with wild rumors of revolution flying about, that it becomes a great pleasure to contemplate something with which the American People are entirely satisfied.

Of course we refer to the RITCHEY poster.

And contemplating it we wonder if it doesn't, in a way, suggest a possible cure for the political and economic evils that beset us. It's our job to make posters. We are spending all our time and our energy and our intelligence in making the RITCHEY poster as perfect a poster as it is possible to make. We are interested absolutely and wholeheartedly in that job. It keeps us occupied and prosperous. Its contemplation keeps us happy.

So we think that if everybody else put into their job the same complete interest that we put into ours, the whole country might be a deal better off. Certainly its inhabitants would be a good bit happier—for there is no joy quite so great as that which comes from hard work excellently well done. Which accounts for our happiness and optimism and our exceeding great joy in life—for the RITCHEY poster is certainly a work most excellently well done!

Odds and Ends of Thought

New Sources for Big Pictures

A exhibitor who observes conditions closely told us the other day, “There is a real definite scarcity of good pictures right now. We are in one of the slump periods that come every once in a while.”

Whether or not this view is correct is probably to a great extent a matter of opinion. Also, if it is true that a dearth exists it might be an artificial condition fostered by a desire to hold back sure-fire winners for the Fall market.

We have been prompted to quote this exhibitor’s view by the companion thought of our own that never before did the future loom up with such glowing promises of big pictures. Cultivation of the genius and individuality of producers, authors and stars seems destined to bear its reward in bounteous measure when the bell rings for the Fall getaway.

Another encouraging thought is found in the fact that this Fall we must not look to a few selected sources for the bigger production efforts. Old-line organizations and youthful independents seem alike to possess the formula, the capital and the ambition to aim at the top-quality special.

Visions of a closed, monopolized market would seem to have little effect on the humming activities of the Los Angeles studios. “Good pictures will always find their market,” sums up the philosophy.

Theatres for the Pictures

When we view column after column recording the construction of new theatres in the section of Motion Picture News devoted to that important field it is encouraging to come back to the thought that there will be plenty of good pictures to meet the quality patronage that these new palaces must have.

We are so busy in this field with a multiplicity of current minor activities that it is not always possible to get a true perspective on major developments. But it has seemed for a period of many months that there has not been a week when Motion Picture News could not record over a hundred important construction operations—either complete overhauling and enlarging of old theatres or the first steps in the building of new ones.

And it is our own opinion that the newer picture palaces can go just as far—if not further—toward selling the screen to new patronage as good pictures can. Theatres built expressly for the screen, refined in atmosphere, complete in accommodations for comfort, have an intimate direct selling force that hits home to that class of the public which has waited this long to be converted to the screen.

Plenty of Room Yet

It is a cheerful thought, in view of the unprecedented construction boom, that no experienced theatre man we have met expresses a fear that we are “over-building.” Indeed, the exact reverse would be indicated by any passing conversation with an exhibitor.

A trip around the suburbs of any big city would give additional proof that there is still plenty of room for new theatres. The country is in the midst of an “Own Your Own Home” movement. Residential districts of the better class are developing overnight in practically all suburbs—and the picture theatre has not yet followed the procession.

Some of these suburban sections will be found that are practically ripe now for development; others will require a year or so for growth. But here, surely, is a wide field for the exercise of the most optimistic thoughts, complete assurance of a rosy immediate future.

Stanley Theatre Corner-stone Laid in "Philly"

On Saturday, May 8th, the corner-stone of the new Stanley theatre at Nineteenth and Market streets, Philadelphia, was laid in the presence of prominent persons and a large gathering of spectators, who braved the stormy weather to watch the ceremonies, which were shortened because of the rain. The actual laying of the corner-stone was done by Mrs. Fanny Mastbaum, mother of the late Stanley Mastbaum, and Jules E. Mastbaum, president. The Stanley Corner-stone Governor Sproul of Pennsylvania made a brief address.

Proceeding the laying of the corner-stone a luncheon was given at the Bellevue-Stratford at which were present many well-known motion picture producers, exhibitors and newspapermen. The new theatre will cost about $1,000,000 dollars, its estimated, and will be used for the exhibition of first-run pictures. It will seat 4,000 persons. The interior decorations are expected to be of an unusually artistic order. The latest facilities for the comfort and accommodation of the patrons are to be installed.

Pioneer Pennsylvania Exhibitor Dies

Claude L. Carr, of the firm of Carr & Schad, one of the pioneers in the picture theatres in Reading, Pa., died suddenly on April 28 at his home in Reading. He controlled six theatres in his home city.
First National Survey Full of Interesting Data

Exclusive Publication of an Exhaustive Report on Theatre Conditions

FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS' CIRCUIT completed on May 1 a survey of the entire exhibiting field of the United States. While the survey was made primarily to provide First National Exchanges with reliable data about the probable reclassification of theatres for next season, a great mass of information reflecting conditions in the exhibitor field as a whole resulted from the survey. It is a resume of these facts which Motion Picture News has obtained for exclusive publication, and the first in the series of articles which will cover the entire country is presented here.

In the publication of these articles Motion Picture News feels that it is laying before its readers an authentic guide to the spirit which exists among exhibitors. The material upon which the articles are based was gathered by First National as an important factor in its advice and recommendations to stars and producers for whose output it has contracts about changes in the theatre market during the summer. Data obtained from exhibitors was checked against real estate transfers, building plans filed, and alteration permits.

In the following articles, the first in the series, is given a resume of the projected developments in the eastern states. This will be followed by resumes of summer activities in the New England States, the Middle Western States, the Western States and the Southern States, in the order named.

Preliminary and pessimism which held sway this spring among the exhibitors in the Eastern States have been dissipated by the most prosperous season they have ever enjoyed. Throughout Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey and other nearby states the man with the theatre is preparing for the next season, beginning next fall. Belief in the future prosperity is evidenced by the general decision to remain open all summer, and not to suspend at all except where needed alterations and refurbishments make it necessary. A large number of third and fourth class houses are planning improvements that will move them up a grade toward their first run brethren.

New York and Pennsylvania will be alive with the erection of new buildings and the enlargement of present theatres, this being especially true in the larger cities. It was inevitable that general building would take place after the demands that were made upon all theatres during the past season. The theatre end of the industry has advanced as rapidly as any other part of the motion picture business and houses that were up to date prior to the war are antiquated and too small now. The congested sections of the larger cities also caused the construction of theatres to supply the demand as it existed at the time they were erected, and although the need for rectification has been felt for some time it took the all too frequent turnaway business of last winter to give impetus to the movement of bringing things up to new standards.

New Jersey the survey indicates a 4.2 per cent increase in the number of theatres in the 1920-21 season over that of 1919-20; an increase of 11 per cent in seating capacity, a reclassification of 14 per cent, and minor alterations including installations of various devices of 34.8 per cent.

New York State must be considered in two separate sections, for conditions in New York City and in the state outside the greater city, while apparently along the same lines, show a wide divergence in methods and results. Building and enlargements will be rampant all over the state, in and out of the greater city. The greater part of the building within the city is being done by newcomers in the exhibitors' field, while that in the other places is being done by the established exhibitor.

Loew's State theatre, in the heart of the theatrical district of New York, need not be taken into consideration for the purpose of this survey. Its status is well known. A recent development in Brooklyn, however, is not as easy of analysis. It is announced that the Orpheum theatre, directly opposite the new Mark Strand theatre, and long the home of vaudeville, is to be made an exclusive picture house, as soon as the Keith Circuit can erect a new theatre on a plot of ground it purchased. The Orpheum seats about 1,800 and is one of the best-known theatres in Brooklyn.

In practically every well populated residential section of New York City, theatres seating 2,000 to 2,500 are either under construction or have been announced. The contractors are wary about divulging the lessees of these theatres, and in most cases the builders are given as real estate concerns. The completion and opening of many of these theatres, if they are run on a basis warranted by their size, will create many first run territories where second and third class houses now compete for the patronage.

Outside of New York City the most active places in New York State are Buffalo, Olean, and Tonawanda. Buffalo is in the midst of the biggest theatrical building boom in its history. In the downtown section ground has already been broken for the new Loew, Shea's Metropolitan, and before the end of the month the contractors will be busy on the erection of a big theatre for the Olympic Amusement Company on Washington street. On the north side of the city the Piel Theatre Construction Co. will have a beautiful large neighborhood house ready the early part of June. The new Rivoli, seating 1,800, the erection of which will cost $150,000, is nearing completion on Broadway near Fillmore street, and Manager Harry Dixon expects to be able to open during the first week in July. The twelve hundred seat Capitol on Triangle street, near South Park avenue, has been opened, and the same interests that own this theatre have double the seating capacity of the Maxine on Seneca street, so that it will now accommodate 800. The old Garden theatre has been remodeled and opened as a picture house under the name of the Empire. Extensive alteration plans to be done through the summer have been filed by the General Theatres Corporation for the Ellen Terry, the Marlowe and the Allendale. None of the theatres in the city have announced any intermissions for the summer months except for the purpose of renovating and redecorating or alterations.

From Tonawanda, N.Y., is reported one of the most extensive alteration plans which had been developed in this district. The owners have decided to change it from a 700-seat house to one which will accommodate 2,000. Contracts have been let and preliminary work has already been started. A horseshoe balcony, with boxes, and an extension of the main floor will provide space for

Convention Arrangements Are Started

Sam Bullock Busy in New York; Cleveland Exhibitor Advises Reservations

By capitalizing the publicity value of our screens, either by means of slides or reels, we will build up a national organization which will do things. This Cleveland convention is being called on the biggest and most democratic basis conceivable. Every bona fide exhibitor in the country is welcome. We want to make it plain that exhibitors in the country are welcome. We want to make it plain that exhibitors with open or secret producer affiliations will not be welcome. The convention will make it its business to exclude a producers' lobby no matter how it may disguise itself.

According to Henry H. Lustig, president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, it will be the part of wisdom for every motion picture theatre owner who intends to come to the convention at Cleveland, June 8 to 11, to wire in his request for reservations without delay. Mr. Lustig, who is an executive member of the committee entrusted with securing accommodations for the visiting delegates, says that they are doing all they can to get comfortable and reasonable quarters for every exhibitor. In view of the increasing number of applications, exhibitors will avoid much inconvenience and anxiety by getting in touch with the Cleveland committee by mail, or preferably by wire.

"We want every delegate to enjoy the hospitality of Cleveland," said Mr. Lustig, "and take away the most pleasant recollections. Therefore, I say let the boys hurry up and we will do our share."

The enthusiasm which pervaded all exhibiting ranks everywhere for the Cleveland convention broke out in demonstrative fashion at a meeting of exhibitors held last Friday in Philadelphia. The meeting had been called by the officials of the Philadelphia organization of which Albert J. Fisher is president and C. H. Goodwin secretary. The meeting was held in the forenoon in the Chamber of Commerce rooms in the Widener Building. A special invitation was issued to Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York, to address the gathering. There were close to one hundred exhibitors present.
DeMille Remains With Famous-Players

Director Re-Signs with Company for Five Years; Talks on Play-producing

Cecil B. DeMille, the noted motion picture director, recently signed a contract for five years with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. DeMille, who, for more than five years has been director general and a member of the board of directors of the Paramount organization, and whose old contract is about to expire, is said to have made a flying trip from Los Angeles to New York to consider offers from several independent producers. Mr. DeMille, after thorough investigation decided not to accept these offers and agreed to remain with Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky for five years longer.

After completing his arrangements, Mr. De Mille left New York at once for Los Angeles to begin work on a new production in which he will introduce to moving picture patrons a new leading woman who, he believes, will out-rival Wanda Hawley, Bebe Daniels, or Gloria Swanson.

The announcement of the signing of Mr. DeMille's contract was made by Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"In signing this new contract, Mr. De Mille paid a great tribute to Famous Players-Lasky Corporation," said Mr. Zukor. "He had received offers of immense salaries from actually every other organization of any consequence. He decided to remain with us solely because he felt that in our organization he could produce finer pictures than in any other, and that these pictures would obtain wider distribution and better presentation. He had the entire industry to choose from, and, after thorough investigation, made as a business man as well as a director, selected Famous Players-Lasky Corporation."

Mr. De Mille, just before leaving for Los Angeles, confirmed the report that he had signed with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for five years and that he had rejected other offers after thorough investigation.

"I made my decision," he said, "after investigating thoroughly the efficiency of all the other distributing organizations, as compared with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation."

"I chose to remain with Famous Players-Lasky because this organization is so splendidly capable of getting wide distribution of its product, not only in America but throughout the entire world. No other company is getting even one-third as great a distribution. I have looked at the books of the other companies and I know."

"Several of my friends have thought it strange that I did not join some 'independent' organization and accept one of the big guarantees offered me. The only thing strange to me, after my thorough investigation of the various advantages of the different offers, is that I ever even considered for a moment the acceptance of any other offer."

Regarding the financing of plays on Broadway by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Mr. De Mille said: "The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, recognized as the leading producers and distributors of the best type of photoplays, acquired, nearly a year ago, control of Charles Frohman, Inc. Since then, through the Frohman offices, as well as in association with other legitimate producers, this company has staged several plays on Broadway. These productions, without exception, have been received with marked favor by critics and public."

"Now, certain gentlemen connected with the theatre assert that the entrance of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation into legitimate production constitutes a peril to the future of the drama."

"I disagree with them. On the contrary, I believe that our entrance into the legitimate field constitutes a genuine, healthy, sincere competition which can only prove of greatest benefit to American dramatic literature."

"The assertions that we wish to produce meretricious or inartistic plays, merely as a feeder to motion pictures, is the most arrant nonsense. Those legitimate producers who have been loudest know it. They know it because they know that, more than any other art of expression, the success of a play depends wholly on the approval of the public. You cannot force on people entertainment that they do not like.

Goldwyn Not to Enter Exhibitors' Field

F. V. Godsel's Statement Denies That Producing Company Plans Theatre Buying

That Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has no intention of invading the exhibitor's end of the motion picture business, was clearly emphasized in a statement issued yesterday by F. J. Godsel, chairman of the Executive Committee of Goldwyn. It should set at rest any rumors that this producing and distributing organization is planning to become a factor in the exhibiting field. Mr. Godsel declared emphatically that the Goldwyn policy is opposed to acquiring theatres, except where conditions force such purchases in order to assure a proper showing of Goldwyn pictures.

The statement from Mr. Godsel follows: "I want to make our position clear in view of all this talk about the way exhibitors feel toward producing companies owning theatres. Months ago, Mr. Goldwyn told where we stood and later I issued a similar statement. Now I want to repeat it. The only place where we will buy or build is where we are shut out of a town. Goldwyn productions must be shown, and if any conditions exist where our pictures cannot be shown in important communities, then we will have to build.

"Goldwyn is averse to buying theatres. We always have been and are today. Make that plain. We are interested in production and production only, and except when unusual conditions confront us, we shall not buy theatres.

"By this I mean that situations arise that do not seem consistent with our general policy. There are exhibitors who feel that they must become allied with a strong producing company to assure themselves of a proper program, and they approach us to purchase an interest in their houses with that end in view. They, on occasions, intimate and even insist that they will sell to our competitors unless we buy. We therefore at times feel compelled to do this in order to protect ourselves."

"Here is an example: in a certain western city an exhibitor came to me and said that he wanted us to buy an interest in his house. I asked him why. He said it was only a question of time before he would have to sell to one of the big companies to make sure of being able to show good pictures. I told him to go ahead and not worry; that we would assure him of having our pictures, and he was happy. The fear of opposition might have caused another type of exhibitor to sell out. But this exhibitor will remain in business with our product as one of his chief assets."

"That is all there is to it, and so far as we are concerned, that is all there will be. No exhibitor need worry about Goldwyn buying theatres. It is not our business. We are producers."
First National Invades the Southwest
Office Opened in Dallas, Tex., After Hearing of Conditions Prevailing

MOVED by declarations of a special committee representing three hundred independent exhibitors in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, officials of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., this week invaded the Southwest in force, established a new First National exchange in Dallas, and started the machinery which will ally the independent theatre owners of that territory in open opposition to the Hulsey-Lynch interests.

This action, it is said, was decided upon after the committee of exhibitors from Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas had appeared before First National members at their convention in Chicago two weeks ago and explained that the conditions alleged to exist, and which, they declared, made immediate action by Associated First National necessary if the independence of the tri-state exhibitors were to be preserved. The present status of affairs, these exhibitors said, was particularly threatening to the theatre owners they represented as a committee, because of the Lynch ownership of the Hulsey theatres, the control he had of the Paramount-Artcraft program for that territory, and the fact that Mr. Hulsey, as the holder of the original First National franchise in that district, had not joined his fellow First National members in signing the agreements which would sub-franchise the independent territory to independent exhibitors through Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Mr. Hulsey's refusal to sign the new agreements wherein he would be obligated to extend the protective and defensive benefits of his First National interests through sub-franchises to the independent exhibitors in the Southwest is said to have been made after he sold his theatre properties to the S. A. Lynch Enterprises. It was this decision, the committee said, which convinced the independent exhibitors that radical measures were essential to avoid a costly and protracted war between themselves, as individuals and independents, and the merged interests which entirely controlled one source of film supply and directed, in part, the disposition of another.

First National members in Chicago requested the Southwestern exhibitor committee to report back to their three hundred associates that prompt steps would be taken to establish Associated First National in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas without any entangling alliances, and on a basis which would be devoid of any personal element seeking to use its advantages in production sources to establish competing theatres that could not be classed as independent.

Fulfillment of this promise began on Monday of this week when Robert Lieber, president of Associated First National Pictures; H. O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer; J. D. Williams, manager; N. H. Gordon of Boston and Moe Mark of New York, who, with Mr. Schwalbe, compose the Executive Committee, and Sol Lesser arrived in Dallas and established headquarters at the Hotel Adelphi, preliminary to establishing a local office for Associated First National.

This branch will be administered from the Home Office in New York, and will function exactly as do the other First National exchanges throughout the country in awarding sub-franchises to the independent theatre owners of the three states. This will automatically guarantee to each sub-franchise holder the exhibition rights to all releases made by Associated First National, and make the proposition of negotiations between theatre owners in the territory and the circuit one of direct application instead of going through the local exhibitor owner of the original First National franchise.

Better Pictures Movement Is Taking Form

The M. P. T. Association of the World is Formed to Support Campaign for Better Films

The better pictures movement, started by J. A. Quinn several months ago, has taken very definite and concrete form, it is stated, under the direction of the M. P. T. Association of the World, Incorporated, a membership corporation formed under the New York State Board of Trade Article applying to such corporations. In order to carry out its work and enlist the co-operation of the public, the Association has organized the M. P. T. League for Better Pictures, membership in which is announced to be open to the public without dues.

The following statement has been issued by the M. P. T. Association of the World in connection with interests reported to have lent their co-operation with this new organization:

"The M. P. T. movement has been growing in leaps and bounds and has the strong support of the press and public as well as a large number of leaders in the motion picture industry.

"Among the organizations which have recently joined are the Woman's Club of Orange, with a thousand prominent people as members; The American Pen Women, New York Chapter, which includes many of the best known writers of the country; The New York Women's League for Animals, which is composed of many of New York's most prominent and influential men and women.

"Among the members of the industry to enroll recently are Hiram Abrams, head of the United Artists Corporation; E. J. Bowes, Managing Director of the Capitol theatre; Messmore Kendall, President; and Robert W. Chambers, Director, of the Moreland Realty Company which controls the Capitol theatre; Joe Brandt, Director-General of the National Film Corporation; Hugo Reisenfeld, Managing Director of the Rivoli, Rialto, and Criterion; Hugh Dierker, of The Hugh Dierker Productions, of Los Angeles, who is now in New York, with his most recent production; and Robert Drady.

"The M. P. T. Members of the committee, which is calling on various leading members of the industry and explaining the plan, is meeting with a decidedly encouraging response.

"Any information desired by members of the industry, or others, in regard to the M. P. T. plan, will gladly be given by the Association from its headquarters, 32 West 42nd street."

Operator's License Law Changed in Canada

American motion picture operators and photographers are not to be excluded from the Province of Ontario, and will not have to be Canadian subjects according to the information that was received by the Washington Bureau of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry from the State Department.

This announcement is the result of the request of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry made last August for the Canadian authorities to reverse their ruling in this matter. At that time the Canadian authorities promulgated certain regulations which required persons engaged as operators or photographers in Ontario to obtain a license. Applications to such licenses were to be issued only to British subjects.
The national convention of theatre owners at Cleveland, on June 7, is expected, according to current announcement, to openly split the motion picture industry into two distinct and opposing factions. These will be a solidly organized body of several thousand independent exhibitors pledged to support only independent producers who are non-exhibitors, and producer-exhibitors who are said to be competing and who plan further theatre competition against independent exhibitors, using the productions they control as the chief source of film supply for their own houses.

It is estimated that the total number of exhibitors who will subscribe in Cleveland to an open declaration of organized opposition to producer-exhibitor competition will be approximately five thousand, present in person or represented by proxy through their memberships in state and city leagues.

The prime objective of the Cleveland convention, following the general trend and openly voiced exhibitor sentiment of the Chicago mass meeting, will be to take up, with national exhibitor strength, the enlargement of the present membership of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, organized in Chicago as a semi-temporary body to aid in formulating plans for the June assembly, and which shall have, for its first official performance, the creation and adoption of defensive measures against the patronage seeking opposition of theatres financed, controlled and booked by producers.

It is recalled that the Chicago meeting was particularly pronounced in its spoken demand for a national body of independent exhibitors which will function with complete freedom from personal and political ambitions by its sponsors. That the Cleveland gathering will adopt so-called "steam roller" tactics, if necessary, to keep its schisms in the independent exhibitors, this character was apparent in the expressed determination of many important independent exhibitors who responded to W. C. Patterson's call.

"Politics in Cleveland," declares Frank J. Rembusch, chairman of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, "will be entirely out of order. Ohio's leading city will witness industrial fireworks of an entirely different character. It is the conviction of every enterprising independent exhibitor in the country that a serious menace confronts him, and not one of them with whom I have talked, or whom I heard address the Chicago meeting, has any intention of paying his personal expenses to Cleveland to aid in the political ambitions of any individual, in or out of any state or national organization."

The opening gun in the campaign of exhibitor defense endorsed in Chicago was sounded in New York late last week, when definite and official declarations of intentions were obtained from seven out of eleven producing organizations questioned by a sub-committee of the Patterson meeting. This group, which was an advanced guard for the Committee of Seventeen of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, was headed by Frank Rembusch. The Committee of Seventeen will meet in New York on June 3 and 4.

The Committee of Seventeen, during its two days' sessions in New York, will expect to receive, in that time, a statement from every producer in the business which will put each individual and organization engaged in the production of pictures formally on record for or against producer ownership and producer operation of theatres.

The report of this committee, with the original of the signed declarations of intentions from all producers, is scheduled to provide the guiding facts for the action of the independent exhibitors which will take in Cleveland. Supplemented by this will be a summarized account of the important information revealed by exhibitors in Chicago, substantiating the claims of Mr. Patterson and others that organized invasion of the independent exhibitor field is being fostered and financed by producing groups.

Mr. Rembusch, as chairman of the Committee of Seventeen, as well as national chairman of the Chicago convention, will submit the committee's report of its New York meeting, thereby putting every producer definitely on record before the convention.

Proctor Joins Associated Exhibitors

Former United Artists Manager Becomes Assistant to F. C. Quimby

ALPH O. PROCTOR, who resigned as assistant general manager of United Artists a few days ago, has become connected in an executive capacity with Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Mr. Proctor will act as general assistant to F. C. Quimby, president. His duties will keep him in intimate touch with exhibitors throughout the country, as well as giving him opportunity to broaden the scope of his activities in the executive offices.

Mr. Proctor is a trail-blazer in the motion picture industry. He has been an executive in various capacities with various organizations for more than ten years. He has a broad and deep knowledge of the film rental end of the business, as well as a wide acquaintance with motion picture men in every section of the country.

The new assistant general manager of Associated Exhibitors in Chicago, an independent state rights proposition. This successful venture was operated by Mr. Proctor for two years, when he severed his connection with Standard and became Pathe's manager at Chicago.

From the post of branch manager for Pathe Mr. Proctor was advanced to the position of division manager, having under his supervision Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines, Kansas City, Detroit, Cleveland and Buffalo. Later he was appointed district manager for the Western Division, which included Los Angeles, Denver, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Spokane and Butte.

Leaving Pathe, Mr. Proctor was made assistant general manager of United Artists Corporation, joining the organization at its inception. With United Artists Mr. Proctor had charge of the entire organization of the field force. He was also in charge of distribution, covering every distributing territory in the United States.
Harry Rice, of Universal, went to La Salle to direct a story on exploitation and advertising, a subject which put over "The Virgin of Stamboul" to capacity crowds at the La Salle theatre in that city.

Harry Weiss, of Superior Screen Service at Indianapolis, has bought the Illinois and Indiana territorial rights on "Neglected Wives," featuring Ann Ewerth, Clare Wolfe, and others. Mr. Weiss is wearing a big smile these days, as his picture, The Confessions, is in all the exchanges and a big hit on the opening day, despite the temperature being close to 80 degrees. He is making heavy bookings for the picture throughout Indiana and Illinois.

Citizens of Ileland, III., will have to worry along without seeing any moving pictures for a while as the Gen theatre, the only place of entertainment in that town, was struck by lightning and burned to the ground last week, and plans for rebuilding have not been made as yet.

Harry Spannhul, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, departed for Los Angeles last week with a print of the second of the Billy Whiskers' Comedies under his arm. The first of these comedies was a real laugh getter, but Mr. Spannhul declares that the second is a hundred points and stronger, and he expects to close some pending state rights contracts on the entire series while in New York.

Manager Max A. Neumann, of Robertson-Cole's Chicago Exchange added three live wires to his sales staff within the first few days. They are: Ulysses Miller, formerly with Universal and known as one of the star salesmen of Chicago; I. Natkin, who has spent twelve years in the motion picture business, seven as an exhibitor and five as a salesman, and M. J. Malter, who has been in the motion picture game for twelve years as an exhibitor and a salesman. Mr. Malter and Mr. Natkin will cover Indiana territory. Mr. Natkin also will assist the Chicago exhibitors, and Mr. Natkin will cover Indiana territory. Mr. Natkin will also assist the Chicago exhibitors.

Harry Herma arrived from New York Tuesday, to discuss plans for the erection of an Universal Exchanging Building in Chicago, with Manager Lesserman.

Banks Winter has resigned as District Publicity Manager for Universal's southern territory, and has arrived in St. Charles, Ill., to assume the duties of Mr. Natkin, C. C. Mr. Winter has not, as yet, announced his future plans, but it is understood that he has an excellent connection in view.

Publicity Director George R. Krieff, of Robertson-Cole's Chicago office, already is at work on public relations for the coming Carpentier-Farris, Enterprise Exchanges, and has placed three life-sized paintings of the banding Frenchmen in the windows of the Drygoods Department at Quincy and State. The interest the public takes in Carpentier is evidenced by the fact that the police had difficulty in keeping the crowds moving, so great was the throng which stopped to look at the pictures. Mr. De Krieff has arranged tea-rooms with a number of other stores in the Chicago loop where pictures of Carpenter will be shown.

Fred Linick and H. D. Martin were in St. Louis this week for the opening of Mack Sennett's Dash collection. The show was produced by Mr. Martin and Fred Linick owns the rights for Missouri. Mr. Martin later will visit several cities in the interest of "The Woman of the Town," a subject my state right market for the Mickey Film Company of Chicago. Other houses will bring Linick's Chicago office during the absence of Messrs. Linick and Martin.

Contracts recently closed by the Chicago office of the Typophone Fan Company for the installation of ventilating systems in the moving picture houses include those made with the D. Robinson's Apollo theatre; De Leon, Rex Lawlief's Lincoln Square theatre at Decatur; John Marlow's Hippodrome Theatre, Herron, III.; Jersey theater, Jefferson, Mo.; and the Paramount theatre at Lothrop, III., owner by W. H. Landsby, Installation of Typophone System in these theatres is expected to be completed before the weather gets so hot as to prevent the patrons from enjoying cool breeze while in the theatre, even when the mercury is hitting the top of the table. A large installation is also being put into the lobby of Chicago's northside theatre by the Riviera, so that patrons waiting for the show may be kept cool and comfortable.

Cecile B. De Mille spent a few hours in Chicago Monday confering with the managers of the local offices of the American Mr. De Mille was on route from Los Angeles to New York.

Famous Players-Lasky's two publicity experts, Messrs. Roche and Cassady, are busy these days, as exhibitors, booking Mount-Ararat super specials, appear to have the value of their exploitation services and are asking them to come to the various cities and towns in the territory and take personal charge of the advertising and exploitation campaigns. Mr. Roche just returned from Rock Island where he helped the Colonial theatre put over a week's run of "Everywoman," and Mr. Cassidy this week is doing publicity work at Fond du Lac, Green Bay and Oshkosh.

A highly successful four weeks' run of "Why Charley's Wife?" at the Randolph theatre, Chicago, has acted as a stimulus to exhibition by nearby cities to make extended bookings of this money-making De Mille feature, and Manager Blackford of Famous Players-Lasky, Chicago, reports many contracts signed up for runs of a week or longer from city theatres increasing booking for three and four days.

Ludwig Schindler spent last week in New York making further plans for the exploitation of "The Man He Chose," which recently had a very successful three-weeks' downtown showing in Chicago.

E. E. Fulton is recovering from the illness which has confined him to his home for two weeks, and will be back at the big desk in E. E. Fulton Company's plant before the end of the month.

O. F. Spahr, of the Enterprise Optical Company, has returned to Chicago after a visit to New Orleans, Las Vegas, and other cities of the Southwest. He reports that the demand for Motographs in that territory is threatening to swamp the Enterprise Optical Company's plant, despite its large increase in output. While in Dallas, Mr. Spahr took up the matter of the big demand for Motographs, with H. K. Barnett, of the Theatre Supply Company, distributors for Motographs in that territory. Plans were made to facilitate shipment of goods to the west.

Carl Hartill, manager of the Reelcraft Chicago Exchange, has been given charge of that company's Milwaukee office. Mr. Hartill was in Milwaukee last week looking over the field there, and reports that the exchange at that place is making an excellent record.

Century Films, Inc., is the latest independent exchange to enter the Chicago field. It was organized by Maurice A. Sallin and Henry Ellman, who are well known to exhibitors and exchanges of this district, and offices have been opened in the Film Exchange Building, 207 South Washaw Avenue. The feature which will be released through Century Films is the Leonard Meryberg production, "Are You Legally Married," starring Lew Cody, for which Mortimer and Ellman have secured the rights for Illinois and Indiana.

Alice Howell, working under the direction of Frederick J. Ireland, is putting the finishing touches on "Cinderella Cinderella," the fifth of her comedies produced for Reelcraft, and work is also under way on the sixth of the series at the Emerald Studio.

Manager Vandewater reports that Hallmark's Chicago office broke all records for business during the week ending May 1.

Manager Deneen, of the Alcazar, has booked "School Days," the latest of the Sensor comedy, for a second week. As it declares it is one of the biggest money-getters ever shown at that house.

M. J. Minz, who is representing the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, has booked the state rights for the famous cartoon films, "The Gumps."' is back in Chicago after a trip to Cleveland and Pittsburgh. At Cleveland he closed a state rights for Ohio and Kentucky to the Warner Film Attractions of that city, and in Pittsburgh he closed a contract with the Apex Pictures, Incorporated, to take over the sales of the Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

In Cleveland, a representative for the Chicago Tribune, Mr. Minz also contracted with the Chicago News to publish "The Gumps" cartoon daily.

Practically all the territory in the East and Central West now has been sold to Mr. Minz, who is expecting to leave for the West Coast within a few days to dispose of the Gumps Animated cartoons in that territory.

H. J. Aldous, treasurer of the Rokhacker Film Manufacturing Company, has left for the West Coast where he will give personal supervision to the placing of contracts for the construction of the Rokhacker Laboratory on the West Coast.

Frank Lorsch has come from St. Louis to take charge of the publicity department of Goldwyn's Chicago Exchange made vacant by the resignation of S. G. Shieff.

R. C. Seery, general manager for the First National Exchanging, has been given charge of that company's Milwaukee office. Mr. Hartill was in Milwaukee last week looking over the field there, and reports that the exchange at that place is making an excellent record.

Century Films, Inc., is the latest independent exchange to enter the Chicago field. It was organized by Maurice A. Sallin and Henry Ellman, who are well known to exhibitors and exchanges of this district, and offices have been opened in the Film Exchange Building, 207 South Washaw Avenue. The feature which will be released through Century Films is the Leonard Meryberg production, "Are You Legally Married," starring Lew Cody, for which Mortimer and Ellman have secured the rights for Illinois and Indiana.
An object lesson for those in the smaller cities who say that the lobby display is practical only for the big theatre. Above is shown the display which the Orpheum theatre of Scott’s Bluff, Neb., arranged for its showing "Pollyanna." Note the effective use of cut-outs from various sizes of stock paper.
Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, Stages Big Fashion Show

New Song Contest Idea Originated

As exploitation for "Alias Jimmy Valentine," the New Olympia theatre of New Haven, Conn., held a song writing contest which received a lot of attention. The New Olympia published the verse and music for the song and held its contest for the words of a chorus suitable for the music supplied.

As an incentive for the patrons of the theatre to compete, the announcement was made that the song would be published by a responsible firm on a royalty basis and that the writer of the chorus selected by the judges would share in the royalties the composition would earn.

The musical director of the Olympia selected the best chorus written during the contest.

Bruce Scenic Decided Novelty

A MOST unusual scenic is the Bruce offering at the Rialto this week under the title of "The Hope of Adventure," not so much because of its exceptional artistic value but as a novelty in that quite a large portion of it was shot while the cameraman was riding on the top of a jolting narrow gauge railroad train as it puffed its way up the mountainous terrain, its narrow gauge tracks giving way to rougher terrain.

The scenic is also excellent, a thread of a story being chronicled in which a man goes in search of adventure, selecting the route shown by the picture as the path over which he hopes to obtain a thrill.

A practical calendar which will advertise the attractions coming to his theatre and specify the dates they will be shown has been originated by T. R. Wright, manager of the Bluebird theatre, Dallas, Texas. The calendar does not attempt to be artistic, which is where most theatres fail when they go in for this sort of advertising, but it does tell the patrons of the Bluebird what is coming to the theatre, which is the main object of a calendar.

Description of this calendar detailed enough to be of use to those who wished to copy it would take more space than we can spare. If you are interested in getting up a calendar, write Mr. Wright for a copy.

Stillman, Cleveland, Presents Style Show

Historical Event in Flower City Tied-up with Theatre's Program

For the first time in the four years since it was built, Loew's Stillman theatre has deviated from the straight and narrow path of showing pictures, all pictures and nothing but pictures, and featured the most elaborate style show that Cleveland has ever seen. The occasion was linked up with the golden anniversary of The Wm. Taylor Sons Company, a local department store that has been catering to the public of Cleveland continuously for fifty years. Manager Jack Kuhn of the Stillman appreciated the civic pride connected with the event, and entered into the spirit of the jubilee, inserting in his program an actual commercial film made for the Taylor store. This film, called "FIFTY GOLDEN YEARS," was of historical interest. It went back to the early days of 1870; it showed the principal points of Cleveland at that time. It showed the main streets, the public places, costumes in vogue at that time. And then it went on to show the Cleveland of today. Anne Luther played the leading role in the picture. Following this reel came the style show. Half a dozen girls participated in it, and, with the cooperation of those connected with the Stillman theatre, especially Mr. Kuhn and resident manager Mr. Klein, it was put on so as to be the talk of the town.

Heavy green velvet curtains hid the stage from view. A dainty little maid, in black, with white apron, and white cap, came out before the curtain, displaying a neat card on which was the announcement of the costume to be shown. Musical Director Spitalny supplied special musical themes for the occasion. The theme for this little announcing maid was especially attractive. When she had made her last curtsey before retiring, the curtains were slowly drawn back, and there stood the model, with another green velvet drop as a background. It was extremely elaborate and classy and didn't savor in the least of an advertisement. To themes suitable to the gowns, the mannequins walked or danced or posed as the occasion demanded, until the whole gamut had been shown.

The whole thing took about an hour. Nowhere, in the style parade, did the name of the department store appear.

Did the novelty attract the public? Well, rather. To begin with, there were two exhibitions a day, one in the afternoon and one in the evening. After Wednesday, Manager Kuhn announced that thereafter there would be two exhibitions every evening—one for the early show, and one for the second performance. Crowds packed into the theatre to see it. They stood, a solid mass from the railing to the entrance doors, a distance of about twenty feet.

The Stillman theatre made a big hit with the residents of Cleveland by celebrating with them a tangible evidence of the city's growth. He has made the Stillman a part of Cleveland by connecting it with the old as well as the new regime. He has made a lot of friends for the theatre by his departure from his regular straight picture policy, and he has boosted the city that is boosting the Stillman theatre.
Exploitation of Merit From Three Western Cities

Proving That Small-Town Exhibitors Can Do Things

THAT the small town exhibitor is not able to put over a picture along the lines followed in the cities, is proven pure bunk by the management of Mrs. M. Clendon, manager of the one and only theatre of Avant, Okla., staged a prologue for “Eyes of Youth.”

Mrs. Clendon hired ten local people from the town and dressed them up in simply made costumes representing Hindoos, dancing girls, etc. These were arranged in a group around the stage. On a slow curtain with the house darkened, a double quartette rendered a beautiful solo after which the house was gradually lighted and when brought to full illumination, revealing pretty and effective grouping, an elocutionist stepped to the center of the stage while the spotlight was played on him and recited a dramatic poem of love. The light effect and the group held the riveted attention of the audience while the elocutionist recited the poem. Instantly after he had finished, the double quartette sang another number with full light effect and as the song and music gradually died out lower and lower, the stage lights were correspondingly lowered until the house was again entirely darkened and chimes were sounded back stage. As the chimes ceased the picture was running, the whole being blended together into one harmonious whole, making a splendid effect.

“The people were hired at very low cost, as the enterprising woman manager of the theatre selected those who were eager to help out in the staging, it being quite an honor in Avant, to appear on the stage in any manner. The double quartette were from two local churches and as they worked only a few minutes at the night performances the cost was negligible, thus the entire cost was small while the effect was magical.”

Here we have an example of enterprise and brains well mixed with a little shrewd showmanship thrown in, giving the theatre a splendid prologue and the picture a cracking fine send-off. The prologue was enthusiastically applauded and was the “talk of the town” which advertising, though invaluable, cost the theatre nothing and the news of the novel presentation packed the house at every performance.

Good Twist to Free Ticket Idea

Using a motion picture to promote attendance in the public schools is the unique twist given the old exploitation stunt of free children’s matinées by the Tivoli Theatre in Beaumont, Texas.

The stunt was put over in cooperation with the Beaumont, Texas, Journal, when “Anne of Green Gables” was shown in that city.

The free matinee for children was announced for the morning of Saturday, April 17th. Every school child in the city’s public schools who arrived at his or her desk on time during the entire week was promised a free ticket for the matinée.

In addition to stirring up competition among the youngsters to show a perfect attendance record, rivalry was stimulated between the various rooms in a school and between different schools as to which would produce the best record.

The plan also had the hearty cooperation of parents and was most favorably commented upon as a means of establishing regular school attendance and habits. Losing out on the show by failing to get his or her school card was regarded as being to be a more effective chastisement and form of discipline than could be administered at home.

A Problem for the Wise Guys

At 7:00 P. M., Sunday evening, or rather the middle of the afternoon, New York time, the Capitol theatre was playing to S. O. S. for all of the balcony and the lowered priced seats downstairs.

This was in spite of the fact that New York was experiencing its first real warm summer day and that the Capitol seats 5,000 people.

What was the reason? One of two things, or both. “The Silver Horde” is the principal item at this house for this week. We sat in the middle of the house and from all sides could hear an interminable clatter. Intimated that a considerable number of the audience were familiar with the novel from which the feature is adapted, and had undoubtedly been influenced in attending by this fact. “Hans and Gretel” is the opera being sung, an engagement extended from a week some month or so ago. We noticed an unusual number of children and women in the audience, especially in the balcony. Does the fairy story which is told in this composition appeal to women and children?

Waiting lines are not new to Broadway, but waiting lines under the conditions we have described are. There is another possible reason. An unusual amount of exploitation for New York has been given the feature picture.

Atmosphere More Important Than Music

FRANK COSTELLO, manager of the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, and entitled to credit for the many prologues that have spread the fame of this house, believes that creation of the proper atmosphere before starting the run of the feature is far more important than incidental music or any other aid to the showing. He declares that so popular have the prologues become that the most frequent telephone inquiry received at the theatre is in regard to the time of the beginning of the speaking introduction which he uses for all feature pictures.

While prejudiced in favor of prologues he declares that a “hit or miss” speaking act preceding a picture is worse than nothing at all. He bases his prologues upon the most impressive part of the feature and builds up the dialogue for the actors so that the sub-titles in the pictures fit into the talking by the characters in a natural manner.

His method of deciding upon the most impressive part of the feature is unique. As soon as he has booked a feature he arranges for a run of it during the morning hours so that his entire house staff, including the ushers, ticket-takers and box office people can be present. They are provided with a list of the sub-titles in the picture and as the feature is run they have their own noting as to the titles which take place in the part of the picture which most impresses them. At the conclusion of the run all the annotated title lists are collected and a prologue built up on the titles which have been selected by the majority of the staff.

With the showing of “The Beauty Market,” the part of the picture where the heroine’s patience departs and he wrathfully calls for her alone, telephone the house where he knows his wife is a guest was selected as being the most impressive. The prologue setting was that of a boudoir in a private house. Sixteen people took part, four of them comprising an orchestra. A program of dancing interspersed with singing and instrumental solos was given and then as the couples started dancing again the lights faded out, showing two transparentities in the rear set. The one on the left was that of a boudoir, that on the right of a man’s study. A maid is seated reading in the boudoir. The study is occupied by a man perplexed. Suddenly the man, registering that he had reached a decision, takes up the telephone and calls a number. The maid answers and then goes and calls to the telephone one of the gayest of the dancers. Then ensued a dialogue based upon the titles carried in the picture. As it ends the two transparentities fade out, and a third in the center, showing her lover awaiting in the garden, was lighted. This one faded out to the beginning of the run of the picture.

According to Mr. Costello the prologue more than paid its cost by the added interest in the picture.
Shea Designs Prologue for "Why Change Your Wife"

When the Palace Theatre of Little Rock, Ark., managed by J. Frank Shea, played "Why Change Your Wife?" a prologue and stage setting was featured.

On this page is shown the stage setting provided for the number. The prologue proved a great success and was instrumental in attracting a great deal of extra business for the engagement.
Original Prologue Staged by Shea

J. Frank Shea, manager of the Palace theatre, Little Rock, Arkansas, was responsible for one of the most pretentious presentations of a motion picture ever staged in his city when he originated and put over a stage setting and prologue number for "Why Change Your Wife?" during its engagement at the Palace.

The stage setting originated for the event may be seen by inspection of the cuts on the opposite page.

The door to the “room” where the actress, who was secured for the role in the prologue, was discovered when the curtain rose, was screened with transparent gauze and had lights attached to a dummer on both sides and top. As the curtain rose a sardonic masculine laugh was heard off stage. As the lights were gradually raised the actress was taken up by the actress, who could now be seen sitting at her dressing table with hair disheveled and clothes unkempt.

After a moment, she began reciting lines from Kipling’s “A Fool There Was,” while posing before a hand mirror, touching her lips with grease paint, placing a garter and generally interpreting the role interposed with laughter until she finally appeared a radiant young woman perfectly dressed.

As an epilogue another verse was added to the lines used in the opening and as the performer finished them the lights were dimmed out. Throughout the recitation the orchestra assisted with the rendition of appropriate music.

As the Epilogue the Palace used a lobby display, window display and mirror decorating throughout the city. The telephones were used to call everybody in town, advising them to see the picture. Two girls were especially employed for this purpose.

The Palace has an orchestra and an organ and specializes in presenting a good musical program.

The Illustrated Song Coming Back

In spite of the fact that ten years ago the exhibitors found out that the illustrated song was something that the average movie fan of the day endured rather than enjoyed, the use of the song slide is again coming into favor.

Recently at the Pershing theatre, St. Louis, Mo., the old song slide was brought back. Get the situation correctly! The Pershing is a magnificent first-run house, twenty-two piece orchestra, organ, and the complete furnishings of an up-to-date theatre. Be that as it may, Tom Terry, the organist, played a solo called “Love Me.” Slides were then thrown on the screen and the ladies were requested to sing. They did.

The slides were thrown back and the men were requested to beat the ladies. They did. Once more the slides flashed and the entire assemblage rendered the song.

Flour City Exploitation Campaign Stirs Up Dust

FINKELSTEIN and Ruben, the well-known twin city exhibitors, recently staged a smashing exploitation campaign introducing Mary Miles Minter to Minneapolis—a stunt that shook up the flour city in a way it is likely to remember for some time to come.

They enlisted the aid of prominent society people of the city to boost five free morning matinees for several thousand poor children. Five thousand calling cards were dropped from an aeroplane over the city. Twenty thousand post cards were sent with the list and thousands of novel throwaways distributed from house to house. A record amount of newspaper and billboard advertising nailed down the lid of this strenuous effort.

All of which went to indicate that the mill owners are not the only ones who can stir up dust in Minneapolis. Following the advice of one of its leading concerns the populace of the city did it then and there. According to the returns from the Finkelstein and Ruben boxoffice, it appeared that the city had declared an unmitigated holiday in response to the campaign.

The campaign extended over a period of ten days and was noteworthy not only for its size and scope but for its effective copy matter which it has developed. On the Friday following, a ten-inch (five columns twenty inches deep) advertisement was carried in all three of the Minneapolis newspapers. The Tribune, News and Journal.

One two-column advertisement ten inches deep was carried in each of the three newspapers on the next day and on the opening day two three-column advertisements ten inches deep were inserted in each of the papers and a three-column advertisement fifteen inches deep was carried in addition in two of them. All the advertising featured the star prominently.

During the week of showing the firm used its regular advertising space and in addition engaged a three-column ten-inch deep space in each one of the three newspapers for a solid week. All the advertising used in this large campaign was different and specially prepared by Finkelstein and Ruben. They represent not only a good consistent average, but several stood out for their artistic effectiveness.

The series of five morning matinees arranged for poor children in the city during the showing brought very satisfactory publicity results. A pass to the theatre and a free matinee ticket were sent to each child with an invitation to come, in cooperation with the Associated Charities organization of Minneapolis.

Prominent society people gave their time to act as patrons for the children at these matinees. This angle of the stunt was seized upon by the newspapers in giving publicity. The names of the society people were used as a basis for featured stories for each one of the matinees.

Novelty Post Cards Get Attention at Lorain

The Opera House, Lorain, Ohio, involved pretty nearly the whole town in its recent exploitation campaign for "Why Change Your Wife?" and incidentally made the picture the sole topic of conversation both at school and in barber shops—meaning that the men and the women were both talking about it.

Manager Theopolis of the Opera House got up a list of a thousand married men in Lorain. To each of these thousand men he mailed a set of four post cards. The first one read: "Hoping you'll enjoy the film: What if you do like jazz and she's had to learn the classics—Why Change Your Wife?"

(Signed) "BETTIE.”

The second one read: "Honey: Even though she would improve your soul, Why Change Your Wife?"

(Signed) "BETTIE.”

The third one read: "Dear: Suppose she does want to be hooked up while you're shaving, Why Change Your Wife?"

(Signed) "BETTIE.”

And the last one: "SWEETIE: A banana skin can shape your destiny—so Why Change Your Wife?"

(Signed) "SALLIE.”

These appeared the four days preceding the opening of the play. At first, the wives were inquisitive. Then they became interested. The third one made them suspicious. Then, with one cleared up all the mystery and put Mr. Husband back in good standing.

But they talked. Everybody talked about it.

Allens Take Advantage of Circumstances

A series of unusual incidents occurred in connection with the presentation of "The Partners of the Night" at the Allen’s theatre, Toronto, Ontario. It happened that two players who appeared in the picture were present in Toronto as members of a theatrical company which was playing at another local house. These were Emmett Corrigan and Vincent Coleman and their stage vehicle was "Martinique," which was the attraction at the Princess theatre. Coleman made personal appearances at every performance in the Allen theatre during the local engagement. Corrigan also attended several shows at the Allen theatre in company with friends in order to see the picture.

During the presentation of "Partners of the Night," a mystery woman stunt was pulled off. Announcements were made that "Mysterious Miss Regan" was on the town in Toronto and a reward of $10 was offered for her capture. Twice during the week she was apprehended, once on Monday and again on Wednesday. A Toronto young lady essayed the role and it was another young lady who captured her in the downtown section of Toronto at Monday noon. "Mae Regan" was also caught by four children outside of Allen’s Bloor theatre on the Wednesday night.

Kashin Wins Bet and Obtains Much Publicity With Clever Idea

Montreal Exhibitor Refused Cooperation by Newspapers Pulls New Stunt

ONE recent Saturday night about eight o'clock the principal shopping and amusement streets of Montreal were suddenly enlivened by the raucous shouts of a number of excited newboys announcing "Extree Spechul Herald"—"Great Air Robbery—Great Air Robbery."

"Great Air Robbery.—Officer Makes Daring Attempt to Rob Aerial Mail" the people read. "My God!" said one man, "what will they do next?" "Goodness me!" said a woman, going pale with apprehension, "they will be getting in at our bedroom windows next." "What were the police doing?" said the grocer who always knows where to put the blame.

Then, as under the electric light standards, store windows and the aid of matches, this barefaced attack upon the rights and peace of the community was eagerly read in cold print, it dawned upon the people that they had been "spoofed" and "mocked." The whole thing was an advertisement for the Holman theatre, carefully thought out and splendidly engineered. Morris Kashin, manager of the Holman theatre, hates to be balked in any of his desires. He had booked "The Great Air Robbery" and the cooperation for the ad had been denied him. He had suggested several stunts to the different papers, but instead of being received with open arms, he received the cold shoulder. "No, no, Mr. Kashin," they said, "that sort of thing might do for Broadway but not here—besides we are too wide awake to have things put over us like that." This aroused Mr. Kashin and in the end he had bet one of these big men a ten dollar hat that in his very own paper he would pull over a stunt that would open his eyes.

And this is what Mr. Kashin did. He quietly took a page advertisement, marked it extra special and gave it the authority of "The Aero Publishing Service," if such a service may exist. The upper half of the page with its newspaper headlines appeared as a genuine advertisement of a sensational news scoop—for it simply read "Great Air Robbery. Officer Makes Daring Attempt to Rob Aerial Mail Only Fifty Feet Away." The other part of the page—an exact half—contained the advertisement. Now when the latter half was folded back underneath the top, there was nothing apparent at first sight—nothing before the reader had assimilated the fact that there had been an attempt at robbery—to show that was nothing but a genuine newspaper sensation. Mr. Kashin bought 10,000 extra papers, had then folded with the upper half of his announcement showing, and started out his boys and probably the most ingenious advertising stunt ever pulled off in Montreal. The newspapers took their defeat very cheerfully and are now waiting for the next stunt that Kashin will pull off. In the meantime Mr. Kashin is wearing a new hat and a well-known newspaper man is being mercilessly chaffed.

Brown Improves Plane Advertising Idea

Takes Circus Joe Martin With Him for Aerial Flight

There's been monkey business in Memphis recently. The Memphis News refers to is Memphis, Tenn, down in Dixie on the banks of the turbid Mississippi, and the instigator of the monkey business is none other than G. E. Brown, director of publicity and advertising of the Memphis Enterprises, Inc., which operates six motion picture theatres in that southern metropolis.

The monkey business in this instance, however, had a motive behind it. The motive was the exploitation of "What's Your Husband Doing?" The stunt is decided out of the usual line insofar as the monkey part is concerned. Mr. Brown took advantage of the fact that the Sanger circus was wintering in Memphis and through negotiations with the management, obtained permission to use Patsy, the largest trained monkey the circus boasts, for an airplane ride over Memphis.

Two trips were made to the aviation grounds, the first being on a Sunday prior to the showing of "What's Your Husband Doing?" at which time one of the leading afternoon papers ran several front page feature stories on Patsy's ascent into the clouds.

The paper carried these feature stories two days prior to Patsy's first visit to the field. When Sunday came, there were more than 1,000 persons on the grounds to get a close-up view of the daring Simian aviatrix and the kids, of whom there were several hundred, had the time of their lives ogling Patsy while the camera man snapped her aboard the plane.

All attempts to have Patsy arrayed in the customary aviation garm-proved futile but she was not averse to going aloft.

The flight proper was made on Tuesday morning during the showing of the picture at the Strand theatre where it ran the week. One hundred free passes to the Strand were distributed from the clouds as the plane soared over the business district of the city. Everyone in Memphis was on the lookout for the plane and as the bits of cardboard fluttered in the wind, small boys started on a wide goose chase for it was as difficult to run down one of the cards in the high wind as it is to chase the end of the rainbow. However a goodly number of the pasteboards were turned in at the box-office during the week.

As the result of the stunt, front page publicity was obtained for five days with illustrations accompanying the story for three days.

The cost to the Memphis Enterprises, Inc., was the cost of the cards, the plane being donated by the Memphis Aerial Co. That the stunt paid well at the boxoffice and should do well elsewhere where planes are available, is evidenced by the fact that the opening day records set a new mark and the Strand played to capacity during the entire engagement.

Universal To Install New Comedy Brand

Beginning early next fall, Universal will release only one brand of two-reel comedies, it was announced recently, upon Mr. Carl Laemmle’s return from the Coast. With the production of one brand, Universal asserts it will strive to turn out a series of comedy gags second to none. They will all be called Centers of Comedy and the Center bathing girls will figure largely and pleasingly in most of them.

Fred Finkle, the leading director for the L-Ko comedies, recently arrived in New York and told the Universal in the idea of a new style of clever comedy. He brought one point work to prove his point. It is called “A Movie Hero” and is a laughable subter on screen idols. It will be one of the first pictures released under the new one-brand schedule.

Educational Has New Brand of Comedies

With the opening of the new Educational Films Corporation exchange a new series of two-reel comedies will make their appearance. These will be known as the Mermaid Comedies and will be released monthly.

Mermaid Comedies will be divided between male and female stars, Lloyd Hamilton of “Ham and Bud” fame and more recently appearing in Sunshine productions, will be starred in six of these while in six others a noted woman player will be seen. In the initial release, “A French Girl,” Marcell Ress, the beauty who was featured by Mack Sennett, will have the stellar part. Jack White, who won such distinction for his directorial work with Mack Sennett and for the Fox Sunshine brand will have charge of these comedies.

Addition of this series provides Educational with three series, each of which will appear once a month the Chester and the Torchy Comedies having already been announced.

E. J. Ratcliffe Is Cast In Metro Special

E. J. Ratcliffe, who has been engaged to play Holloway, the “heavy,” in the S-L all-star production of “Love, Honor and Obey,” a picturization of Eugene Walter of Charles Neville Buck’s novel, “The Tyrant of Weakness,” at Metro’s New York studios in West Sixty-first Street, is a veteran of the stage, remembered by New Yorkers as a member of Daniel Freiman’s stock company at the old Lyceum.

Mildred Davis To Stay In Lloyd Comedies

Mildred Davis, who jumped into fame by her performance opposite Harold Lloyd in his series of $100,000 two-reel comedies distributed by the Rel, has renewed her contract with the Rollin Film Company. This assures her appearance in Lloyd’s second series of two-reeler comedies, the first of which is now under way in the new Rollin Studio at Culver City.

Live News From The Producers

Fox Signs Emile Chautard

Famous French Director to Produce Popular Detective Stories

ONE of the most important announcements coming from the executive offices of William Fox, president of the Fox Film Corporation, during the present spring season is that issued this week regarding the engagement of M. Emile Chautard, the French director. M. Chautard, whose skill in the staging of many of the most successful screen productions has brought him an international reputation, has been signed by William Fox to produce a series of supperspecial films.

Decision has already been reached by Mr. Fox as to the productions which first will go into work. They will be a series of the celebrated detective stories “Fantomas,” the mysterious tales by Pierre Souvestre and Marcel Allain. While small portions of these successful stories are already known to the screen, having been produced in Europe several years ago in a crude manner—it is announced by Fox that all the material which will be utilized for this series will be brand-new and will number twenty-six stories in all. It is planned by the Fox organization, however, with greater possibilities offered by facilities today, to make this a super-special series in every sense of the word, and to dress the productions most lavishly as to settings and property detail.

Not only has William Fox engaged M. Chautard, but in bringing this eminent Frenchman under his trademark the organization is further augmented by the addition of the director’s entire staff of cameramen, art and technical experts, cutters, property men, and assistant directors.

“Little Cafe” a Warm Weather Picture

“The Little Cafe,” scheduled for release by Pathé on June 6, is described as an ideal production for entertainment in the warm months. It is one of the lives, highest comedies of the year, full of the sparkling activity of the French comedians Max Linder, and replete with hilarious scenes in the gardens of outdoor restaurants of Paris.

It is the first hint of the mad, gay flavor of old Paris that has been screened since the outbreak of the war in 1914. All the splendor of the nightlife is there, the life of the cabarets, the theaters, the revues, and the music halls have been filmed.

Mayflower Officials See “The Scoffer”

A critical jury of twelve Mayflower Photoplay-Corporation officials witnessed a pro-release view of Alain Dansis’s latest picture production, “The Scoffer,” recently and the verdict of the twelve was unanimous. It was their belief that this independently created a sensation such as that aroused by the “Miracle Man,” which is still doing a spectacular business.

The cast of “The Scoffer” includes James Kirkwood, Reba Mitchell and Phoe McCullough. According to tentative plans “The Scoffer” will be First National’s second release under the new contract with Mayflower.

Argus Stores To Handle All Fulco Products

Carl Fulton, sales manager of E. F. Fulton & Company, announces that he has just completed an arrangement with the American Lamp & Appliance Company for Argus to handle the entire line of Fulco products at the Argus company’s chain of supply stores, and shipments already are going forward from the big Fulton plant in Chicago to Argus stores in Cleveland and Boston. What is probably the biggest deal of the accessories ever shipped out of Chicago at one time, is also being prepared to go forward to the Argus Los Angeles store, it is announced.

The first of the “super rewind tables” for projection rooms, which Mr. Fulton says feature fur in advance of anything now on the market, are being completed at the Fulton plant and will be put on sale. Educational distributors of Fulco products at an early date.

Vote of Thanks Given First National

After but one year in the film business, the officers and directors of Canadian Photographs, Ltd., celebrated its first birthday by a joint vote of thanks to the First National Exhibitors’ Congress and to Ernest Shipman for the splendid exploitation of their first production “Back to God’s Country,” by James Oliver Curwood.

The treasurer’s report showed that contracts for bookings ahead would soon total $2,600,000 on one dollar mark. This first venture has proven so successful under Ernest Shipman’s experienced guidance, that the big men of the affairs who are interested in this Canadian producing unit, have decided to throw unlimited capital and the vast resources of the Dominion into further productions which they claim will surpass their first effort.

Atlanta Exchange for Educational Soon

For the first time the Southern States are to have film exchanges handling only their stock. Hon. Larry Ginsberg, of the New York offices of Educational Films Corporation, is to arrive here to open the first of these branches. The second will be established in either Dallas or New Orleans. Opening of these offices will complete Atlanta’s own exchange system which will be devoted to short subjects exclusively.

Mr. Ginsberg has been authorized to offer acceptable motion pictures to a percentage of the interest in the Southern exchanges, the control of each to remain in Educational.

Jane Novak to Play in "The Trail's End"

Jane Novak, one of the best known leading women of filmdom, is to appear with House Peters and a notable cast of old timers in Edwin Carewe-directed picture to be presented to the public by Louis B. Mayer. This production is Carewe’s own which he and James Oliver Curwood’s novel, “Isabel.”
Laemmle Pleased By Conditions on Coast

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has returned to New York from Universal City, Cal., highly delighted over affairs at the Universal's west coast studio.

"The situation at Universal City never was better," he said in a recent interview. "The morale of players, directors, and working staff is at a high pitch which augurs well for forthcoming Universal productions. "I do not expect any more trouble at Universal City. With the advent of Isadore Bernstein as general manager, there was a decided clearing of the atmosphere. There is not a man nor woman out there who will not put a shoulder to the wheel."

"I am confident that the new form of Commission government for Universal City, with Mr. Bernstein at its head, is doing away with the administrative difficulties we had previously. It seems to be an ideal solution of a vexing problem and I am looking forward to a productivity for the plant that will greatly eclipse anything that has been done there in the past."

Aubrey J. Re-Signs With Vitagraph Company

The amusing antics of Jimmy Aubrey in Big V Comedies are now guaranteed exhibitors for some time to come. The veteran comedian this week signed a new contract with Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph for a term of two years.

With Aubrey's new contract goes a new producing unit, organized with Director Jess Robbins at the head. Evelyn Nelson is the new blonde beauty to appear opposite Jimmy in his new series. "Babe" Hardy, who doesn't weigh an ounce over one-sixth of a ton, continues as his "heavy," Irvin Ries, who has been grading Aubrey comedies for some time past, will still be at the camera for the new series.

Goldwyn Head Returning from Europe

Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, who has been in London for the past six weeks arranging for the distribution of Goldwyn Pictures in England and on the Continent, sailed for New York on the Mauri- tania last Saturday. Gabriel L. Hess, secretary of the company, also is returning. An interesting announcement concerning the handling of the company's pictures in the foreign market, is expected to follow the arrival of the Goldwyn executives in New York.

Charles Ray Sells Two Hoyt Comedies

Charles Ray has completed the sale in Los Angeles of "A Contented Woman," the second of the Hoyt comedies to be disposed of by the First National. Joseph Schenck has acquired the screen rights to this farce-comedy as a vehicle for Constance Talmadge. Mr. Ray disposed of "A Texas Steer" a week ago to Samuel E. Rork.

To Exploit "The Wonder Man"

ALTHOUGH fully cognizant of the tremendous free publicity which has been received, and which will continue to be received by Georges Carpentier, "The Idol of France," who is starred by Robertson-Cole in "The Wonder Man," to be released Memorial Day, the distributing company has to no means overlooked plans for a highly organized exploitation campaign, it is declared by Robertson-Cole in a statement just issued.

The statement follows:

"This has been placed in the hands of a corps of experts who will start the production off with a big smash in the larger cities where the picture will be shown first. After that time the campaign will be taken up and pushed vigorously by the Robertson-Cole publicity men in the branch offices headed by the main publicity force in the executive office, who will correlate and assemble the current news matter, so as to constantly give the picture fresh material for exploitation.

"The personality of Georges Carpentier coupled with the remarkable story of 'The Wonder Man' has the greatest exploitation possibilities of any attraction which has been given to the trade in recent years. In the first place the man is one of the most picturesque war heroes produced by the allies. Next he is a pugilist, the champion of Europe, having won this title through one of the most sensational ring contests which ever took place. These two elements are of irresistible interest to the male patrons of theatres, which represents the sex that is more difficult to interest in a motion picture attraction.

"Starting with these two big selling points from the standpoint of interest to the male sex, Carpentier's personality and the nature of his picture also has many points of interest to women. In the first place the man is young, very handsome and has a most winning smile which is capitalized continuously in the motion picture. Besides his charm, Carpentier's culture, which includes a knowledge of music, literature and art, constantly shines through in his winning ways. To these points of his personality are added the drawing powers of "The Wonder Man" as a dramatic production.

"Treading of a theme which deals in a vivid way with the high society and with international affairs 'The Wonder Man' carries all the elements of love, interest and mystery. The love story is very pretty, one, with Faire Binney opposite Mr. Carpentier and Robert Barrat as second man."

"The motion picture world is due for a positive surprise when it sees the dramatic work of Carpentier, who is an actor as well as a pugilist, a soldier, scholar and gentleman. Exploitation of the picture also will not overlook the elaborateness of the settings. These include scenes in an exclusive club, in the exquisite ballroom of a millionaire's home, at the ring side where a dramatic boxing bout takes place, and in and about beautiful homes of the rich."

"With these points of exploitation, it will be seen that the exhibitors in 'The Wonder Man' has a production which cannot fail to make him money. Robertson-Cole has taken care that no point be missed in presenting to the exhibitors complete exploitation plans for the picture. The entire writing, advertising and art forces of Robertson-Cole have been busy for the past two months on the press book and campaign scheme for exploiting the famous Frenchman.

"M. Carpentier received a rousing welcome on his first invasion of Canada, when he reached Toronto on May 8. When the train pulled in, early in the morning Mayor Church, of Toronto, and the city officials, were on hand and escorted him into the city and entertained him at a breakfast that amounted to a banquet, at the King Edward Hotel.

"In Washington, D. C. arrangements had been made for President Wilson to be on hand at the circus, but owing to the Chief Executive's illness he did not attend."

In Boston a big delegation of exhibitors met the star.
Found: A Business Woman

Eleanor Fried Managed Walpole Expedition to Orient Most Capably

H ere’s another story that tends to discredit that theory about the unimportance of the sex in the question of the behavior of the female of the species. Eleanor L. Fried managed the recent Universal serial expedition to the Orient, during which she had the charge of Miss Walpole and her company and the great mass of luggage, necessary for an overseas campaign of this sort. According to Universal, the business management of this expedition represented a $200,000 job, but Miss Fried, states Universal, acquitted herself in most satisfactory style.

In Japan Miss Fried’s main task was to keep informed of the red tape of Japanese officialdom and to keep the company out of trouble by the infraction of any of these numerous regulations. It was in China, according to Universal, that Miss Fried’s business sagacity was most clearly demonstrated. Following is Universal’s statement of how the young woman handled the problem of the fluctuating exchange rates:

“She found that the American dollar was not worth a dollar in that country. It varied from 78 cents up to 85 cents, due to the peculiar exchange. She also found that its exchange rate varied considerably from day to day, sometimes as much as four or five cents on the dollar.”

Miss Fried, who handled the purse-strings of the expedition, so realized that her official bank account would not last long if she specialized in the yen varied, realized that her official bank account would not last long if she specialized in the yen.

“He watched the exchange rates keenly. When they went down, she would double his until the rate went up again, which generally would be in three or four days. When she could not wait, she would borrow money at the bank to pay her bills from this, and then reimbursed the local banks when the value of the American dollar would jump up again.”

“Human Stuff” Completed

Harry Carey’s New Role Presents Him as Clubman and Ranch Owner

R EEVES EASON has just reported the completion of “Human Stuff,” Harry Carey’s latest Universal photodrama. The story, by Tarkington Baker, differs in many ways from the accustomed Carey feature, it is stated, as it first introduces the popular star as an eastern college man, in the conventional garb of the clubman and as a guest at a pink tea table.

Of course, before many thousand feet of film have been unrolled the locale of the story changes and Carey finds himself in the great west, doing things the audience always expects him to do. The fact that Harry Carey was a star on the legitimate stage before he acted before the moving pictures makes the actor feel at home in any scene, although of late years he has specialized in the rough diamond type of western character.

In “Human Stuff” Harry Carey appears as the son of a wealthy manufacturer who, upon graduating from college, goes on a globe-trotting tour. Australia and its sheep range is in him and he remains there for several weeks. Returning to America his father expects him to take charge of his vast business interests, but the narrow city life, with its social obligations and business ethics, makes him uncomfortable and he longs for the open stretches. An opportunity to buy a ranch in the west decides him to leave the city and the life he has grown to dislike. In the west he is hailed as a tenderfoot and meets with many adventures.

Elaborate settings ranging from the multi-millionaire’s mansion on New York to the vast sheep ranch and the wilder side of the story are added to the strength of the story. Principals in Mr. Carey’s support are Mary Charles, Fontaine La Rue, Ruth Fuller Golden, Charles LeMay, Harold Christian, Frankie Mack, Joe Harris and others.

Promotion at Pathé’s St. Louis Exchange

Robert F. Wheth has been appointed branch feature sales manager at St. Louis, Mo., of Pathé Exchange and Mr. Wheth is a pioneer in the motion picture industry.

“Clothes” Stars Olive Tell

Metro Special to Be a Galaxy of Costly Gowns; Work to Start Soon

M etro announces the engagement of Olive Tell to play the leading role in “Clothes,” an all-star picturization of the Avery Hopwood-Channing Pollock drama, which is to be the next production made at Metro’s New York studios, No. 3 West Sixty-first Street. Miss Tell is already busy preparing an elaborate wardrobe for the picture, which Metro expects to make one of the most memorable fashion displays ever put on the screen. All of the latest costly designs are to be represented, it is stated, and for this reason Metro production officials are reported to be in consultation with a number of the most noted dress designers in designing women’s clothes and millinery.

Work on the continuity of “Clothes” has been started by Arthur Zeller, of Metro’s scenario staff. In the production Olive Tell will play the role of Olivia Sherwood, the part created on the legitimate stage by Grace George, in the production in which she had associated with her Frank Worthing, Robert T. Haines and Selene Johnson.

Miss Tell first became a star under Metro auspices in Kate Jordan’s picture, “Secret Strings,” after the actress had made a sensational success in “To Hell With The Kaiser,” a Metro special.

Actual production on “Clothes” will be started in a couple of weeks. In the meantime, the New York studios are actively busy every day with production of “Love, Honor and Obey,” the picturization by Eugene Walter of Charles Neville Buck’s novel, “The Tyranny of Weakness,” which is being directed by dirección de Cordova, and “The Marriages of Mayfair,” a screen version by Julia Burnham of Cecil Raleigh’s Drury Lane melodrama, directed by George W. Terwilliger.

Pathe Has New Male Star

Herbert Rawlinson Makes Debut in Blackton Picture, “Passers By”

H erbert Rawlinson makes his debut under the Pathé banner, as star of J. Simon Blackton’s screen version of the stage success, “Passers By,” by C. E. K. St. John’s Chambers. Mr. Rawlinson was engaged by Mr. Blackton especially for this production, because of the ideal requirements he possesses for the character of “Peter Waverton.”

Mr. Rawlinson heads a cast that compares with the best seen in any production this year, says Pathé, and one which faultlessly interprets the keen characterization done by Mr. Chambers.

Tom Lewis, Dick Lee, and W. J. Ferguson are seen as the main support of Mr. Rawlinson, and for their various characters they could not have been surpassed. Tom Lewis portrays “Cally,” the lovable, human London cab driver who is one of the “passers by” prominent in the Chambers play. Dick Lee has for years been rated by the foremost character actors of stage and screen, while Mr. Ferguson, for nearly forty years, has held a prominent position in theatricals.

Commode Blackton has transferred the logs of London to the screen, in all their natural density. Fog effects have been attempted many times by directors, with one noteworthy recent instance, yet in naturalness all these efforts are said to be surpassed by Mr. Blackton’s efforts in “Passers By.”
Says Italy Boycotts American Pictures

A. J. Xydias, a well-known exhibitor of the South, recently returned from a trip abroad during which he studied picture conditions in Italy and the Balkan states at close quarters. He declares that after searching vainly for an American picture in Venice and Trieste, he came to Rome and again finding no American productions being screened, he inquired of an exhibitor where he might find an American motion picture. "The exhibitor informed me," says Mr. Xydias, "that American films were being boycotted in Italy and could not be found on the screen anywhere. When I inquired the reason for the boycott, the exhibitor told me he did not know why.

"In the Balkan states," continued Mr. Xydias, "the people want American pictures. The exhibitors are anxious to secure American supplies. This demand, however, is being but poorly met. Moreover, American selling abroad, must realize that in Europe they will not receive the same big prices for their hits that they receive here. That is one mistake that has been frequently made."

Two Characters Played by the Originals

The current William D. Taylor production for Paramount Artaert is, which is temporarily titled "The Boy," will present two characters played by the persons who were responsible for their creation in the story. These two characters are Judge Ben B. Lindsey of Denver and his wife. The author of the story is Julia Crawford Ivers. The story centers around an American boy—one who is saved from the evil influences of bad companionship and crime-breeding surroundings and who becomes a useful member of society.

Judge Lindsey, founder of the Juvenile Court of Denver, is regarded as one of the foremost authorities on the problems of the American boy reared in evil environment. Mrs. Ivers gave the character of the Judge and his helpfulness in the story, and following negotiations, the Judge and Mrs. Lindsey at Mrs. Ivers' urging agreed to "play themselves" in the cast.

E. R. Pearson Completes Tour

AFTER a tour of three weeks during which he visited the principal key cities of the central part of the country, Mr. E. R. Pearson, director of exchanges of the Exchange, Inc., returned to the Home Office. Filled with enthusiasm for future prospects and deeply impressed by the evidence everywhere displayed of the determination of exhibitors to prevent threatened coercive competition. The Chicago Meeting of Independents Exhibitors has re-iterated to a literal tornado of discussion, he states, and everywhere he went the hope was expressed that something in the way of effective protest would be arranged.

Mr. Pearson points out that economic conditions of the moment are decidedly in favor of the exhibitors, and most of them realize this fact. They are enjoying box-office receipts such as they never had before, and the building situation and, more particularly, the chances that they have of loans, is keeping down the construction of theatres to a minimum. Competition is, therefore, avoided except where the producer-distributor controlled competition. The reason for this sort of competition, according to Mr. Pearson, is, to control the market so as to shut out competing producers from the opportunities of production and exploitation.

Mr. Callaghan is the leader of the Independent Exhibitors who seem to have lost the hurricane. Mr. Pearson said that the hopes of a great deal seemed to be earnest hopes that something might come of this movement for their cooperation would really voice an effective protest against what they term the coercion by threatened competition.

"One very hopeful sign is noted in the fact that smaller town exhibitors are rapidly getting away from the notion that he must play only the pictures that get big exploitation. In the key cities as he finds out that many such key city theatres are producer or distributor-controlled and would not, of course, exploit a competitive picture no matter how meritorious."

There are still great over 15,000 independent exhibitors, so many of whom are giving the independent producer and distributor splendid support. Old good productions should be available. Every exhibitor stood exceptionally pleased by Pearson's elaborate plans to send whatever was necessary in promoting productions for its program that would meet such requirements. Among which, together with the Associated Exhibitors' ambitious plans and arrangements, men are no longer dependent source of independent open market supply.

Throughout the entire central part of the country exhibitors are enjoying unparalleled box office receipts.

"Every branch visited found the entire sales force in high glee at the splendid business they were enjoying, enjoying, practically all having broken all previous records in March and some again in April. And with the wonderful subjects being released by the studios, certainly in a combination of record-breaking months which, under Pahe's commission and bonus plan, are of especial interest to its entire field forces."

"Among the recent features that seemed to find a special favor in that section were the 'Fights in Canada,' 'Other Men's Shoes,' 'The Deadlier Sex,' 'Passers By,' 'My Husband's Other Wife,' 'Simple Souls,' 'Sherry' and 'Dollar for Dollar.'"

A. J. Callaghan Seeking Stories

ANDREW J. CALLAGHAN arrived in New York City this week for an indefinite period which he will devote to the purchase of additional big pictures for the Exchange. Mr. Callaghan arrived at the Nationality Shop, the producer of Dickens classic, had been definitely decided upon for future screening by Miss Love, and that a director of prominence was being promised for to undertake supervision of the picture.

Mr. Callaghan came on to New York from Chicago where he conferred with the group of capitalists, who are sponsoring the organization of which he is the head. Mr. Callaghan is the first results of Miss Love's initial production, "The Midlanders," which is being adapted from the famous novel by Charles Tenney Jackson under the direction of Ida May Park and Joseph De Grasse, that Mr. Callaghan and his associates are reiterating their original an- of having this youthful star to the limit in every detail of production.

With this in view, Mr. Callaghan remains in New York until he has accumulated a sufficient number of well-known novels and plays to undertake the needs of the immediate future. Such has been the satisfaction of Directors Ida May Park and Joseph De Grasse and the Callaghan organization Arrives in New York to Buy Vehicles for His Star "Says Callaghan," Mr. Pearson, "who is one of the rare film producers," says that, "nothing could come of this movement for theirs cooperation would really voice an effective protest against what they term the coercion by threatened competition.

"One very hopeful sign is noted in the fact that smaller town exhibitors are rapidly getting away from the notion that he must play only the pictures that get big exploitation. In the key cities as he finds out that many such key city theatres are producer or distributor-controlled and would not, of course, exploit a competitive picture no matter how meritorious."

Morey in Outdoor Story
Vitagraph Star Finishing “The Gauntlet,” a Story of the Hills

Harry T. Morey’s forthcoming Vitagraph feature will be called “The Gauntlet.” The star and his supporting company returns from the mountains of Tennessee where the exteriors were filmed and now has gone with his director, Edwin Hollywood, to San Francisco, where the picture will be completed.

“The Gauntlet” is based on a magazine story by Lillian Bennett-Thompson and George Hubbard, and was put into picture form by Fred Schaefer. Roberta Valentin, who appeared with Mr. Morey in “The Sea Rider” has the leading feminine role. The locale is among the mountainers and moonshiners of the Tennessee mountains. In selecting “The Gauntlet” for Mr. Morey, Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, is fulfilling his promise to provide the star with outdoor life so far as possible. Mr. Morey recently completed “The Sea Rider,” a rugged story of mountain life on the deep and previously to that he was seen in two pictures dealing with mountain life. Edwin Hollywood directed all these features.

“The Gauntlet” presents Mr. Morey in just the type in which he is seen at his best—a stalwart, manly, city-bred chap, surrounded by rugged, hot-tempered mountainers.

Ready for “Tarzan” Picture
Director Harry Ravier Has Everything Set for Beginning Production

Joe Brandt, director general of the National Film Corporation of America, who was to have left for the Coast this week, has postponed his trip indefinitely and will remain in the East temporarily to make preliminary arrangements for the marketing of the new National serial, “The Son of Tarzan,” on which that company is about to start production.

While no cast has as yet been announced for this picture, Director Harry Ravier and Photo Dramatist Roy Somville have everything in readiness for the filming of the first three episodes, and it is likely that the leading man will be selected this week.

Joe Brandt is very emphatic in his promises of big things for this serial. “I want everyone to know,” says Brandt, “that they may expect something very unusual in photoplay art when this picture comes to market. There is no gaining the popularity of Edgar Rice Burroughs’ works. The two previous Tarzan pictures which National filmed, met with unparalleled popularity, I am confident that ‘The Son of Tarzan’ is going to break all serial records.

“We have many surprises to spring as the story offers exceptional possibilities for a serial. Ravier is enthused with his work and promises he is going to show the industry something new in serial production. Somville has injected into its continuity a prologue and a modern tale which will surprise anything that has ever been done in chapter-pictures.

“National will concentrate every available resource to make this their greatest effort to date. ‘The Son of Tarzan’ will be ready for distribution in the early fall. When it is released, I can promise that it will be peerless among serials.”

Zasu Pitt’s Next Due Soon
“The Heart of Twenty” Presents Star in Pleasing Role, Is Report

EXHIBITORS will be interested in the Robertson-Cole announcement that Eulalie Breslin is the Robertson-Cole production of “The Heart of Twenty,” featuring Zasu Pitts, will be released for distribution soon. The picture is one in which Miss Pitts is featured will be welcomed by the trade, it is expected, because of the position the studio has taken over its productions, and the outcome of these productions has come to hold.

The following statement has been issued by Robertson-Cole in connection with “The Heart of Twenty”:

“Without reaching the unnatural effects made by some other pictures, which ever so sentiment and what might be termed ‘sweetness’, Brentwood productions for Robertson-Cole have come to represent a new optimism, which is decidedly agreeable to audiences in these days of economic stress; and a definite financial value to the exhibitor, who finds them eagerly awaited.”

“The Heart of Twenty,” the second of a series of four in which Miss Pitts will be directed by Harry Kolker, although following somewhat the lines laid down by Miss Pitts’ last success, “Bright Skies,” deals with an entirely new theme.

Miss Pitts is given sufficient support by a cast which includes leading man Tom Gallery, who can be opposed by Miss Pitts in “Bright Skies.” Others in the cast include such performers as Jack Patke, Percy Laidlaw, Hugh Saxon, Aileen Manning and Pearl Lindner.

“The Heart of Twenty” is one of those delightful characterizations of a cross-section of American life, which Robertson-Cole, “which recalls vividly one’s youth, were once lucky enough to have been reared in a small town. At this quaint, unaffected girl, who finds love and contentment through her desire to bring happiness to others, Miss Pitts scores another success.”

“Suds” Has Splendid Cast
Well Known Players Surround Mary Pickford in New Picture

Mary Pickford, in her forthcoming production for United Artists, “Suds,” has surrounded herself with a cast of unusual talent and spared no time or money in securing players exactly suited to the roles.

Prominent in her support is Jane Rose, long time one of the leading members of Sarah Bernhardt’s company in Paris and who, since the blockade of war, has appeared in French productions and films and more recently came to California to appear in the silent art.

The principal lead is Albert Austin, an English comedian of note, who for the past four years has been predominant in all of Charlie Chaplin’s productions, and was loaned by the world famous company to Miss Pickford for this production.

Harold Goodwin, who scored such a success in support of Miss Pickford in “The Heart of the Hills,” is also seen in “Suds” and Nadine Montgomery, the English character actress who has played in a number of Eastern productions, but who more recently has appeared at the Little Theatre in Los Angeles, is given a starring role.

The scenario of “Suds” was adapted from Charles Frohman’s production of Frederick Fenn and Richard Pryce’s play, “Op o’ Me Thumb,” in which Maude Adams scored such a triumph. The production was made under the direction of Jack Dillon and Charles Roder presides over the camera.

Flying A” Race Ends
Results in Many New Bookings; Winners to Be Announced Soon

The “S. S. Hutchinson Memorial” of the American Film Company comes to a glorious close on April 30th. The last few days, valuable as a final opportunity to make a big record, one winner in the contest, enjoyed the climax of a month of victory. It will take at least two weeks, says C. A. Libson, general sales manager, “to find out just how each salesman stands and decide who the winners are.”

Each week has superseded the one preceding it with the result that the American has been booked in the cumulative enthusiasm in big results of the $10,000 prize.

“Exhibitors who were not on our books before,” says S. S. Hutchin-son, president of the “Flying A,” “have been doing all of our special contests, beginning with “Six Feet Four” and going right through the deals to the last feature included in the contest. This is given our artists, the Piece of Silver.” We have been listing any number of new theatres, Richard Pryce’s plan “Op o’ Me Thumb,” which I did not know were on the map. It all goes to show the universal appeal the movies are making, and the wide range of “Flying A” subjects and produces is sure a welcome for them in all localities.”

"FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL"
The Picturization of Marah Ellis Ryan's Magnificent Love Story of Old California

Distributed by EQUITY PICTURES
EVERY theatre in the land, particularly every first run theatre, knows oftimes before a picture is released, whether it is a big winner or not.

There is an unspoken "something" in the trade that prompts first run theatres to book and play such a picture without even reading a line of advertising or without any selling persuasion on the part of the Producers.

Such was "Eyes of Youth," Such also was "The Forbidden Woman" and such also is "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL," unquestionably Clara Kimball Young's most elaborate production to date.

At Grauman's magnificent Rialto Theatre in Los Angeles, where none but one certain Producer's pictures have ever been played, the rule was broken for the first time by the presentation of Clara Kimball Young in "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL."

In Los Angeles, the very heart of the industry, "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL" was hailed by press, public, and critics as the picture DE LUXE, exactly as it will be hailed in every city, town, village and hamlet in the land. Just as a fine painting by a master needs no eulogy so neither does Clara Kimball Young in "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL" need descriptive adjectives. One needs but to witness an exhibition to be impressed with the character of this production.

In keeping with the character of the picture we have produced a press and advertising brochure that surpasses in practical helps and exploitation possibilities, anything ever prepared. A copy of this book will be forwarded on request to any theatre by any Equity Franchise Holder. Secure a copy of this wonderful book and arrange your playing engagement—NOW— thru your nearest Equity Franchise Holder.

Blondes of Many Types Besiege Eddie Polo

Eddie Polo, the Universal serial star, having completed his latest serial, "The Vanishing Daggers," arrived in New York recently and immediately started a search for a young woman to pose as the heroine of his next picture. He advertised in the dailies, specifying that only ladies of the blonde type would qualify. No motion picture experience was necessary. Mr. Polo has since been swamped by applicants. A convention of blondes was called for session recently in the grand ball room of the Hotel Majestic. Polo selected several and put the tests of them. He has not decided which one he will choose. Meanwhile, the siege continues. In person, by telegram and by letter, aspirants for screen honors—some genuine blondes, others not so genuine—besiege Mr. Polo until that gentleman becomes blonde-shy, even on the street.

J. Warren Kerrigan Has Competent Support

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation points out as one of the strong features of the new Kerrigan starring vehicles, "No. 99," the cast which supports the star. Eri Brunette, who played opposite J. Warren Kerrigan in "The Luck of the Irish," again adds another victory to her score as the charming little debutante. Lila Leslie, a former Bebeo actress, has the part of a wealthy widow out to obtain a husband by fair means or foul. Emmett Krig, John Steppling and Thomas Gomez are seen in strong character roles: William W. Mong gives a masterful performance as "Jake Treb," the crafty Czar of the underworld, and Charles Arling is artistically villainous as the perilous political graftor.

"The Dangerous Talent" Proving Success

According to a statement of the American Film Company, "The Dangerous Talent" is proving to be an unusual success and an object of much favorable comment from various sources. The emotional acting of the star, Margaret Fizer, has come in for a special round of praise according to the American Film's report, which submits the following verdicts for attention:

"A real picture," says the Chicago exhibitor. "A model of dramatic construction," writes the critic; "A money maker" affirms the Flying A producers of "The Dangerous Talent." "The Golden Gift" was the original name of the novel by Daniel F. Whitembough, and the name will remain in line with the returns on it.

Opera Star Sees "Huck Finn" in Atlanta

During Caruso's recent visit to Atlanta, where the Metropolitan Opera Company had its opening, the star, in his impersonation of the immortal story, "Huckleberry Finn," was being shown in pictures.

Power Takes Over Big Building

Projection Concern Takes Over Building in New York

The New York Sun, Tribune and other metropolitan dailies accorded considerable attention during the past week to the new building of the Nicholas Power Company signed by President Earl, was described by the New York Press as "one of the largest ever marking in the Old Wharf." Involved as it does a sum amounting to $1,200,000, the newspapers also spoke of the Nicholas Power Company as one of the large manufacturing concerns of this country.

The "Wharf" district, one of the oldest and most important business sections in New York is close to the City Hall, Brooklyn Bridge, Woolworth Building, Municipal Building and other noted civic and commercial structures. Nearby are the great buildings and publications. Most important, however, for the needs of the Nicholas Power Company is the proximity of the "Wharf" district to the Maiden Lane manufacturing jewelers and to the hundreds of machine, tool and pattern making shops which dot this locality. It is a veritable Mecca in New York for high grade toolmakers, machinists and other skilled metal workers of the kind required by the Power Company to manufacture the complicated and delicate mechanism of the Power's projector.

The building just taken over by the Nicholas Power Company will be used for its executive offices and more important manufacturing departments. Two other buildings in the vicinity are also used by this company for storage and only spaces. The building just leased will be the Power's plant. The Nicholas Power Company is seriously considering erecting its own factory in one of the outlying portions of the city, but its present location is so excellent, for some of the reasons already mentioned, the building situation is so sound and the demand for the Power's product so great, it was decided it would be unwise to risk the possibility of delay and inconvenience to exhibitors by making a change at this time. It may be of interest to many in the film industry to learn that it was estimated it would cost over $75,000 to move the machinery of the Nicholas Power Company.

The vast array of machinery in the Power's plant is the development of the little business started twenty years ago by Mr. Polo on Nassau street—a shop started to manufacture a toy incited to satisfy the passing whim and curiosity of a small and easily pleased public. That "whim," has not yet passed and the "curiosity" grows every month. The manufacturer of the "toy" finds it has become a fair rival of the printing press and that American projectors are in demand in every part of the civilized world. In the great capitals and in many of the most remote places on all continents, Power's projectors will be found helping to entertain and educate the peoples of those far lands. The export business of the Nicholas Power Company was an early development and it is stated that "over 50 per cent of the Cinemas in Great Britain are equipped with Power's."
Appeal of "Humoresque"

The Pathos, Humor and Humaneness of Story Attracted Its Director

In a statement just issued from the offices of the Cosmopolitan Productions, the House responds to the favorable criticism which has greeted the first showing of the "Humoresque," and endeavors to place credit where credit is due. His statement follows:

"A great source of personal gratification for me have so kindly received "Humoresque," my first subject for Cosmopolitan Productions, but I felt that I was very fortunate in having the proper materials and conditions to work with and under, and I wish therefore to take this opportunity to give credit where credit is due and to explain a few things concerning "Humoresque" and its filming.

"It came to me when I first read Fannie Hurst's story in Cosmopolitan, and I decided that this was the story I had been looking for ever since I became a director. To me it represented an opportunity to portray all of human expression—the expression of mother love which is the most dramatic, that of the beautiful sensitive woman, and the most beautiful of all emotional themes. I saw immediately that "Humoresque" was a story of human interest, of human experiences, of human dramas, and I felt that I had never been more inspired."

"While I am personally much gratified to have been the director of "Humoresque," at the same time I feel that the result achieved could not have been accomplished without the splendid cooperation of the entire Cosmopolitan Productions organization."

"School Days" at Capitol

Larry Semon Comedy Shown at Famous Theatre in New York

"School Days," the newest Vitagraph-Larry Semon comedy, was shown for the first time at New York's Capitol Theatre, on May 9th. Managing Director Bowes booked it for a full week.

The comedy was screened for the Capitol Theatre staff prior to the public showing and as a result of the impression created, it received prominent space and position on the 24-sheet stand adjoining the Capitol attractions for the week of May 9th. It was the only comedy on the Capitol bill for that week.

Ben H. Atwell, director of publicity for the Capitol, made some special arrangements in connection with the showing of this comedy. He sent out personal invitations to every member of the staffs of the New York Evening Sun, the New York Telegram and the New York Telegraph, the three local newspapers on which Larry Semon has been a daily feature for many years. The evening before the showing of "School Days," the members of the Evening Telegram staff were present, but as several of the staffs in the "School Days" actually showed Larry in the act of cartooning, Mr. Atwell gathered in all the boys who remembered the comedian when he used to call at their office. He called this special occasion "Larry Semon Fellowship Night."

Goldwyn Buys Old Play

"The Concert," Ten Year Old Comedy, Purchased for Picturization

With the purchase of "The Concert," the comedy of which Leo Driehtrichstein made a tremendous success some years ago, the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation adds another well known play to its list of future productions. Recently "The Great Lover" was purchased for picturization by this company, and the addition of the former Driehtrichstein success to the list of coming Goldwyn pictures is indicative of the kind of comedy that this company seeks to present on the screen.

"The Concert," in its play form, was an adaptation by Leo Driehtrichstein from the German version of Herman Bahr. It was produced at the Belasco Theatre on October 4, 1910, and, after running more than a season in New York, played for several years on the road. The play has since been produced by many stock companies throughout the country.

An interesting sidelight on "The Concert" may be seen in the person of the original cast. Supporting the star were Janet Beecher, Jane Grey, Catherine Proctor, Nora Witherspoon and Alice L. Pollock, who has since become well known as a playwright. The men in the cast were William Morris and John W. Cope.

In presenting "The Concert" on the screen much of the exposition carried in the dialogue of the play may be visualized, and the delightful lines related by the characters presented as comic situations. The Goldwyn company intends to present "The Concert" with as fine an east as can be assembled, and no means will be spared to give the play an excellent interpretation as a motion picture.

Reels That Will Endure

Exploits of Sea-Raider Moewe Are Graphically Shown in Film Series

The news reels, depicting the exploits of the German sea-raider, Moewe, which are issued by the International Film Service and released through the exchanges of the Universal Manufacturing Company, are destined to live as one of the greatest achievements in the annals of the motion picture industry. The story that the camera caught from the deck of the sea-vill as ship after ship was sent to the bottom of the ocean and which is now unfolded on the screen is one that stands unequaled for sensational situations and thrilling incidents. And the effect is only augmented, when one realizes that some of these scenes are not merely rehearsed bits of play-acting but graphic records of actual occurrences.

As striking as are the scenes of the removal of passengers from sinking vessels, they are merely incidental to the astounding main scenes that unroll before the eyes. In one instance a torpedo is discharged. For a moment there is a thrilling suspense as the missile of death travels through the waves directly towards a huge steamship. But a few hundred yards away, then follows a terrific explosion as the torpedo reaches its mark, and the monster vessel turns over on its side, and in an unbelievably short time disappears from sight, leaving only a ribbon on the surface of the sea.

Dooley’s Five-Reeler Is Finished, Says Radin

Johnnie Dooley's newest creation, "Skinning Skinners," a five-act farce comedy, has been completed and is ready for immediate release to state right buyers of the country through Radin Pictures, which company controls the world's distribution rights of the Dooley Comedies. Dooley made his bow to screen fans some little time ago in a series of two-reel comedies and the instant success of these laugh producers, due to the personal efforts of the Ziegfeld Star and the instant demand for a feature for longer length, prompted his managers to make the five part feature just completed.
